II. The true Shepherd (vs. 11-16.) 11. The Lord God—Jehovah himself speaks and declares himself to be the Shepherd of Israel. Will both search my sheep, and seek them out—He promises to make a thorough and successful search for his sheep. Although the people of Judah had been scattered, some being in captivity, others in their own land, the Lord would find them and gather them under his care. 12. Scattered—The figure is of a flock of sheep that has been broken up by some attack or sudden fear, and the shepherd comes to the sheep, giving confidence and gathering them together. In the cloudy and dark day—It was a dark day for the nation when, through the wickedness of the rulers, enemies were providentially permitted to attack and overcome it and take the people into captivity. 13. I will bring them out from the people—The Lord gives a definite promise of deliverance from captivity. Will bring them to their own land—Although a heathen nation then had possession of the land of Judah, it was the heritage of God's people, and they would yet occupy it. They would be at home on its mountains and by its rivers, for which they were longing in their captivity. 14 A good picture—The language here is strikingly like that of Psa. 23. "A good pasture" signifies plenty. High mountains of Israel—To Jewish exiles in Babylon these words of the prophet were like sweetest music. They were words of home. Their fold—The sheepfold is a place of security and rest. 15. Cause them to lie down—Sheep lie down when they have, for the time being, satisfied their hunger and when they feel secure. 16. I will seek that which was lost—Compare this verse with v. 4. The true Shepherd's treatment of his flock is the reverse of that given by the evil shepherds. Will destroy the fat and the strong—Those of Israel who would become rich and powerful through oppressing others of their people would be destroyed. Jehovah would carefully safeguard the rights of all his people. I will feed them with judgment—The true Shepherd would act constantly in accordance with equity and justice in contrast to the course pursued by the unfaithful shepherds.

III. Oppressors rebuked (vs. 17-22). Not only shall the cruel shepherds be removed and the flock delivered out of their hands and fed by God himself, but the injuries inflicted by members of the flock on one another shall no more prevail. The strong shall no more push the weak or drive them from the good pasture.—Davidson. The Lord would judge between the weak and the strong. Pursuing the figure of the flock, the prophet charges the strong with selfishness and cruelty. They have fed in good pastures and trodden down what they could not eat and left it for the weak. They have drunk what they wished from the waters and have stirred up the mud in it with their feet, and left it for the weak ones to drink. This is indeed a striking picture of greediness.

IV. Messiah's reign (vs. 23-31). 23. One shepherd over them—instead of being a succession of rulers, there shall be one Shepherd whose leadership shall be forever. The prophet breaks away from the thought of the return to Judah of the captives in Babylon, and declares the glories of Messiah's sway over the world. Shall feed them—The important task of the shepherd is to see that his sheep are well supplied with food. My servant David—Messiah is frequently spoken of under this name. The king of greatest prominence in all the list of Israel's rulers was David, and his name is employed to designate the eternal King. Shall be their shepherd—David was a shepherd in early life and cared for his father's sheep; later he was the shepherd of Israel and cared for his Father's flock, God's chosen people; and still later the Good Shepherd, here called David, would shepherd for his Father the sheep of his pasture. 24. I the Lord have spoken it—The word is fixed and true. 25. A covenant of peace—The blessings to be enjoyed under the reign of Christ are strikingly expressed in this verse. The covenant of peace would be a guaranty of protection from all evil. Jesus said to his followers that he would give to them his peace. To those who love God, all things work together for good. Dwell safely—While God protects us, nothing can do us harm. Wilderness—Uninhabited regions. Woods—Wilds. Evil beasts would be removed from the land and their former haunts would become safe places for sleeping. Under Christ's reign there would be safety, restfulness and plenty. 26. Them—God's people. Places round about my hill—God's people and Zion, God's hill, were to bring great blessings, not only to themselves, but also to all nations. There shall be showers of blessing—The people of Palestine appreciate a plentiful supply of water, since from April to October no rain falls there. No stronger figure could be used to express the blessedness of Christ's kingdom. 27. Earth shall yield her increase—This refers primarily to the condition of the Jews and their land when they should return from the Babylonish captivity, but spiritually to the condition of those who own Messiah's sway. There is still a glorious future for Palestine and the Jewish people. Those that served themselves of them—"Those that made bondmen of them."—R. V. 28-31. Jehovah would be their God and they would be his people.

Questions.—Who was Ezekiel? When was he taken to Babylon as a captive? Where did he live in Babylon? When did he write his prophecy? What is the style and character of his writings? Of what wrongs does he accuse the shepherds of Israel? Who did he say would be Israel's shepherd? How would his work differ from that of the other shepherds? What blessings would attend his coming and reign?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—A lost nation restored.

I. From its bitter oppressions.

II. By the Great Shepherd's power.

I. From its bitter oppressions. In this chapter the shepherds of Israel are called to account as having been accessory to the ruin of Israel by their neglect of duty. After the complete destruction of Jerusalem it was very seasonable to inquire as to the causes of it. The rulers of Israel lacked the qualifications of shepherds. They took no care for the warfare of those committed to their charge. Their self-indulgence had led them to neglect to feed the flock. They had taken the lives of their subjects in order to appropriate to themselves their possessions. It was characteristic of many of the kings of Israel and Judah, amid the increasing distress and misery of the people, to exact more and more upon themselves. No care was taken for the instruction of the ignorant, no warning for the unruly, no comfort for the feeble minded. The office of the shepherd was service and not lordship. Having denounced the wicked shepherds of Israel, the prophet was directed to intimate God's merciful intentions toward the scattered flock. Primarily, this referred to the restoration of the Jews from captivity, and their prosperous reestablishment in their own land. It was typical of the good Shepherd's tender care of the souls of his people and kindness to his church in every age to the end of the world. Those who directed public affairs as well as the people had their transgressions shown them. In a peculiar sense the Israelites were brethren, a people highly privileged, bound to the discharge of peculiar and very important duties. Notwithstanding all this, they had departed grievously from the Lord and brought great abominations. It had gone ill with the flock, Israel, when the shepherds scattered them by ruling them with force.

II. By the great Shepherd's power. The symbolisms of the Bible form one of its most interesting features. God calls his church his flock, a community which he has himself formed and over which he watches. He knows the inward nature of men as well as their outward conduct. The blessing which he gives includes protection from evil, enjoyment of good, peace and prosperity. His "showers of blessing" are commensurate with the existing need. He directed the phophet to speak tenderly to the flock, to assure them of mercy in store and to give them the promise of the Messiah. The gospel's glorious history of the restoration of the wanderers, was included in the prophet's message. The Lord engaged effectually to defend his flock in the days of the promised Messiah so that his sheep might dwell safely and rest comfortably, even in the most perilous places. When the Jewish nation was under the chastisement of famine or scarcity, such judgment turned to their reproach among the heathen because the fruitfulness of Canaan was widely kown. Prejudice, envy, malice, hate, unbelief, worldly authority and its allurements were brought forward to destroy the Messiah, whether he was on the sea, or on a mountain apart, whether at a marriage feast or a burial, whether surrounded by his beloved desciples only or by the inquisitive, eager multitude, whether at home with his parents or in the house of Martha and Mary or on the Mount of Olives or even when hanging as a Sacrifice upon the cross, Jesus surpassed all others in his wonderful saying and teachings. He will judge between the church of God and its enemies, the genuine professors of religion and its opposers. He will distinguish between the hypocrites and sincere believers. The Bible, which throws the clearest light on man's weakness and sin, exalts him above the rest of creation as capable by grace of hearing God's voice and of loving and serving him. Man never appears so great and noble as when seen in the light of eternal love. God's blessing and presence are granted when the hearts of men are sighing for him. He breaks the bands of their yoke and teaches them that he himself is Lord. Thus those on whom the blessing falls are made a means of blessing to others.—T. R. A.

POINTERS ABOUT PLOWING---HOW AND WHEN TO DO IT

Some Principles of Soil Tillage---Types of Furrows---The Importance of Plowing

To those who have watched the trend of agricultural progress during the past few decades, many changes will have been noticed in the methods and ideas with regard to farm practices. The ever increasing scarcity of labor has resulted in the advent of much machinery which has decreased the amount of hand labor necessary on the farm, and it is now possible to perform many operations with the aid of horse power and machinery that were originally done by man power.

In no other phase of agricultural practice have there been greater changes than in the tillage of the soil. Apart from any newly acquired knowledge that has resulted in different methods being followed, many new implements have been devised that will accomplish the objects sought more efficiently and at a smaller cost than was originally possible; larger machines making use of a greater number of horses per man have been introduced, and in some cases whole operations are entirely omitted that were at one time considered necessary.

Similarly radical changes have taken place in the ideas and practices with regard to that all important tillage operation, "plowing." The narrow, highly turned, comby furrow of twenty-five years ago has given place to a broader, heavier, more squarely turned furrow. Gang plows have replaced single furrowed ones, and the old iron plow that put on a toppy finish with a high polish is rarely seen except at occasional plowing matches. In some cases it has been possible to dispense with plowing altogether, it being replaced with deep surface tillage with heavy cultivators and disc harrows. These changes have been necessary and desirable on account of the new conditions in which we find ourselves placed, but, in spite of this, plowing is still the basic operation of all cultivation. Thorough and deep surface tillage may occasionally replace plowing, but cannot displace it altogether, and makes it still more important that when done, plowing must be well done.

Plowing is slow and expensive, and this, together with the scarcity of labor, has brought about a far too prevalent idea that time spent on good plowing is not profitably employed. This has resulted in a great deal of land being merely surface scratched instead of properly plowed. Good plowing is as essential to-day as it every was. We may get along with fewer plowings on certain soils and under some conditions, perhaps yet to be found out. We may be able to accomplish it more quickly by turning a different type of furrow and by the use of greater power, and it may be that when we understand more fully the cultural requirements of different soils our ideas as to what constitutes good plowing may change further, but as long as the eradication of weeds and the economical preparation of a good seed bed are prime considerations, good plowing will hold first place in the operations of tillage.

The fundamental object of tillage is to furnish a suitable home for the seed to germinate, for the plant to grow and produce a crop. This object is accomplished by the plow through the pulverization of the soil, the killing of weeds, the aeration of the soil and by the improvement of its physical condition generally.

Three distinct types of furrow can be used on the farm to good advantage, depending on the objects sought and upon the conditions desired. These are: the flat furrow, lap furrow and the rolling furrow. Each is suited to a particular purpose.

In flat plowing the furrow slice is cut broad and comparatively shallow, and when turned, it lies practically inverted on the sole furrow of the preceding one. This results in an absence of open spaces below and between the furrows, and on that account this type of furrow is particularly adapted to the rapid decomposition of the sod. It is therefore employed when meadows are broken up immediately after haying, with a view to ridding the land of grass and weeds preparatory to seeding it to hoed crop the following year. When this style of furrow is used, the land requires to be firmed, either with a roller or soil packer. This ensures that the furrow slice is brought into still closer contact with the subsurface soil and makes conditions favorable for the rise of moisture, which, together with the heat, results in a rapidly decomposing sod. This rolling or packing also firms the soil so that there is less danger of the sod being torn up in the subsequent cultivation.

These cultivations should be light at first, followed by deeper ones and should be made lengthwise of the lands. Cross cultivation at this time may look to be effective, but it tears up the sod, thus preventing it from decomposing and furthermore makes the thorough eradication of grass and weeds a very difficult task and, therefore, an expensive one. Land handled in this manner should be plowed or ribbed up in the fall, especially if manure has been applied as when intended for roots. The primary object when this style of furrow is used, is to kill weeds, to decompose the sod, and to make conditions favorable for the retention of moisture.

Lap furrow plowing differs essentially from flat furrow plowing, in that the furrow slice is cut deep and comparatively narrow, and when turned, the furrow is set up on edge and overlaps the previous one. This is the commonest type of plowing on the farm and is necessary in the case of fall plowing where a single plowing is used. The object in this case is entirely different from where flat furrow plowing is practised, for while the latter is used with a view to decomposing the sod and of killing weeds by further cultivation, the former is intended to do as much of the preparation as possible with one operation. There is little greater pulverizing action in the process of plowing, but the furrow slice is left in such a position as to expose the greatest amount of surface and to be thus most readily acted upon by the frost. Frost is a most efficient pulverizer, and in this respect plays a very important part in preparing the seed bed. This is particularly true on heavy clay soils that are not properly drained. No implement or method of tillage will do as much to prepare such soils for receiving the seed as will their thorough exposure to frost. The heavier and more poorly drained a soil is, the greater need is there for the pulverizing action of the frost and, consequently, under these conditions the more extreme should the lap be.

The fact that the furrows are set up in this type of plowing makes it possible for large air spaces to occur below the furrow slice, which cause the land to warm up and dry out earlier in the spring without incurring the danger of the soil running, baking and cracking. This danger often results in serious injury to the physical condition of the soil, especially in heavy clay types, when they are not properly managed. On account of these comparatively large air-spaces underneath the furrow, considerable work is required in the spring to firm the soil and to provide suitable moisture connections with the subsoil as well as to prevent too free a circulation of air through the soil. Unless this is done the crop is apt to suffer later on in the season through lack of moisture. This is particularly true in a dry season, where a partial crop failure often results unless this factor has been given attention. With the more extreme types of lap furrow, even greater care must be taken that the soil is properly firmed.

The lap furrow is also used in the spring in case it has not been possible to do the plowing in the fall. Here again the aims sought are quite different from those of fall plowing. In this case an attempt should be made to do as much of the pulverizing as possible, instead of getting it up in such a way as to allow the frost to do that work. For this purpose a different type of plow is desirable. One that has bolder and more abrupt curves with more overhang to the mouldboard, will accomplish the work more efficiently than will one having long easy lines. This plowing should be broader and more shallow (consequently with less lap) than is the case with the fall plowing, as the subsurface soil is colder and wetter than is the top soil. Moreover, deep plowing in the fall allows of more moisture being held and absorbed than would be the case if shallow plowing were practised, a factor which does not apply in spring plowing.

Soil that is plowed in the spring requires that even more attention be given towards firming it than is the case with the fall plowing. On account of the type of furrow used, the top soil is apt to be loose and open, and moreover it has not had the same opportunity of settling as is the case when the work has been done in the fall. At least two rollings or an equivalent amount of packing, followed by other tillage operations to fine the surface soil, are as a rule necessary before the land is in proper condition for seeding.

When long stubble, weeds or a green manure crop is to be turned under, the rolling furrow will prove the most effective. In this style of plowing the furrow is turned over in such a way as to cover the material as near completely as possible. It is accomplished by holding the plow at an angle, setting it to cut rather deeply and by putting some pressure on the handles. Such plowing results in the soil being so completely pulverized that no crest is left on the furrow slice. This style should not be used in the fall except on light soils, for on heavy land the pulverized soil would run together and bake. Followed by the packer and harrows it results in the optimum conditions for the decomposition of the material turned under and makes the land fit for further treatment very efficiently and in the shortest time possible.

Three distinct types of plowing can thus be used to advantage, depending on the time the work is done and the objects sought. Each is suited to its particular purpose. Shallow flat plowing is best suited to being used where sod land is broken up in July and August in preparation for a hoed crop the following year. Deep lap furrow plowing is most useful in fall plowing, so that the furrow slice may be exposed to the frost, while a less extreme lap, put up by a plow with bolder curves is best suited to spring plowing, and thirdly, the rolling furrow is suited best to plowing under long stubble, weeds or green manures.

SUNDAY AT HOME

THE OLD STORY.

Bold, confident, impetuous for the fray,
Unward I pressed—Ambition led the way,
Pointing to Honors group'd and glist'ning bright,
Whose beckoning whispered—"Scale the height!"

That's over now! I'm traveling Life's decline;
I lean upon an arm—they're guests of mine—
Contentment one is called. I rather guess
You know her sister's name—'tis Happiness.

—Frank Warren Hackett in New York Sun.

SEEK YE THE WORD.

Ye shall lay up these my words in your heart and in your soul, and bind them for a sign upon your hand, that they may be as frontlets between your eyes. This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein; for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success.

The law of his God is in his heart; none of his steps shall slide. By the word of thy lips I have kept me from the paths of the destroyer. Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against thee.

We have . . . a more sure word of prophecy; whereupon ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts. That we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have hope.

LAUGHTER.

(By the late Rev. M. T. Miller.)

When the child died there was laughter in heaven—laughter that the Adversary had lost a plaything and a possible victim. Oh, the laughter of heaven! How the waves rise, and roll and tumble; what convulsive catching of the breath and heaving of the sides; what mountains of mirth, and twinkling of the eyes, bubbles flowing from a fountain. Oh, the busy landing place, thousands upon thousands every month. Emigrants from earth—yes and migrants from God! Letters insufficiently addressed—returned to the dead letter office—and dumped on the shores of the blest, to be read by experts, translated, adorned, embossed, set in jewels in the panels of the palace. The admiration of angels, the recognition of the blemished maternal faculty. Mighty halo around the head of the Master!

Not the laughter of incredulity, of distrust, of doubt, like the beautiful Sarah, who laughed, and then denied it (womanlike). Not the laughter of the unclean, the emptiness on the face of folly, the crackling of the thorns under a pot. Not the smile, the grin, the titter of the uninstructed. But the solid face of the holy, reflecting the light of the Eternal, basking in the breath of the mountain side, where lessons of scorn and derision may be gathered concerning the base, the down-trodden, vassals of the God of this world, the Prince of the Power of the air, the Spirit that now works in the disobedient and unclean.

Laughter in Heaven because life's ultimate is reached. Oh, the requiem with shining tears. Oh, the heaving of the mother's breast heaving unto life!

"Let no tears to-day be shed;
Holy is this narrow bed.
Not salvation hardly won,
Not the meed of race well run,
But the pity of the Lord
Gives his child a full reward.
Christ, when this sad life is done,
Join us to this little one."

The prize without the conflict, the crown without the battle! Why not? It is His way! The chief end of man is to glorify God and enjoy Him forever. Half the human family die in childhood, perhaps more; Christ gets all these! Bought, paid for, claimed, bought back with a price!

Hear you the mighty chorus from infant voices? The chorus is of mightier volume than the sound of adult voices. Give me the pure timbrel of the child's holy mouth, and you can have the instruments of brass, and the blow of the organ.

Come along with your kodaks and take the tremor of these infant lips in the great Hallelujah.

SORROWFUL TREE.

In faroff Persia there grows a shrub which is called the sorrowful tree. Another name for this tree is the night jessamine or the sad tree. The reason why it is called the sad or sorrowful tree is because it blooms only at night.

When the first star appears in the sky the first bud opens on the wonderful tree. As the evening advances the buds open more rapidly until the tree is covered with a delicate bloom and it appears like one vast flower. The bloom is quite fragrant and the odor is like the perfume of the evening primrose. As the stars begin to grow dim and the dawn approaches the flowers begin to fade, and by the time the sun has risen not a flower can be found on the tree.

During the hours of daylight the tree appears to be withering as if it had been injured in some manner, but in reality it is simply regaining strength in order to put new blossoms on the following night.

This tree is held in high esteem by the natives of the country where it grows and is looked upon as a curiosity by florists throughout the world. When cut down these trees send up sprouts from the roots that will mature into a flowering tree in a very short time.—Apples of Gold.

Jewels On an Idol.

The jewels of an Indian idol must be worth stealing if many of those remarkably hideous images possesses such valuable head ornaments as one made for the idol Parthasathy, in the Triplicane temple in Madras. The ornament is worth some 50,000 rupees and is made of sovereign gold studded with diamonds, emeralds and rubies, the largest emerald being valued at 1,000 rupees and the biggest ruby and diamond at 300 rupees apiece.

"On December 31 I will quit smoking forever." "Forever? What a life!" "I think so, too."—Boston Transcript.

PUNCHINELLO.

A Memory of the Days When Harper's Weekly Was a Power.

In the days when Harper's Weekly was at the height of its popularity and influence it commanded the services of the foremost illustrators in America, including the cartoonists. Every once in awhile a group of these artists would become dissatisfied with the Harper parental control and would leave to establish an independent illustrated paper.

Having squandered their substance in riotous printing, these artists would come to themselves and return to the Harper home, where was bread enough and to spare. No fatted calf was killed on the return of such prodigals, but Henry Mills Alden, the veteran editor of Harper's Monthly Magazine, asserted that the house of Harper never held a grudge against any contributor, whether artist or writer who left to try other pastures. Such was the origin and such was the end of Punchinello, a comic cartoon weekly which first appeared in New York city on April 2, 1870.

In calling attention to the fact that the first number was dated the first day after All Fools' day, Punchinello remarked: "This is cheering, since thus it is manifest that Punchinello leaves all the fools and jesters behind and is therefore first in the race for the crown of comic laurel and the quiver of satiric shafts." During its short life—less than a year—it was entitled to that honor.—Cartoons Magazine.

A Quarter's Worth.

The kindly old squire was giving a little treat to the village school children. After tea he stepped onto the platform and announced with a beaming smile:

"Now I am going to perform certain actions, and you must guess what proverb they represent. The boy or girl who succeeds first will receive a quarter."

That did it. Instantly every eye was fixed on him.

First of all, the old gentleman lay down on the platform. Then one man came forward and tried in vain to lift him. Two others came to his aid, and between them they raised the squire, who was rather portly.

The actions were meant to represent the motto, "Union is strength." When they had finished the squire stepped forward and asked if any child had solved the puzzle.

At once a grubby hand shot up and an eager voice squeaked:

"Let sleeping dogs lie."—Pittsburgh Despatch.

Through Many Trials

"She answers "yes," and he enters hastily, looking around in some surprise, as he was almost certain he had heard voices.

"Are you all alone, Aunt Miriam?" he asks, quickly, and she answers, calmly and deliberately:

"Yes, quite alone; does thee want me?"

"Only to tell you—to show you—to tell you, I have had a message from my uncle," Dumaresq says, in a voice husky with excitement and emotion, holding out the yellow paper with shaking fingers; and Miriam Lilly reads it, taking it nearer to the light, and rereads, much as Dick Dumaresq had done, while her stern eyes glow, and her cold face softens and warms into almost beauty, so much surprise and pleasure, and a certain proud gratification is there in it, as she peruses the brief message.

From Francis Dumaresq,
Heneage Court,
Herefordshire.

To Richard Dumaresq, Portdreath,
Cornwall.

I have heard some news concerning you which I should wish to know was truth. Will my age and infirmities plead for me, and induce you to lay all your feelings aside and come to me at once?

"Richard! I am very glad!" Miriam Lilly says, in earnest tones of womanly sympathy. "The Lord be praised! I am rejoiced that his heart is turned to thee again! It was always a true heart and kind heart, beneath its outward sternness," she adds, warmly. "This is written kindly, lovingly to thee, as thy own father might have written."

"It is, indeed," Dumaresq echoes, looking at the magical bit of paper with dim eyes of grateful happiness; strangely so for him. He always wrote so curtly and expressed himself without the least softness or affectionateness. And alluding to his age and infirmities, too! a thing he could never endure people to do! To wring cheeks, whose ivory pallor has been replaced by burning crimson.

And then Dumaresq forgets himself—time, place, all things on earth—before those soft, shy accents, that hot, glowing flush, and those drooping eyelids.

"You don't rebuke me!" he whispers; and as the poor child turns away with a swift, frightened glance at him, he stoops over the piano and the little white hand resting there, and kisses it, and goes out of the room.

He hears Lionel calling out after him in terms of angry astonishment and reproach, but he does not heed him or delay his footsteps, and goes upstairs to his own room like a man in very truth intoxicated—smiling, flushed, giddy with delight, and vague, passionate hopes, and sits down to write a letter—a letter in answer to the one he has but just received, and he writes it as in less excited moments he never would have written.

The great, selfish passion has possessed his soul, and taught him how to regard those who would rob it of its natural rights.

His letter to his cousin is cold, is rebuking in tone, and, above all, is emphatic.

"Exile in a foreign land may present to you an easy, solvent of the riddle that puzzles you," he writes, sarcastically, "and you will be surprised, I dare say, that I am not equally pleased with yourself at the sagacious plan that would doom me to be a dead man before I die. I did not think—I confess—that you, too, were willing to blot me out of sight and memory. One never knows you see, the exact place one holds in their friends' affections"—he gets angrier as he writes, more determined, with strengthening suspicion, clearer perception of the character of his cousin and adopted brother than he has ever had yet.

"I can make enormous allowances for the present state of your mind," he goes on writing, and, having reached the bottom of the fourth page of his letter without flinching, he, of course, begins to write [illegible] much. There are not many people to whom one ought to write a letter more than four pages in length.

"'Mad with love and misery,' you describe yourself as being, but you must recollect you are not the only one who may be 'mad with love and misery.' It is not a happy state to be in; perhaps I can comprehend it even better than you can, although even I cannot comprehend it in connection with the 'ambitious, high-bred beauty' who desires—paramount to you and love, and your heirship to a handsome fortune—the gilding of a title as a necessary qualification for the bestowal of her favor. No, on my honor, I cannot comprehend it, perhaps because I 'in this stormy gulf have found a pearl;' in this wilderness have found a little white dove whom I would give the world if it were mine, give it gladly to be able to take to my bosom for life to cherish and treasure neither ambitious nor beautiful—as most people consider beauty—but high bred, pure and fair, as the pearl or the spotless dove I have compared her to. Perhaps you can guess where I have found her, and why I sometimes scarcely know whether to bless or curse the hour that brought me to Portdreath. Do you remember the day I came, and you scoffed at me for my indifference on the score of the members of the family I was about to enter?

"I thought my lowly position would have saved me effectually from all such sweet madness. I was fool enough to think, because I was nearly thirty years of age, and her heart whole, that the time would never come when I would barter my best days of life for a kiss.

"I have no hopes, situated as I am now. I cannot, I dare not, for very shame's sake, assume the lover where I act the servant. You were right—very right when you warned me against placing myself in such a false position, and I was wrong, bitterly wrong, when I took so fatal a step.

"I regret it now so bitterly, so dreadfully, so desperately, that I mean to undo it if I spend my life for it—if it takes me so long that every hope shall have gone, but that I may one day take her hand in mine, and tell her, 'I loved you then as I love you now, but it was no more presumptuous or dishonorable then than it is now.'

"So you see, Richard—I hope you see—why I cling to the vain things you fancy I despise—cling to every shred or fragment of title, or dignity, or anything that could make me worthier of acceptance by my darling, the white dove, of a loving, loyal-hearted, gentle girl who would out pity and consideration for a gouty leg which would not be given to an aching heart,' he used to say."

"Thee sees how he is altered," Miriam Lilly says, smiling. "What is the good news he wants to have confirmed regarding thee, Richard?"

She asks the question very sedately and gravely, but there is the faintest glimmer of humor in her smile; and Dick takes heart of grace in his rapturous gladness and humiliation, and, throwing his big, muscular arms around the Quakeress' prim, solid, matronly figure, he kisses his astonished relative who, like Miss La Creevy, is secretly flattered and delighted at what she pretends to be regard as a great liberty.

"I hope I know—I think you do," he whispers. "Oh, Aunt Miriam, I am in a seventh heaven of delight! I can come back here again—not as I came this time—come back when I shall not be afraid to tell my love that I love her."

CHAPTER XL.

It is with a good deal of surprise, not unmixed with displeasure, that Sir Philip Trefusis receives the request—almost imperative in its urgency—which his son's tutor makes, to be allowed to absent himself for three or four days, to "visit a relative who is ill"—"an old man, his father's brother," Dumaresq says, and as he cannot refuse this plea with a good grace, Sir Philip consents ungraciously.

"As you have not held your situation quite six weeks yet, Mr. Dumaresq, it is very soon to ask for leave of absence," he says, stiffly; but as Dumaresq shows no signs of flinching, the baronet curtly bids him good-day, and turns away to his study.

"I will certainly return before the end of the week, Sir Philip," Dumaresq observes deprecatingly. "I would promise to return in two days, but the distance—down to Hereford—to—to where my uncle lives—quite down in one of the Midland counties is so far, and besides, I do not know that the old man is not dying."

"You have asked for four days, take four days, Mr. Dumaresq," Sir Philip interrupts coldly and haughtily.

The baronet belongs to a numerous class who cannot and will not believe in his servants and dependents having individual interests and rights utterly apart from employer or employment. So Dumaresq hurries upstairs to put a few articles into a handbag.

"For I don't suppose I shall be away more than three or four days unless," he thinks, with flushing face and glad eyes—"unless things are to be altered altogether; but otherwise, if I can but see the old man and say to him, 'Uncle, forgive me,' spend one day in going over the dear old place, and then bid him good-bye and come back with a light heart, knowing we are good friends, and that he will lend me a helping hand into some situation—something in a government office, or that—something with which I can maintain a position as a gentleman, and—and—make a home by and by—"

And here Dick Dumaresq resolutely checks himself, and locks up his Gladstone bag as sharply as if he locked away the tangle of golden-meshed, rainbow-hued threads of bright fancies which are commencing to weave themselves too rapidly and closely around his thoughts; and then he has to break the news of his sudden departure to Lionel, which Dumaresq is troubled to observe, seems to disturb and depress the poor lad very much.

He is in one of his gloomy, heavy moods to-day, almost incapable of being reasoned with; and his tutor's sudden leave-taking bewilders and irritates him.

After a quarter of an hour fruitlessly spent in trying to induce him to look at the matter with cheerfulness or indifference, Dumaresq has unwillingly to say good-bye, Lionel reiterating in a sullen, displeased way:

"You won't come back again for ever so long again, I know. I wish I had known when you were coming here that you were going off again in a few weeks. I don't like people coming to stay here with me, as I think for years, and then going away to see their uncles or their aunts, or their grandmothers, in a few weeks!"

And so angry does he make himself that he even refuses to shake hands or say good-bye; and Dumaresq, with rather a depressed, troubled feeling on his own part, has to take his leave, as the train by which he intends to travel passes through Portdreath station about twenty minutes later.

He has just five minutes to see Mrs. Lilly, and five minutes' space to say good-bye to Imogene Trefusis. She is about the house or the gardens, probably in the little rose-colored drawing-room practising—it is her hour for afternoon practice. He can say farewell to her there, if, indeed, there is any need for farewell when his absence will be short.

He is leaving Mrs. Lilly's room when he says, very carelessly:

"I must be off now; I have bid them good-by—at least, except Miss Trefusis. I dare say Lionel will tell her, but I should just like to say I am going. Where is she, Aunt Miriam?"

"Thou meanest Miss Imogene, I suppose, Richard," Mrs. Lilly says, formally. "I don't think thee can see her—I believe she has gone out for the afternoon. I know she was going."

"Oh, indeed," he says, very quietly; but Miriam Lilly looks sharply into his face.

"I will tell her thou hast gone. Will not that do as well as a leave-taking, under all circumstances?"

"Very good," he says, in a hard, dry voice, turning away suddenly. "Please say I was summoned in haste, and—make my respectful adieus to her."

But, after he leaves the room, Miriam Lilly crosses over to the window, from which she can watch him every foot of the way until he disappears within the entrance to the little station.

Then she draws a long breath as if of relief, and sits down quietly to her sewing. Nearly four hours later, and just as Mrs. Lilly is about to enjoy a very choice and carefully made cup of tea in her own room, Imogene returns.

"Shall I make a cup of tea for thee, dear?" she inquires, with the spoon poised over the dainty old inlaid wood caddy.

"No, thanks," Imogene laughs. "I wonder you have the conscience to ask me, knowing I have had tea at Porrantowers, which means that I have had a very large dinner and an enormous tea in one! I have had roast fowl, and tongue, and cherry tart, and saffron cake, and cream, and raspberry jam. Mr. Lilly would make me eat, so he has all those heterogeneous dainties to answer for in case my bosom's lord does not sit lightly on his throne!"

"There is a speech!" Mrs. Lilly says, dryly. "Thee need not have eaten a morsel if thee did not like, Imogene; but I am glad William took care to be hospitable to thee."

"He was exceedingly kind and nice," Imogene says, earnestly and reassuringly, for Miriam Lilly's elderly spouse is so eccentric at times in his behavior as to merit in some degree the reputation he has among the country folk of being "half cracked."

"So take your tea," Imogene continues, gayly, pulling off her straw hat and seating herself, "and I shall sit and look at you."

But at that moment there comes a noisy, impatient summons at the door, which is opened ceremoniously, and two big retrievers bound joyously into the room.

Miriam Lilly notes in an instant, with a pang of uneasiness, how sweetly and brightly a conscious and expectant looks flashes into Imogene's face, and how she darts an eager glance behind Lionel, who tramps in noisily and stands sullenly staring at her with angry eyes.

"Well, where have you been?" he demands, wrathfully. "Everybody gone! I haven't had a soul to speak to for hours! You sneaked off, and never said you were going, just as Dumaresq sneaked off, and never said he was going! And there is the governor gone out to dinner with old Colonel Gardiner, and I haven't had a soul to speak to the whole afternoon," he reiterates, passionately.

"I've been over to Porrantowers, Lion," Imogene says, lightly and pleasantly. "Mrs. Lilly wanted directions given to the servants, and to tell Mr. Lilly about the gooseberries for preserving, and the raspberries. I've brought a lovely little basket large with me—and, of course I didn't imagine Mr. Dumaresq was going out, dear, or I should not have gone," the little sister adds, lovingly. "Where has he gone?"

There is the least possible tremor of disappointment and anxiety in her tones, and her fingers nervously touch the flowers on her breast, and some of the rich, red petals flutter down.

"Where?" Lionel repeats, angrily, opening his eyes wide. "Is that all you know? Why, he's gone away!"

"Gone away! Where?" repeats Imogene, and the gladness and brightness are gone out of face and voice; there is almost the hardness and harshness of fear and dismay in her quivering tones.

"I don't know where, I am sure!" Lionel retorts, sourly, but well pleased to see that the news is distressing to his sister. "Gone off with himself to see some of his friends who were sick, so he said, an uncle or somebody! Said he got a telegram, and wouldn't stop a minute, but rushed off! We'll see no more of him, you may be sure!"

"See no more of him!" the girl retorts, slowly, as if stunned by this intelligence. "Why has he gone away?"

"Didn't I tell you, to see his grandmother, or his grandfather, or some one who is sick," Lionel retorts, captiously.

"My dear boy, thou art running on too fast," Miriam Lilly interposes; "Richard Dumaresq has but asked for a few days' absence, and has gone to see his uncle."

Imogene does not speak for a few moments, but when she does, the fresh young voice has grown hard and cold, the fair face very pale and proud.

"Ah, well!" she says, quietly. "Of course, any objections we might have had to Mr. Dumaresq leaving us must be overruled in a case of illness; but I hope he will return, Lionel, as you have got used to him, and he seemed to suit you."

"He was obliged to go at once or not at all, thee see, dear," Miriam Lilly says, later on, reverting to the subject, reluctantly.

"Of course—I see," Imogene says, calmly.

She has brought her lace pillow and bobbins into the housekeeper's parlor, and sits by the window in the sunset glow, deftly throwing the threads over the pins.

"He desired me to make his respectful adieux to thee," continues Mrs. Lilly, glancing from the white fingers gleaming busily over her work to the fair, grave face, which seems full of absorbing interest in the intricacies of her lace pattern.

"Did he? Very kind of him," she says, coldly and carelessly. "I shall be very sorry if he does not return. He was a very kind, gentlemanly man, and seemed to have such a good influence over poor Lionel."

"I am sure he will return, dear," Miriam Lilly says, in reply.

"Well, of course, you speak with authority, and probably know more of his affairs than we do," Imogene says, deliberately. "What do you think of that pattern, Mrs. Lilly?"

Nor does she ever again allude to Richard Dumaresq, though the days of his absence are prolonged beyond the permitted time, and the fifth day since he left Portdreath has come without bringing either a message of any kind from him to its inmates, and Sir Philip is in a state of haughtiest displeasure, Lionel sullenly resentful, restless, ill-tempered, and unhappy at his tutor's prolonged absence, and Miriam displeased and anxious beyond expression, though she never betrays it in word or look.

But on the afternoon of the fifth day there are three persons watching for the afternoon post with intense longing and eagerness, and none of the three will betray the fact, that they are so watching and waiting, even to each other.

Lionel has taken his dogs out on the lawn, and they are all lying in the shade of a clump of Portugal laurel, and the boy is watching the downhill road to the station with longing eyes.

FIRST SALE OF POULTRY FOR BELGIUM

The Canadian Poultrymen's Belgian Relief Association are going to hold a Sale of Pure Bred Poultry at the Canada National Exhibition, Toronto, on Labor Day, September 3rd, 1917.

Any Ontario breeders who have not already donated still have time to help along this good work by sending their donations to Raymond E. Bruton, R. R. No. 2, Hamilton, Ont., who will forward shipping instructions and tags.

This work is authorized by the Allies Agricultural Relief Committee of which Dr. Robertson, of Ottawa, is Chairman and is backed by the Dominion and Allied Governments.

All proceeds will go for the relief of Wives and Families of Belgian Poultrymen in the devastated regions.

This will also be a chance for breeders to buy stock from some of the best flocks in Ontario and Quebec.

Rice.

We neglect it,
But let us think,
It may replace meat
The Japs do wonders on it.
And so do those of other nationalities.
However, we must have uncoated rice.
And we must have our rice perfectly cooked.
No angry mess is going to tempt us away from meat.
And that's not saving meat is had meat once or at most twice a day is enough, however

CZECHO-SLOVAKS

Who They Are; Whence They Come.

1. Area and Population.—The Bohemian state would be composed of the lands of the crown of Saint Wenceslas, namely, Bohemia, Moravia, Silesia, and to these would be added the Slovak districts of North Hungary. The frontiers of the three former would, in the main, follow the lines laid down by history and tradition, but the southern and eastern frontiers of Slovaks could not be fixed without opposition from the Magyars, in spite of their being mainly ethnographical, and including as little of the Magyar population as possible. The new state would thus have about 12,000,000 inhabitants, and would extend to about 50,000 English square miles (Belgium equals 11,373).

2. The Name.—The note to President Wilson proposes the liberation of "the Czechs and Slovaks" (des Tchèques et des Slovaques), whereas the English translation speaks of "Czecho-Slovaks." It is necessary to settle the question of terminology first. This is not a mere matter of philology; behind the name there lies a certain political and legal conception and an attempt at definitions. It is well known that this question of terminology caused great difficulties between Austria and Hungary at the time when the Dual system was established, and similar difficulties might arise in our case.

Bohemia, strictly speaking, designates Bohemia proper, the chief Bohemian country, exclusive of Moravia and Silesia, but the "Bohemian" crown designates all these countries as a constitutional unit. In that sense the name might designate the whole future state. Its origin appears to be Celtic; the Boii were a Celtic people who inhabited part of the land, and were succeeded by the German tribe of Marcomani, who, in their turn, were supplanted by the Slav Czechs. Czech is the Slav name for the Slav people and language in Bohemia and its provinces, the terms used to designate the whole country, the state, are "Bohemia" and "Bohemian." The Czechs themselves do not adopt this distinction, but use the word "Czech" in both senses. When writing German or Latin, however, they do use the words "Bohme," "Bohemus," but the French have adopted the Slav designation, and this is also used by the Germans.

The Slovaks extend from the southeast corner of Moravia far into Hungary. They are part of the Czech nation. Incorporated as early as the tenth century, and being thereby separated from the Czechs, they have formed a national unit against the Magyars. In the 18th century they adopted their own dialect as their literary language, but the language question does not play a prominent role, inasmuch as every Czech understands Slovak quite well, and vice versa.

There has always been a party among the Slovaks who, though adhering to their own dialect, are in favor of the union of these two branches of the same union. The word "Czecho-Slovak" or "Czechoslovak" (the latter form being intended to designate a closer union) is very widely used, although it is not accepted by the radical Slovaks, who claim an absolutely distinct nationality. The political relationship between Bohemia and Slovakia can be variously formulated in terms of the nomenclature. The same questions may arise as those which are discussed in fixing the relationship of Austria to Hungary. It will depend, for instance, how close the union is as to whether the name "Czechoslovak," "Czecho-Slovak," or "Czech and Slovak," will be decided upon. There is no doubt that the union of the two branches will grow. So far, the political spokesmen of the Czechs and Slovaks in the European and American colonies (in Bohemia and Slovakia the people cannot publicly express their opinion) have agreed to claim one common, united states, and it is taken as a matter of course by both parties that the Slovaks of Slovakia will freely use their language as they choose. There will, indeed, be no language question; the political interest of the problem is concerned only with the financial organization of Slovakia and her economic and educational development. And, in that respect, the interests of Slovakia are best served by the closest possible union, because the Magyars have purposely neglected her, and have tried as far as possible, to keep her, economically, at the old primitive stage of development.

It will therefore be generally agreed that the best designation for the state, which is to be composed of the Czechs and Slovaks, and of the non-Slav minorities, will be Bohemia. This will almost certainly be the name adopted for international use, for, in this case, terminology need take no account of internal qualifications, and will inevitably choose the simple term, especially as it happens to be the one by which the country is generally known.—Thomas K. Masaryk, in Bohemian Review.

Bradstreet's Trade Review

TORONTO—General confidence is felt in trade circles with regard to autumn and winter trade conditions. The usual midsummer lull is still being experienced in retail business, but orders for fall delivery, the last of which are now being received by wholesale houses come as a guarantee of the cheerful sentiment that is prevalent. The excellent crop outlook throughout the province is aiding as a assurance of healthy trade conditions in rural points. Drygoods wholesalers are relieving the last of the fall orders. Collections due August 4 were fairly well met, and the list of failures continues below last year. Hardware business is reported as very fair. Retailers are anticipating liberal spring requirements. Grocery trade is fair. The pack of small fruits will be materially smaller than last year on account of insufficient supplies and this promises to make for stiff prices.

MONTREAL—There has held up quite well, and crop reports are very favorable in the main. Only a small percentage of drygoods are still on the road for fall orders, but the volume of business that is being turned in, is measuring up unusually well. The grocery trade is fair. Country collections are fair to good, but city remittances are rather backward.

OTTAWA—Good crop prospects, and the realization of a very fair yield of hay has lent an improved tone to mercantile trade conditions. A healthy autumn retail trade is taken for granted. Collections are fair to good in this section of the province.

HAMILTON—Retailers are now passing through the quiet period of the summer, although the lull is not as pronounced as when the heat wave was at its height. Retailers are beginning to stock up liberally for their fall business. The drygoods travellers still taking orders for fall delivery are sending in a good volume of business. Groceries are little changed from last week. There is a good demand for sugar and prices firmed up 5c to $9.04 for granulated in bags, according to the revised price list of two refiners. The yield of small fruits was disappointing in the Niagara belt, and canners will pack only a fraction of their capacity. Plums, pears and peaches promise to yield better. In most localities near here, wheat harvesting has commenced and it promises to become fairly general during the next ten days.

AN AGE OF WEAK NERVES

"No heart for anything" is the cry of thousands of men and women who might be made well by the new, red blood Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make.

Misery day and night is the lot of hosts of men and women who are to-day the victims of weak nerves. Their pale, drawn faces and dejected attitude tell a sad tale, for nervous weakness means being tortured by fits of depression. These sufferers are painfully sensitive and easily agitated by some chance remark. Sleeplessness robs them of energy and strength; their eyes are sunken, their limbs tremble, appetite is poor and memory often fails. This nervous exhaustion is one of the most serious evils affecting men and women of to-day. The only way to bring back sound, vigorous health is to feed the starved nerves which are clamoring for new, rich, red blood. This new, good blood can be had through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which fact accounts for the thousands of cures of nervous diseases brought about by this powerful blood builder and nerve restorer. Through the fair use of this medicine thousands of despondent people have been made bright, active and strong.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all dealers in medicine, or may be had by mail at fifty cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Alike, Yet Very Different.

On Seventh avenue the other evening I saw a small red headed fool of a boy throwing [illegible]. "An excitement craving, empty headed kid," I said to myself, passing by. On the next block I saw a girl with her curls, dressed in tuts, rather dashing, who gave me a little provocative smile as I passed. Did I say to myself that she was an excitement craving, empty headed kid? She was, but I didn't. On the contrary, for the moment at least, I felt quite drawn toward her. Yet she and the boy might easily have been brother and sister and twin rowdies at heart. Why did one of the two attract me and the other repel?

The strange lure of sex. It was ready to blind me to the mental defects of that girl. It was ready to fix my thoughts on her cheeks or her hair if I'd sat with her. Now, isn't that odd? I should never have given a snap for her kid brother's hair or cheeks naturally. I'd have looked him well over and seen at a glance he hadn't much character and maybe less brains, but could I have seen what she lacked once I'd felt her attraction?—[illegible] in Metropolitan Magazine.

UNDERWOOD NEWS

Mr. Arthur and Miss Lydia Abbs, and Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Bailey spent Sunday August 19th at Hanover, 34 miles was registered on one gallon of gasoline.

The Presbyterian congregation held a most successful garden party last Thursday evening at the town hall. Although clouds gathered and rain threatened the crowds gathered from the country and surrounding towns. The ladies surpassed all former efforts in serving up the supper for when one was served with fowl, jellies, salads, tomatoes, and an over abundance of pies and cakes, it looked more like a banquet than an ordinary garden party. Owing to the weather the supper was served on tables in the Workman hall and the programme carried on in the front hall. In the absence of the pastor, Rev. Robinson of Tiverton took charge of the programme, who, in his usual genial manner, kept the audience in good humor. The programme was opened by a selection from the choir then well rendered solos were given by Mrs. Hunter, Kincardine, and Miss Tena Cole, accompanied by Miss Strong, vocal teacher Toronto, Mrs. George and Wat. MacKay, also rendered solos. Mr. J. J. Hunter, Kincardine and Rev. Linton gave ten-minutes speeches. The male quartette and the orchestra also gave some selections. Proceeds were very gratifying to those who worked so hard to make the garden party a success and will be about $200

BURGOYNE AND DISTRICT

Another bargain sale is on at Mr. E. Ferguson's store. It being necessary to have business matters relating to the firm wound up Mr. Ferguson is disposing of much of his stock as speedily as possible.

An honor roll has been hung in the Pres church here containing 14 names of those who had enlisted for military service over seas. Although not all are Burgoyne boys by birth, and enlisting from various localities, they had all been residents in this vicinity at some time. The names on the list are—W. M. Reany, James Robertson, W. G. Lyness, Robert Gowanlock, John R. Geddes, Alex E. Stewart, Colin McArthur, Alex. Plaunt, Chas Donaldson, W. J. McVerty, John Wood, R. Roy Reany, John McLachlan, Pearcy Knibb. The roll is handsomely framed and the names thereon are beautifully hand written being the work of Mr. W. J. Reany.

A large number of visitors were present at the anniversary services in the Presbyterian church on Sunday. Every seat was occupied at the morning service. Floral decorations brightened the pulpit and choir platform. A large choir practiced for the occasion, were out in force. Rev. Mr. Hilts, of Chesley occupied the pulpit. After a few pleasant words of greeting and hearty good wishes for the future prosperity of the congregation, he preached a powerful and uplifting sermon showing the true object and spiritual nature of the church and the wonderful Divine light and power, beyond conception that overlaps every other, giving light to the mind and strength to the heart of every true individual member. The evening audience was mostly young people and his address was a master piece, full of counsel and instructive teaching to the boys, more especially between the years of 13 and 19 was the most dangerous time in any ones life, habits were formed then good or ill, that would grow into life and as the boy was, the man will be. Good collections were given at both services.

No. 2 beef ring had another meatless" week. There being no 10 cent fish provided for country places by the Controller, it was either go fishing or want. By the way, it was rumoured at the country store that another twenty thousand ($10 .01 a day) recruits have been selected to assist the Food Controller, to measure the capacity, of the citizen's stomach and to provide individual control girths, the girth is so arranged that when, mush potatoes, fish, cabbage and other coarse foods are consumed it relaxes indefinitely, but when flour, bread, beef, bacon, etc. is consumed, the compression is so great that one is obliged to desist at once. The contrivance is manipulated by the will power of the food controller and only the regulation girt may be used.

The lecture by Rev. Hilts on Monday evening brought out a fair audience. The views were exceptionally good, and the information given out about Florence Nightingale and the Red Cross was most interesting. The proceedings were cut short on account of a defective lantern, but despite this incident all were well pleased with the lecture.

Mr. Whorral of St. Catharines, sang very acceptable solos in the church Sunday.

Robert Pierson and family of St. Catharines, are holidaying at the Pierson home.

The ladies are busy papering the manse, for the new occupants, to come soon

Rev. Strachan occupied the pulpit Sunday. Ordination services are on September 4th.

Rev Campbell, of the Dominion Alliance, takes the services next Sunday.

Mrs. Madill, and children, of Toronto, are visitors at J. Carter's.

Miss Euphemia Stafford, Toronto, is holidaying at T. Swalwell's.

Miss Wells is visiting her brother, Dr. F. H. Wells.

Miss Elsie McIntosh, Toronto, is a visitor at Gus. Smith's.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Brothers, of Hamilton, are at Verne McLean's.

Death of Lester Dick

Lester Dick, son of Henry Dick of Arran Tp. died suddenly on Wednesday, August 22nd. True, he has been ailing for the past two years, and scarcely able to be around, yet his death was entirely unlooked for, and his sudden taking off is the cause of great grief to his family and the neighborhood in general.

Deceased was in his 38th year. He was one of Burgoyne's most esteemed young men, quietly disposed and always cheerful. Occasionally he had felt quite well, and his friends were hoping for his complete recovery.

The funeral took place on Friday to Port Elgin cemetery, Rev. Mr. Soules, of Southampton Presbyterian church officiating.

Deep sympathy is extended to the bereaved ones in their sad hour.

Married in the West

Mr. John McIvor gave his Reston friends a surprise last week when it was announced that he had taken unto himself a helpmate in the person of Miss Annie McLennan of Pipestone Man. On July 25 at the Presbyterian Manse, Rev. A. M. Ross pronounced the words which made them man and wife, in the presence of a number of intimate friends. After the ceremony they all motored to the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Angus McKenzie where a sumptuous wedding dinner was served. Mr. and Mrs. McIvor left for a motor trip to North Dakota to visit relatives and have now settled in their residence on Railway Ave.—(Reston Recorder).

The bride is well known in Bruce, and is a sister of Mr. Thomas McLennan of Con. 10

MARRIED

"Happy Valley Farm" the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. D. McCulloch of North Bruce, was the scene of an interesting wedding on Wednesday August 29th when their daughter Lucy was married to Mr. David MacDonald of Allenford. About forty immediate friends and relatives witnessed the ceremony which was performed at 11 a. m. by the bride's brother Rev. H. D. McCulloch of Applo, assisted by Rev. J. L. McCulloch, the bride's cousin, and her pastor Rev. Dr. McDougall of Queen Hill. Miss Mary McCulloch was bridesmaid, Dr. Sutherland assisted the groom. Mrs. (Rev.) H. D. McCulloch played the wedding music and also sang "A Perfect Day" following the ceremony. After a bountiful dinner Mr. and Mrs. MacDonald took train at Port Elgin for Toronto, Niagara and Applo. They will live near Allenford and the very best wishes of all go with them to their new home while hearty congratulations are extended to the groom on winning a bride so deservedly popular.

May Their Tribe Increase

We are in receipt of the following letter: "Please find enclosed a cheque for $15 which I think will clear me to the end of the year. I have taken The Colonist for over forty years and consider it one of the best papers in Canada and the best in the province." The letter recalls an incident that happened some time ago. Mr. James Watts, then one of the proprietors of Sentinel, of Woodstock, N. B., had a caller one day, who asked: "How much do I owe you?" Mr. Watts asked his name and the caller replied that the amount might not be charged to him, and explained that twenty-five years ago he had gone West, leaving instructions that the paper should be sent to his father, who had been receiving it. Mr. Watts looked up the name and said the amount due was $37.50. The caller proceeded to place $75 upon the table saying: "I'll pay what's due and to avoid mistakes I'll pay another twenty-five years in advance." We fancy this must be a unique experience in newspaperdom.

Visiting Peter McArthur

An auto load of Thamesvillites went to Glencoe for a day last week. As the load contained an ardent admirer of the farmyard philosopher, Peter MacArthur, a pilgrimage was made to the Ekfrid homestead. They found it alright, and and probably not knowing what a rigid disciple of Thoreau, John Burroughs, and other apostles of the simple life, Peter is, they were naturally a bit disappointed at not finding a a pocket edition of government house. They did not see Peter that was disappointing; neither did they see "the old red cow," which was probably more disappointing; and when "Shep" the faithful watchdog did not bay deepmouthed welcome it is reported that one young lady declared that the glamour had departed and sat down and wept. But after some more hunting they found the sugar bush and also some of the pigs that the literary-farmer is saving for the Glencoe fair, so with a long look at these evidences of serious agricultural purpose they left the sage to his meditations and proceeded back to Glencoe with a healthy Ekfrid appetite for dinner.

The Colonel

(Written by Lieut. Les. Young)

A man that can fight, a fighter who's fought,
A man to whom danger to self counts for nought,
A man all the way with a conduct sheet clean,
A man: Colonel Sutherland, that's who I mean.
As a man and a soldier our Colonel beloved
And admired by those among whom he has moved;
Admired, beloved, yet regarded with awe
A man and a soldier, sans blemish or flaw
A man and a soldier, man stamped on his face;
As a soldier, his record decades won't efface;
Insignificant, lowly and humble I do feel,
When I look on his manhood, his grey eyes of steel.
To day Canada's proud of the sons that she bore,
Proud as she is of her heroes of yore,
Proud of the man who will stick with the game,
Proud of the soldier upholding her fame.
In but six of his days, God created all earth,
Saved himself but the seventh to rest from His work,
And while resting from care on the seventh he planned
The man of the stamp of the Sutherland clan:
He moulded and made them and placed them on earth,
And the best of them all leads the SEVENTY FIRST.

BRITON AND TURK.

A Surprise, a Fair Fight and the Way the Battle Ended.

There is a story of Gallipoli that deals with a fight in the open and exhibits the "unspeakable" Turk as a fair and worthy enemy. This is the story:

A young English officer, doing observation work alone, was suddenly confronted by a Turkish officer, similarly engaged. The Turk was as surprised as the Briton, but came forward revolver in hand. The Englishman had no revolver. He stood his ground, his hands in the large pockets of his tunic.

Seeing that his adversary was unarmed, the Turk, much to the surprise of the Briton, threw down his gun and put up his fists in approved prize ring style. The Englishman put himself on guard, and the next moment the Turk flung himself upon him, and the pair began to fight desperately.

The men were about the same age, the same weight and had equal knowledge of the art of boxing. They fought without stopping for about ten minutes. By that time each was fairly exhausted, and they paused for a brief rest, only to continue their little private accounting when they had found their breath. Round after round the fight went on, while out in the Gulf of Saros the ships fired automatically, and back of each of them the field artillery thundered. Neither seemed to be able to get any decisive advantage over the other, and at last Turk and Englishman rolled over on the ground and laughed and laughed. Just then the Englishman's hand touched something. It was the Turk's pistol. He picked it up and handed it to his enemy. The two young men shook hands, and each returned to his own lines.

TO LIVE IS TO BE WET.

Where There is No Water There Can Be No Life as We Know It.

All life is lived in water. Where no water is no life can be. The necessary machinery may have been already made, as in a completely dried seed, but that seed cannot actually live until water reaches it again. To live is to be wet, or, in the phrase of a French student, "Life is an aquatic phenomenon."

When the supply of water is withheld from living things they may survive, but their life is slowed down, as it were. In the completely dried seed life is arrested altogether, yet the creature is not dead. The French call that a case of vie suspendue, or, in our language, suspended animation. After astonishingly long periods such seeds will germinate if they are watered.

The astronomer tells us that one planet is only one of many belonging to innumerable suns, and he wonders whether this little "lukewarm bullet" of ours, as Robert Louis Stevenson called it, is really unique in bearing a burden of life. There is one path that leads to the answer of his query. If he finds no evidence of water on other worlds he cannot expect to find life there.—Dr. C. W. Saleeby, in Youths Companion.

Worth Knowing.

Whites of eggs should be cold if you want to beat them very stiff.

It improves prunes to add a little cider to the water in which they are cooked.

Steel knives can be very well cleaned by a paste made of emery powder and oil.

Always use cotton instead of silk when mending gloves. The cotton will not pull the kid.

Muslins must be ironed wet. If allowed to get dry, they will have a rough appearance.

Lettuce and green peas cooked together make a dainty spring dish. Few people know that lettuce is as good when cooked as spinach. Boiled with young peas and flavor is delicious, also it is very wholesome.

Fruit jars can be easily opened if you will take hold of the top with a piece of sandpaper.

One of the reasons why spinach is such a valuable food is that it is such an excellent butter carrier. City dwellers need more fats than most of them get, and butter is almost the best fat in the world. Oil is better, but it is too expensive for every one to use.

If you wish to make starch and let it get cold before starching the clothes, try this plan: After starch is made and while still hot, sprinkle cold water all over the top, as though you were sprinkling clothes. You will find no scum on top and can use every speck of it.

EVERY WOMAN'S RIGHT

To every woman belongs the right to enjoy a healthy, active, happy life, yet nine out of every ten suffer years of agony, usually from some form of bloodlessness. That is why one sees on every side pale thin cheeks, dull eyes and drooping figures—sure signs of headaches, weak backs, aching limbs and uncertain health. All weak, suffering women should win the right to be well by refreshing their weary bodies with the new, rich red blood that promptly transforms them into healthy, attractive women. This new, rich, red blood is supplied in abundance by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which reaches every organ and every nerve in the body.

Through the use of these pills thousands of women have found a prompt cure when suffering from anaemia, indigestion, heart palpitation, rheumatism, general weakness and those ailments from which women alone suffer. There is no part of this broad Dominion in which you will not find some former sufferer who has regained health and strength through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and this is the reason why these pills have become a favorite household remedy for more than a generation. If you are ailing and will give the pills a fair trial you will find renewed health and happiness in their use.

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any medicine dealer, or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Average Age at Death by Occupations.

Worth Remembering.

To remove fruit stains from the most delicate colors, as readily as from white, wet the stain with camphor before putting in the wash.

To make new boots polish, rub them over with half a lemon and let them dry.

A baby's bottle should never be washed in soapy water. The moment it is empty wash it in cold water and then fill with a weak solution of borax, till needed again.

After your blankets have been washed and dried, beat them with a carpet beater. This makes the wool light and soft.

A chocolate stain can be removed nicely by soaking in kerosene and washing in cold water.

Wrinkles may be removed from clothing by hanging garments in the bathroom and turning on the hot water till room is full of steam. This will always remove wrinkles from crepe.

To remove paint from a dress take a camel hair brush, dip the point of it in turpentine and just dampen the stained parts. Let the garment dry, and then rub briskly, when the paint will fall off in a dust. If it does not all come off repeat the operation.

And scare this guy to death at least
A dozen times a day!"

RAILWAY POLICY IS CRITICISED

Acquisition of Canadian Northern Imposes Burden of Unknown Magnitude.

The following criticism of the policy of the Government in respect of the Canadian Northern Railway is made:

The Government bill to authorize the purchase by it of the capital stock of the Canadian Northern Railway is half way through the House of Commons and will shortly be in the Senate. If it becomes law, it will impose on Canada, at a time when the country is under an unprecedented strain, a burden of unknown magnitude. One certainly greater than any ever before imposed upon this country, with the exception of the war debt.

The purchase of a definite piece of railway property is one thing. The buying of stock in a company with unascertained assets and unknown liabilities is another. Once the Government becomes the principal owner of the common stock, it must provide out of loans or taxes for all debts of the railway due or to become due and for all future losses in operating. The estimates of expenditure still necessary to be made run into enormous figures. No one knows what the real extent of its obligations are. The railway has bonds outstanding and debts unpaid; so have its subsidiaries. There are guarantees given by it to other companies, unpaid balances on contracts and upon accounts, but to what extent is unknown. What its assets are is equally unknown. It operates and is interested in railway companies, land companies, telegraph companies, tunnel companies, lumber companies, and hotel companies, but no one knows how far it owns them, what their assets or liabilities are, nor to what extent the railway company is responsible for their liabilities.

No other railway company nor any other group of business men would consider such an acquisition except after elaborate examination and reports from accountants and appraisers on the assets and liabilities, and then only subject to a solvent guarantee that all supposed assets would be delivered and that no undisclosed debts or obligations would appear. To find out these things, where such examination and guarantee cannot be had, the usual course in the United States has been to place the road in the hands of a receiver, whose staff can ascertain them and place them before those interested an accurate and clear statement. Systems quite as large, notably the Union Pacific, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, and the Rock Island, have in the United States been through this process and have emerged from it with capital written down to correspond to the actual values, in a solvent condition and able to perform their duties as public servants.

The only examination so far had into the affairs of the Canadian Northern has resulted, in the opinion of two out of three railway experts that the stock proposed to be purchased was worth nothing. This means that whatever its nominal value may be, the unsecured debts are more than enough to prevent its being sold to any reasonably prudent purchaser. In view of the fact that no money was paid to the company for the stock and that the company has never been able to earn anything upon it, there was and is no reason to expect any other result from examination.

No agreement or obligation to purchase is produced. In fact, nothing has transpired except verbally and then between members of the Government not named and persons whose names are not disclosed. In fact, what is to be paid, who is to get paid for it, what the cost and the attendant obligations are, no one knows. The smallest transaction in common life could not be concluded in such a way, and any attempts to do it by trustees responsible to a court would unquestionably be a breach of trust, and this is the largest and most onerous undertaking ever contemplated by any Canadian Government, and the most risky. It is safe to say that no road capitalized above its earning power can ever be a useful public servant, nor can any road bought by a Government for more than its worth ever be anything but a continuous drain on the tax payer.

The Canadian Northern Railway was built as a private speculation. Its bonds were sold to financiers at a discount. No money was received into its treasury for its stock. Nothing has been made public which would justify the taking of other citizens of this country for the purpose of giving fictitious value to these bonds and stocks. The interest and other charges on Canada due to the war increase every day and even now are so great that it is difficult to say from what source they can be paid without an economic strain never hitherto undergone and a cutting down of expenses not yet even begun.

The credit of the country abroad is less than it has ever been. The last loan of $100,000,000 at 6 per cent. for two years netted only $96,111,111. In other words, the country is borrowing money at a charge of more than 8 per cent. per annum. Note—According to the Monetary Times of August 17th, Sir Thomas White stated the net proceeds to be $96,250,000, not $96,111,111, and that the commissions and charges were 1¾ per cent. He was speaking of a two-year 5 per cent. loan. The cost would be 8 per cent. if the 1¾ per cent. comes out of the $96,250,000, but not otherwise. Its future credit may depend entirely on the belief of foreign bankers that good money will not be sent after bad, and that speculative enterprises will be allowed to find the financial level called for by their intrinsic merits.

The undersigned, all of whom as investors, have a stake in the prosperity of this country desire to call the attention of their fellow-countrymen to the grave risk they all are running of having their own earnings diverted for the purpose of securing profits to bondholders and stockholders of a concern, the equity in whose enterprise has been declared by the only people at all in a position to form an opinion to be of no value. It is also urged that the strongest possible protests be made before it is too late to all senators and members of Parliament.

THE RAILWAY POLICY.

We print in another column a protest against the purchase of the Canadian Northern Railway signed by many of the leading capitalists of Montreal, and this protest is not lightly to be disregarded. The point at issue is this, is the country to take over a burden that other shoulders should bear? Will the ownership of the Canadian Northern impose upon the people a financial obligation avoidable without danger to national interests? If the Government was divorced from the enterprise, the answer is easy. Like any other business undertaking the property should stew in its own juice, and undergo the course of liquidation through receivership, emerging therefrom in stronger condition in respect of liabilities both of current and of capital account. That appears to be the view of the financiers whose statement we print, and there is force in the view.

The Canadian Northern must be carried on as an operating road. It serves a great territory and a large community of people whose welfare is dependent upon the operation of this railway, but having exhausted its financial resources the alternative of Government ownership by acquisition of the common stock, or through the medium of a receivership is the only one presented.

To Government ownership we are opposed. A reorganization of the capital liabilities through the medium of receivership is the other recourse. The liability of Canada in either event remains, the Government and the provinces having guaranteed the great sum of $211,00,000 of bonds of the company. It is, however, necessary to learn the extent of the liability taken over by Canada in the bill now before Parliament. What assets are acquired? What obligations incurred? If there be a margin on the debit side of the account, if Canada is assuming a debt over and above existing guarantees, the public may not unreasonably ask why. The railway is a fine property with excellent prospects, but after all is said, it is a business venture which should be allowed to face the consequences of all business ventures. One thing is certain: the country should not be saddled with any avoidable liability. The debt created by the war is already large, and constantly increasing. New sources of taxation have to be tapped. The outlook is by no means bright in respect to the Dominion finances and before the additional obligation of taking over the Canadian Northern Railway is incurred, it is necessary at the least that we should know precisely what is being purchased in the way of asset, and what is being incurred in the way of liability.

Joy of Pockets.

The pocket has to be lacked before it is properly appreciated, the London Chronicle says. This writer had taken his pockets as a matter of course until one evening he attended a fancy dress ball in costume, which, he discovered when too late to remedy the defect, was absolutely pocketless. The question at once arose what to do with pocket handkerchief, money, cloakroom ticket, and so on. The handkerchief, of course, went up his sleeve, but it took some minutes to devise receptacles for coins and other necessaries in the lining of the cap, the heels of the shoes and the cuff of the coat. All night long, however, he felt lost through having no place to thrust his hands into. Since then he finds himself frequently putting his hands into his pockets to experience the sheer joy of knowing that they are there.

PLAN GREAT STRIKE

U. S. Metal Workers May Back Shipyards Men.

New York, Aug. 20.—Labor leaders in charge of the strike in shipyards of the New York district to-day asserted that 250,000 metal workers in various parts of the country would be asked to declare a sympathetic strike unless a settlement is reached to-day. A meeting of labor leaders, to be held in Tammany Hall to-morrow, is expected to take formal action seeking to extend the strike, it was said.

According to those in charge of the strike, the plans include taking out men all the way from Seattle, Wash., to the Delaware River. The meeting to-morrow will be attended by officials of the international unions involved, Machinists, blacksmiths, boilermakers and patternmakers.

COLLAPSE OF THE GERMANS THIS WINTER

Allies Certain That the Enemy Cannot Endure Much Longer.

THEIR PLANS FAILED

News That Slipped by Censors, Showed Desperate Situation.

London Cable —— England and France believe Germany will be unable to endure another Winter of war. The allies are magnificently equipped for Winter operations, and do not intend to allow the Germans any respite, but to make the Winter's hardships doubly severe for them by continuing the present campaign.

The desperate state that Germany has reached, not only in regard to continuing the war, but also the reconstruction of her commerce and industries after the war, was unwittingly exposed recently through the unintentional laxity of the censors. Anxious to prevent revelations of the political situation which junkerdom and the military party were unwilling that the world should know, the censors tried to placate the radicals by letting other comments reach print which are vastly more important to the outside world than the details of German political bickerings.

SITUATION REVEALED.

The situation revealed is briefly this:

When the Reichstag on July 19 adopted the resolution declaring for peace without indemnities and without annexation it spoke with the voice of the great majority of the nation crying for peace, suffering bitterly and dreading another Winter of war with all its horrors, cold, hunger and nakedness. It spoke also for the army, which is desperately tired of fighting and is constantly losing battles because of the belief of the soldiers that the enemy now, by means of superior machinery, is slaughtering Germans with comparative safety. The army is becoming dangerously infected with the feeling that it no longer has a fair chance because the fight has become one of German blood and muscle, against the allies steel and iron.

Chancellor Michaelis knew that the Reichstag represented both the people and the army and he felt compelled to accept the principle of the peace resolution, but when the jingoes learned what he had done they became violently angry and the Chancellor was told that he must recant because peace without annexations or indemnities spelled ruin for Germany.

It was pointed out that Germany had spent half of her national wealth in the war and had lost all claim to the good will of mankind and with it the markets of the world. Germany could not rehabilitate herself without huge indemnities; and supplies of manufactured materials were exhausted; there was neither money nor credit nor goods to exchange for new supplies

HER PLAN OF FINANCE.

The country's fiscal system was based, when the Empire plunged into hostilities, on the plan to finance the war through loans and at the end of a short, sharp struggle, to exact immense indemnities or territories sufficient to pay the loans. This explains why Germany has paid practically all of her war costs up to this time from the proceeds of loans. It was expected that the war would last only a few months; then, following a complete victory, the indemnities would flow in and more than discharge the loans while the colonies and trade of her crushed enemies would be seized and Germany would be enriched.

No other plan of finance was deemed necessary; none was provided. Consequently, when this failed and the six months lengthened into more than three years with costs far exceeding the highest figure that any one had ever imagined, Germany was unable to readjust her system

Every day makes the situation more desperate and impresses more deeply upon the ruling hierarchy the absolute necessity of forcing a victory, no matter at what cost of human life, in order to exact the indemnities that might make economic rehabilitation possible.

Realizing fully this situation, the rulers of Germany compelled Chancellor Michaelis to repudiate his acceptance of the Reichstag resolution. His action promptly caused such an explosion of popular wrath from the peace-hungry people that the Chancellor had to hedge and promise that he would accept the Reichstag platform. Now, neither side is sure of his real intentions. Probably he himself is equally uncertain and is drifting, awaiting events, which daily are [illegible] more and more against [illegible].

WOULD PREFER PEACE.

It is believed that Dr. Michaelis is a sane economist, and personally would prefer peace soon so as to prevent a national collapse and utter stagnation after the war, but the military class, with the desperation of a gambler who is losing steadily, is doubling the stakes with every throw, hoping finally to break even.

The German jingoes are on the edge of a precipice: they do not dare to accept peace without heavy indemnities from the Allies, they are unable to win victory which would insure the kind of peace they desire. A characteristic statement of this desperate situation appears in the Tageszeitung, an intense jingo paper, which denounces the Reichstag resolution, and says:

"Such a peace would spell ruin for Germany. Before the war, German wealth was between eighty and a hundred billion dollars Nearly half of this has actually been spent in the war. Without indemnities there is no hope of carrying on. In the first decade after the war Germany would have to bear extra taxation of $1,000,000,000, compared with $325,000,000 before the war. How can a country in such a state of ruin as she will find herself in view of the enormously higher costs of living, shoulder such a burden when even half of it would require the most supreme effort?

ANSWER TO SOCIALISTS.

"Have the Socialists who prate of peace at the meetings considered how the country is going to care for its sick and wounded, and pick up the threads of its export and import trades unless it seized the opportunity of peace and imposes indemnities sufficient to meet Germany's liabilities and to purchase from other nations the raw materials necessary to restore her manufactures and rebuild trade connections? Germany is not blind enough to accept fine phrases and a peace of good will instead of the material compensation that she must have."

Such a bald confession of a national breakdown would have been forbidden even a few weeks ago; now its publication is permitted only because it is necessary to frighten the people into supporting the military autocracy, the gamblers, while they continue to double their stakes in frenzied efforts to establish a position where they can demand the indemnities which, it is universally admitted, are necessary to avert national ruin.

MONSTER WEAPON DOOMS TRIESTE

Huge Italian Gun On Gigantic Pontoon.

Its Secrets Are Still Closely Kept.

Washington, D.C.—A new Italian instrument of war has produced a sensation in the naval world, according to information in the possession of experts here.

The new device, employed for the first time in the Italian offensive against Austria, has not been definitely described. No description of it is now available, only its results being revealed. The instrument is said, however, to be a combination consisting of an enormous float, carrying the heaviest guns in existence, and employing a new type of shell.

An official despatch from Rome containing the fullest account that has reached America of the use of the new instrument states that it is being employed in the Gulf of Trieste, dropping shells into the city and sweeping Hermada, the principal fort barring the way of the Italians to Trieste.

"The bombardment of the Austrian positions," this cablegram says, "was accompanied in the Gulf of Trieste by two English monitors and three great Italian monitors, which shelled and struck the most vital parts of the Austrian defences with guns of such large calibre and long range as the Austrians never before experienced. The Italian navy has surpassed in calibre and range every previous record by mounting on special floats, whose construction and detail are a profound secret artillery of a power exceeding any armament on any American dreadnought

"The Italian navy has devised and inaugurated a new system of naval warfare . . . (Deleted.) This element of surprise was a part of the new enterprise in the Gulf of Trieste. While the artillery fire was in progress over the Carso and Italian and English monitors, escorted by torpedo boats, motor boats, submarines, and airplanes, proceeded to the Gulf of Trieste, crossing mine fields, and at 3 p.m. the English monitors opened fire against the Hermada's slopes on the side opposite the Italian front where the Austrian reserves and artillery had been concentrated.

"The Italian 305s were making hundreds of craters upon the sides and upon the high plateaus of the Hermada, while the Italian monitors maintained a still more terrific fire against the Austrian military buildings and depots in the city of Trieste. A large number of Italian airplanes were constantly in the air over the naval forces expecting Austrian aerial craft to come out to drop bombs upon the ships, but the Austrian fliers did not venture forth.

"The Austrian coastal batteries opened fire, but the English monitors were not hit, they refraining to answer the coastal batteries bombardment, but directing all their fire against the Hermada, stopping only when the Italian infantry launched their attack against the Hermada.

"At night the English monitors returned without having been damaged. The Italian monitors also stopped firing at night. During the bombardment smoke was observed near Pola, it being learned that it issued from the Austrian battleships, which had steam up, but they did not dare risk coming out.

"The Austrian command, discovering that the top of the Hermada was being dominated by the Italian artillery, due to the intervention of the new Italian monitors, ordered the Austrian aviators to destroy the Italian monitors during the night, but their efforts failed."

Mrs. Briggs brought home a new girl from the intelligence office and instructed her in her duties. "And do you have to be called in the morning?" she asked. "I don't has to be, mum," replied the new girl, hopefully, "unless you just happens to need me."—Yonkers Statesman.

NO PEACE WITH THE ENEMY WHILE THE KAISER RULES

U. S. President Answers the Peace Proposals of the Pope.

Basis For Security Lacking While Word-Breakers In Power.

Washington Report.——There appears to be no doubt that the United States was selected to make answer before the world in advance of all others. Whether the Entente nations will send extensive replies is not known here. It is regarded as probable that they will in large measure adopt the President's reasoning for their own and send notes of endorsement.

The feature of the reply that is certain to fix public attention is the cold determination not even to permit the subject of peace negotiations to be broached so long as the evil and dominating forces of autocracy and militarism control the central powers. It is not even necessary to read between the lines of the President's response to see clearly apparent the inflexible purpose.

London Cable. —— Distinguished Wilson, has rejected the Pope's peace proposals.

In a note despatched last night, and made public here to-night, the President says that, while every heart not blinded and hardened by the terrible war, must be touched by the moving appeal of his Holiness, it would be folly to take the path of peace if it does not in fact lead to the goal he proposes.

To deal with such a power as the present rulers of Germany upon Pope Benedict's plan, declared the President, would involve a recuperation of the strength and renewal of the world domination of that power now balked, but not defeated, after sweeping a continent with the blood of innocent women and children and the helpless poor, as well as of soldiers.

Permanent peace must be based upon the faith of all the peoples and upon justice and fairness and the common rights of mankind, he adds, and "we cannot take the word of the present rulers of Germany as a guarantee of anything that is to endure, unless explicitly supported by such conclusive evidence of the will and purpose of the German people themselves as the other peoples of the world would be justified in accepting."

TEXT OF THE NOTE.

"August 27, 1917.

"To His Holiness Benedictus XV., Pope.

"In acknowledgment of the communication of your Holiness to the belligerent peoples, dated Aug. 1, 1917, the President of the United States requests me to transmit the following reply:

"Every heart that has not been blinded and hardened by the terrible war must be touched by this moving appeal of his Holiness the Pope, must feel the dignity and force of the humane and generous motives which prompted it, and must fervently wish that we might take the path of peace he so persuasively points out. But it would be folly to take it if it does not in fact lead to the goal he proposes. Our response must be based upon the stern facts and upon nothing else. It is not a mere cessation of arms he desires, it is a stable and enduring peace. This agony must not be gone through with again, and it must be a matter of very sober judgment what will ensure us against it.

"His Holiness, in substance, proposes that we return to the status quo ante-bellum, and that then there be a general condonation, disarmament and a concert of nations, based upon an acceptance of the principle of arbitration; that by a similar concert freedom of the seas be established; and that the territorial claims of France and Italy, the perplexing problems of the Balkan States, and the restitution of Poland be left to such conciliatory adjustments as may be possible in a new temper of such a peace, due regard being paid to the aspirations of the peoples whose political fortunes and affiliations will be involved.

BASIS IS LACKING.

"It is manifest that no part of this programme can be successfully carried out unless the restitution of the status quo ante-bellum furnishes a firm and satisfactory basis for it. The object of this war is to deliver the free peoples of the world from the menace and the actual power of a vast military establishment, controlled by an irresponsible Government which having secretly planned to dominate the world, proceeded to carry the plan out without regard either to the sacred obligations of treaty or the long-established practices and long-cherished principles of international action and honor, which chose its own time for the war; delivered its blow fiercely and suddenly; stopped at no barrier either of law or mercy; swept a whole continent within the tide of blood—not the blood of soldiers only, but the blood of innocent women and children also and of the helpless poor; and now stands balked, but not defeated, the enemy of four-fifths of the world. This power is not the German people. It is the ruthless master of the German people. It is no business of ours how that great people came under its control or submitted with temporary zest to the domination of its purposes; but it is our business to see to it that the history of the rest of the world is no longer left to its handling.

MEANS RECUPERATION OF STRENGTH.

"To deal with such a power by way of peace upon the plan proposed by His Holiness the Pope, would, so far as we can see, involve a recuperation of its strength and a renewal of its policy; would make it necessary to create a permanent hostile combination of nations against the German people, who are its instruments; and would result in abandoning the new-born Russia to the intrigue, the manifold subtle interference, and the certain counter-revolution which would be attempted by all the malign influences to which the German Government has of late accustomed the world. Can peace be based upon a restitution of its power or upon any word of honor it could pledge in a treaty of settlement and accomodation?

"Responsible statesmen must now everywhere see, if they never saw before, that no peace can rest securely upon political or economic restrictions meant to benefit some nations and cripple or embarrass others, upon vindictive action of any sort, or any kind of revenge or deliberate injury. The American people have suffered intolerable wrongs at the hands of the Imperial German Government, but they desire no reprisal upon the German people, who have themselves suffered all things in this war, which they did not choose. They believe that peace should rest upon the rights of peoples; not the rights of governments—the rights of peoples great or small, weak or powerful — their equal right to freedom and security and self government and to a participation upon fair terms in the economic opportunities of the world—the German people of course included, if they will accept equality and not seek domination

REAL TEST OF PEACE PLAN.

"The test, therefore, of every plan of peace is this: Is it based upon the faith of all the peoples involved or merely upon the word of an ambitious and intriguing government; on the one hand, and a group of free peoples on the other? This is a test which goes to the root of the matter; and it is the test which must be applied

"The purposes of the United States in this war are known to the whole world—to every people to whom the truth has been permitted to come. They do not need to be stated again. We seek no material advantage of any kind. We believe that the intolerable wrongs done in this war by the furious and brutal power of the Imperial German Government ought to be repaired, but not at the expense of the sovereignty of any people—rather a vindication of the sovereignty, both of those that are weak and those that are strong. Punitive damages, the dismemberment of empires, the establishment of selfish and exclusive economic leagues, we deem inexpedient and in the end worse than futile, no proper basis for a peace of any kind, least of all for an enduring peace. That must be based upon justice and fairness and the common rights of mankind.

CANNOT TAKE KAISER'S WORD.

"We cannot take the word of the present rulers of Germany as a guarantee of anything that is to endure unless explicitly supported by such conclusive evidence of the will and purpose of the German people themselves, as the other peoples of the world would be justified in accepting — without such guarantees, treaties or settlements, agreements for disarmaments, covenants to set up arbitration in the place of force, territorial adjustments, reconstitutions of small nations, if made with the German Government, no man, no nation could depend on. We must await some new evidence fo the purposes of the great peoples of the Central Powers. God grant it may be given soon, and in a way to restore the confidence of all peoples everywhere in the faith of nations and the possibility of a covenanted peace.

"Secretary of State, for the United States."

RUSS NOW HOLD STRONGER LINES

And Are Standing Firm On the Riga Front.

Are Holding Back Huns On All Fronts.

Washington Report —— Renewed confidence in the ultimate ability of the democratic elements in Russia to triumph against all "enemies within and without" was expressed by President Wilson to-day in a cablegram to the National Council Assembly of Russia, which met at Moscow to-day. President Wilson also sent assurances to the Assembly members that they could count on every moral and material aid which the United States is capable of extending Simultaneously with the despatch of President Wilson's message, news of an encouraging character was received by the Russian Embassy regarding the situation on the Riga front. According to the Embassy's advices, the Germans have not only not captured Riga, but are having a difficult time assaulting the new and stronger Russian lines, which are being strongly defended with machine guns by the Russians. The official advices to the Embassy stated that the Russian troops retired a few miles on the Russian front on August 22, after the Germans began intensive military activities in that area. The Russians, it was explained, evacuated certain marshy positions toward the sea, and occupied stronger positions in the direction of Lakes Babit and Schlok. The Germans tried to wrest these stronger points of vantage from the Russians, but failed, and were everywhere repulsed by machine-gun fire along the Riga front.

In the Lake Babit region the Germans maintained for four hours a sustained attack, assaulting in mass formation, but despite the impetuosity of their charges they were hurled back by the Russian troops. The new positions taken up by the Russians are those which they occupied before they began their offensive on this front in 1916. The message said that the Russians had retired to a line that is better to defend, and that they have neither been routed nor disorganized by the German advance toward Riga. According to the message, the German attack on Riga was only a feint for the purpose of obtaining advantage for German operations on the Roumanian and Galician fronts, and this theory was borne out by the fact that the German naval forces did not actually co-operate with the Germans in their attack on Riga.

Stubborn Russian resistance on all fronts has halted completely the advance of the Austro-Germans on the Riga, Galician and Russian [illegible].

HEROES WIN D. C. M.

Deeds of Brave Canadians Are Rewarded.

Washington Report.—— President Conduct Medals have been awarded as follows: Sergt. L. T. Beer, Engineers, for extinguishing a large blazing ammunition dump amidst continuous explosions; 472165 H. Cairns, for recovering two guns and holding on although wounded he refused to retire until ammunition was expended; Sergt. I. Greaves, for leading a bombing attack and capturing two guns and wiping out crews although wounded he refused to retire; Corp. H. Hooten, Engineers, for mining seven days prior to an attack; Sapper C. Clowden, for maintaining a shaft head a whole week prior to our attack, thus assuring the mines being in readiness for firing at the moment required; Corp. D. McEachern, Engineers, for dragging a wounded non-com. caught in barrage over a hundred yards to safety and investigating dugouts amidst gas fumes and shell fire; Sergt. E. Steele, Engineers, for opening a mine shaft where five men were buried and rescuing them under heavy bombardment.

8,840 IN HOSPITAL.

Wounded Soldiers Being Treated in Canada.

Ottawa Report —— Of the boys whom Canada has sent to the front 8,840 are now enrolled in the Canadian military hospitals for treatment and re-education, according to the last report of the Military Hospitals Commission, dated August 15th. Of these 7,016 are in convalescent homes, and 1,115 are tuberculosis cases in the sanatoria provided by the Military Hospitals Commission for their treatment. The remaining 679 are chiefly in general hospitals. The increase in the total population of the various hospitals over last week was only 29.

The latest return from the director of medical services in London indicates that on August 10th the Canadian soldiers being cared for in the hospitals and sanatoria in the United Kingdom were 17,312.

PAPEN SPYING IN ARGENTINE.

Buenos Ayres, Report.——Some of the newspapers insist that Capt. Franz von Papen, former German military attache at Washington, is directing the work of German spies here. Persons whose veracity is not doubted, say the newspapers, report having seen von Papen many times accompanying German propagandists, and have so reported to the British Consul.

SUICIDE'S BODY RECOVERED.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Report—The body of John C. Callahan, a Buffalo barrister, who jumped into Niagara River and went over the Falls on Wednesday, was recovered last night near the Maid of the Mist landing, and was identified to-day by his widow, who took the body home to Buffalo. She said he had been suffering from neuritis, and left home saying he was going to see a doctor.

NEW BRITISH ATTACK NEAR LANGEMARCK

First Reports Indicated Satisfactory Progress Being Made.

CROWN PRINCE FAILS

Many Counter - Attacks About Verdun Beaten by French.

London Cable.—The official report from British headquarters in France to-night reads:

"A heavy rain has fallen throughout the day. This afternoon our troops attacked the enemy's positions east and southeast of Langemarck. First reports indicate that we made satisfactory progress.

"The enemy attempted a raid on one of our posts north of Lens this morning, but was driven off with loss.

"Bombing raids and observation work for the artillery were carried out vigorously yesterday by our aeroplanes. The enemy's batteries, telephone and infantry were effectively engaged with machine gun fire. During the fine intervals the enemy's aircraft were active and aggressive. In the air fighting four German aeroplanes were brought down; three others were driven down out of control. Two of our machines are missing."

CROWN PRINCE FAILS.

London Cable.—— The Germans made numerous counter-attacks against the French line in the region of Verdun, and not only have the forces of Gen. Petain maintained their gains in their entirety, but have taken more than 1,100 additional prisoners. Likewise on the Aisne front the German Crown Prince is keeping up his offensive against the French, but here also the attempts met with complete failure.

Gen. Berthaut, commenting on the French victory at Verdun, notes that all the ground which cost the Germans last year 500,000 to 600,00 men, has been rewon, except at one point on the right bank of the Meuse, near Beaumont village, where a tiny salient about a kilometre in depth still exists.

"Our latest advance brought us into our old positions," he says, "but the Forges rivulet, being dominated north by the heights, provides only a transient front. If we push ahead it will be in view of operations on a bigger scale, of which I am afraid of indicating the objectives, particularly as they are very clear to anyone who will study the map."

"The War Office communication issued Monday night says:

"The artillery fighting has been rather violent on the left bank of the Meuse, especially in the region of the north of Hill 344. The enemy made no attempt against our new positions during the day.

"In Lorraine in the direction of Seicheprey and in Alsace at Hartmann's Weilerkop we have repulsed ten surprise attacks and have made a number of prisoners."

OVERCAME MACHINE-GUN NESTS.

In a despatch from Grand Headquarters of the French army, referring to Sunday's fighting, the Associated Press correspondent says:

"The gallantry of the French troops before Verdun carried them forward again to-day when they attacked between Mormont Farm and La Chaume Wood and advanced another thousand yards, capturing nearly a thousand prisoners. The territory to the south of Beaumont Heights and Woods almost to the village of Beaumont fell into their hands, despite the most severe German counter-attacks, which came under a vigorous fire from the French artillery. The first attack in the centre was checked for a time, but the resistance of numerous nests of machine guns was overcome by the wonderful dash of the French troops, who would not be denied. The German artillery, which seems to be weakening, has bombarded heavily of late before retiring under pressure, but the firing has been wild, and little harm has been done."

PETAIN IS CONFIDENT

"Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig telegraphed Gen. Petain commander-in-chief of the French armies, as follows, on the 22nd inst.:

"'All ranks of the British armies in France join me in hearty congratulations to you and your gallant armies on the splendid results gained at Verdun yesterday. The enemy will not be able to endure many more such blows.'

"Gen. Petain replied as follows. 'Hearty thanks for the kind congratulations of the gallant British troops, who have so brilliantly distinguished themselves again during the last few days in Flanders and at Lens. It will touch the hearts of the soldiers of Verdun, who are united to their allies by a common determination to win and a common assurance of success.'"

A writer in the West points out that there is abounding prosperity in that part of Canada. In Saskatchewan alone in this year over 15,000 new automobiles have been purchased, the total in use in the province being 80,000 or over one car to every 25 persons. People in Bruce county will hear with pleasure of this prosperity which exists in all parts of the west. Of course, it cannot always be taken to mean that because a man has bought a car that he is much better off. It sometimes means that he has taken the money which was producing interest and put it into an automobile, creating expense.

Mr. F. B. Carvell made public in the House on Friday that 176 officers on the staff in military district no. 6, which includes New Brunswick, cost the country $400,000 yearly. Added to this the allowances which the wives of these officers receive, the yearly expense is $600,000. This is a very serious matter, especially as it was stated of these men that very few ever get overseas, and this is the kind of reckless extravagance which the military system is responsible for. Canadians generally are loth to question the sincerity of men who don the King's uniform, but when such statements as these are made public the people have a right to a thorough investigation and a prompt remedying of any such squandering of public funds.

A "Citizen" writing to The Walkerton Telescope complains that the condition of the cemetery set aside for the burial of the poor from the house of refuge, is most forsaken and ill-kept. The letter states it is wild with weeds and not even levelled, and that rubbish is littered about. The writer also says that the last unfortunate to be buried there had not even the attendance of a clergyman and that the body was put into the grave by the hired man. If these conditions are true the people of this county should see that the reeves of the county council are asked to enquire into this matter. The poor we have always with us, and those who are unfortunate enough to spend their last days in our house of refuge should be accorded a proper burial. The county as a whole should be glad to provide charity of the nature of a refuge for its old and feeble, who have none of this world's goods, and while some may desire to sit in judgment on the lives of those who have not been so fortunate as they, it is well to remember that, "six feet of earth makes us all of one size."

The United States authorities have troubles with drafts. Canadians naturally believe that the system works out easily and well. But in the large cities hundreds endeavor to evade the draft registration and it is necessary to have quite a force of officials to hunt up the delinquents. Many excuses are given against being drafted. But on the whole the U. S is getting its army together quickly.

Little Help for the People

Canada's $25,000 a year assistant manager to the fuel controller has little to offer of real assistance to the people in obtaining coal for the coming winter.

Last week he issued a circular calling upon the people to help themselves by practicing economy in fuel. He suggests that the use of coal be left off until the last moment, and that other substitutes be used.

This is fine advice, but rather childish People are not wasting much of the stuff they are paying eight to ten dollars a ton for. However, if that's the best the high-salaried official can do, our people should co-operate as much as possible and endeavor to save as much as they can of coal.

The fuel controller might have gone further and suggested that families double up for the winter, or that the smaller families board.

Canadians have been told repeatedly by the authorities that the coal problem was one of transportation only, and that there is lots of coal. Then why does the fuel controller not control, and force the situation with the railways? Canadians expect something from a $25,000 a year employee.

Slump in Munition Orders

Orders for munitions from the Imperial Government are not coming to Canada, the British workmen being able to turn out all the army will require.

This creates a rather awkward situation here. There are 200,000 people employed in making shells in Canada. Some of the large firms have been laying off men lately, and as a result some two or three thousand are already idle

The situation will likely become worse These men earned large pay and if say, one-half of the orders for shells were to cease coming to Canada it would throw out of work 100,000 persons earning perhaps three million dollars a week. Most of this large amount was spent by these men as they received it. It will mean spending will slacken and create considerable stress all around.

Of course, there is bound to come a time when munition making must cease, but Canadians had hardly planned for that contingency so soon. There will be considerable difficulty in placing these men. Recruiting will be helped while other industries working short-handed, may absorb some of them.

This condition of placing men will be very serious after the war is over, and one of the things which should interest Canadian authorities a little more than it has, is proper organization for looking after the soldiers when the war is over.

Some Fine Schools

Autoing through Orford township several beautiful school grounds may be seen. One especially fine lay out is that of S. S. No. 2. The building was erected in 1880, but with its pretty surroundings it looked to be quite a new place The windows contained well-arranged flower boxes, there were neat cement walks, and fences and the lawn and the flower beds were a delight to the eye. Through Kent county several fine buildings were noticed, also in Elgin. But especially was it true that nearly all these schools had beautiful grounds, and best of all they were not allowed to grow to to weeds during school holidays. They were still cared for.

Surely the boys and girls who pass through these schools will have a desire for the beautiful in nature and will thus be better men and women.

What is more impressive than neat and well kept buildings and grounds in country and small-town schools?

Afternoon Tea for Red Cross Friends

Many ladies were present at the "afternoon tea" at the beautiful summer home of Mrs. Hancock at Gobles Grove, on Thursday.

Mrs. Hancock very kindly offered to give the tea for Red Cross purposes. The afternoon was most enjoyable, and the Red Cross funds are richer by $29. A number of auto owners transported the ladies to the Grove and back while the ladies spent the couple of hours in a social way knitting or sewing the while.

Mrs. Barber and Mrs. Pattison had the arrangements for the dining room, and the affair was voted a great success by the ladies, who returned their thanks for the enjoyable hospitality of the hostess, Mrs. Hancock.

France, July 11th.

"We are at present out for a rest and therefore bombproof. It would be much more pleasant if we were having it farther back of the line and near some big town as that would be a more complete change of environment for all of us. As it is I have only been any distance from camp once last Sunday, and as all the large towns are out of our area we have to get passes from Corps. H. Q to go beyond it, and that is a great nuisance.

To go anywhere we simply go out on to a traffic road and wait for a lorry. Sometimes we have to wait a long time and sometimes no time at all, but it is either that or walk for the poor subaltern. Sunday we were lucky and got a R. F. C car that was almost an automobile and we passed everything on the road.

I have got a few souvenirs which I am sending home; no helmets or things like that, just a couple of books which I found open in a dug out, as if Fritz had left them that way, and some other things. These were all got down in the cellar of a brewery to which an entrance led down from a gun pit concreted. There would easily be room for two battalions in this cellar and it was fairly bomb proof as there was a double roof over it. Fritz had made himself fairly comfortable as there were beds and tables and stoves and clocks and other things lying about all over it. But it was easily seen he had cleaned most of his stuff out when he decided to evacuate it. Our heavy shells had broken through in a few places and it is to be hoped got some of those sleeping beneath. He is a thorough animal, our Fritz, for he has tunnels running out from this cellar in several directions to gun pits quite a distance away. We are pretty thorough, too, for our shells had blown his tunnels in in so many places that they were useless.

One place I noticed in the tunnel had a half moon of corrugated iron and about a foot and a half of concrete on top of that, and about six feet of earth on top of that. That sort of thing and dug outs is what we are fighting against. So it is not to be wondered at if the progress is slow. However I can assure you that the Hun is by no means enjoying this year of war, though it must have been pretty "cushy" earlier in the war compared to our open trenches year in and year out. Our system entails greater hardships on the men possibly, but it also increases their fighting spirit, for they are always eager to leave the ills they have and fly to others they know not of.

We know from our own experience that after spending four or five days in Fritz's dug outs that he has so kindly vacated for our use we are never keen to get out under a shell fire that if we were in open trenches we would think little of.

What must be the German soldier's sentiment after practically living in them all the time, for they are made of no sterner stuff than we are! In fact the Official Intelligence reports say, that prisoners state that the best German troops whose morale is otherwise good admit their inferiority to the Canadian troops opposed to them.

Did I tell you before that an intercepted German wireless after the last operations stated "that they yield ground to specially picked and trained assaulting troops." Our boys, who have had no special rest or training since Christmas time, can say how much they have had. We consider it quite the nicest compliment that could have been paid to our brigade.

The R. F. C. men in this neighborhood are betting even money that the war will end this September. I am sure I don't know how they can be so certain as it looks pretty doubtful to me and to everyone else in the line. Perhaps secrets of which we know nothing. So much seems to depend on the Russian offensive which waxes and wanes from day to day that I do not see how any one on the western front can prophesy the end of the war. You see I have come back to the war in spite of myself, so will stop now.

WONDERFUL STUFF! LIFT OUT YOUR CORNS

Apply a few drops then lift corns or calluses off with fingers—no pain.

No humbug! Any corn, whether hard, soft or between the toes, will loosen right up and lift out, without a particle of pain or soreness.

This drug is called freezone and is a compound of ether discovered by a Cincinnati man.

Ask at any drug store for a small bottle of freezone, which will cost but a trifle, but is sufficient to rid one's feet of every corn or callus.

Put a few drops directly upon any tender, aching corn or callus. Instantly the soreness disappears and shortly the corn or callus will loosen and can be lifted off with the fingers.

This drug freezone doesn't eat out the corns or calluses but shrivels them without even irritating the surrounding skin.

Just think! No pain at all; no soreness or smarting when applying it or afterwards. If your druggist don't have freezone have him order it for you.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson XI. Sept. 9, 1917.

The Benefits of Total Abstinence—Temperance Lesson.—Daniel 1: 1-21.

Commentary.—I. Hebrew captives under training (vs. 1-7). It is definitely stated that it was in the third year of the reign of Jehoiakim, king of Judah, that Nebuchadnezzar besieged Jerusalem and captured it, and carried away many vessels from the temple to his own land and put them to the treasure house of his god. In this first captivity of the nation, which marks the beginning of the seventy years of Jewish captivity, many persons of noble families were taken. Among them were the Hebrew youths, Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael and Azariah. According to Oriental custom some of the captives were to be selected and trained for important service in the land of their captivity, and this selection was to be made on the basis of beauty and intelligence. Those chosen must give promise of ability to learn the Chaldean language. The king's plan was for the chosen youths to be kept under training for three years, being fed with food from his own table and being supplied with the same kind of wine which he himself drank, and then brought before him at the end of that time for his inspection. The four youths just mentioned, then probably from twelve to sixteen years of age, were chosen for this training. For their Jewish names other names were substituted according to the oriental custom. The Jewish names of these youths had some reference to God, and their new names had reference to heathen gods.

II. The Hebrews' purpose (v. 8-13). 8. Daniel—It has been believed by some that Daniel was a relative of King Zedekiah, but the evidence is not positive. It is certain that he belonged to a noble family in Judah. He was in Babylon during the entire period of the seventy-years' captivity and lived some time after that. He died at the age of eighty-five years or more. Purposed in his heart—Literally, "Laid it on his heart." Underneath his purpose was a strong desire to keep a clear conscience in spite of the heathen surroundings. Would not defile himself with ...... the king's meat, nor ......wine—Daniel had been instructed in the law of God. The law of Moses forbade the eating of certain kinds of animals, and prescribed the manner of killing the animals which were to be eaten. The children of Israel were not to eat the blood. It was customary for heathen people to offer their food and drink to their idols by pouring out portions on the ground. They would not observe Jewish methods in slaughtering their animals, and the Hebrew youths would be conscious or ignorantly violating the principles that had been established in them by their early training. In order to escape the possibility of such violations, they resolved to eat the kinds of food that would involve no sacrifice of principle. "The king's dainties" would not furnish them better nourishment than their chosen food, and they might be injurious to them; and as for the wine, they would abstain from it utterly, for their principles would not admit of their using it. The prince of the eunuchs—Ashpenaz (v. 3). Servants of this kind were employed in many Oriental courts and sometimes became very influential with the monarchs whom they served. 9. Into favor and tender love—The revised version, "To find kindness and compassion," is more exact. Ashpenaz became favorable to Daniel as soon as the latter made the request mentioned in the preceding verse. Besides this, the Lord was directing the course of Daniel and was moving upon the heart of the prince of the eunuchs to the end that the future prophet might have a standing at the court of Babylon. 10. I fear my lord the king—Ashpenaz had received his orders, and it would endanger his life to disobey them. Oriental monarchs were despots, had the power of life and death, and did not hesitate to exercise that power (Dan. 2: 5, 12) at the slightest provocation. This servant was responsible to the king for the physical condition and intellectual advancement of the Jewish youths. Worse liking—"Worse looking."—R. V. In worse condition.

11. Melzar—"The steward."—R. V. Melzar is not a proper name, but this term denotes the rank of the official who had the particular oversight of Daniel and his companions. 12. prove thy servants—Daniel and his companions had confidence in the course they desired to take. They believed that if they honored God in keeping his law he would bless them and give them prosperity. ten days—Farrar calls this "a sort of mystic Persian week." It was long enough to give an idea as to the effects of the diet. pulse—The word means leguminous food, such as beans and peas, but is used here in a wider sense to include vegetable foods in general. water to drink—The wisdom, as well as the piety, of the Hebrew young men was shown in their purpose to abstain [illegible] strong drink. [illegible] alcoholic beverages help the worker. It does [illegible] rather [illegible] it. It does not increase physical endurance, but diminishes it; it does not add to the [illegible] the individual [illegible] but reduces it. [illegible] the point which God has [illegible] 13. let our countenances be looked upon — The countenance is an excellent index of the mental and physical condition. Temperance always stands the test.

III. The Hebrews' success (vs. 14-21). 14. he consented "He hearkened."—R. V. The Hebrews were firm in their purpose, but they were courteous in the request which they made. The steward may have been the more ready to grant it since the test was for only ten days; and if the Hebrew youths did not thrive during that time there remained nearly three years of training, during which any [illegible] disadvantage could be overcome. 15. It appeared fairer, and they were fatter in flesh (R. V.)—It is an evident fact that those who gave themselves over to the pleasures of the flesh bear the signs of dissipation upon their countenances. The Hebrew youths were obeying their consciences and had a firm trust in God, therefore they throve upon the healthful diet which they chose. 16. Melzar took away the portion of their meat.—"The steward took away their dainties."—R. V. The ten-days' test had been so satisfactory that the steward considered it safe to continue to give the Jewish youths the kind of food and drink which they desired. 17. God gave them knowledge, etc.—The record plainly declares that God was the source of their advancement. It was he that prospered them in their course of abstinence. 18. end of the days—At the end of three years (v. 5). brought them in—Not only Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael and Azariah, but all the youths mentioned in verses 3 and 4. 19. the king communed with them—Nebuchadnezzar talked with the young men with a view to ascertaining the progress they had made during their positions in which he desired their service. He found the four total abstainers superior to the others at every point. before the king—As his personal attendants. 20. ten times better—The term "ten times better" means greatly superior.

Questions.—Who was Daniel and how came he to be in Babylon? Who were his three companions? What request did Daniel make and for what reason? In what respect was this a wise request? What was the result of the ten-days' test? How long was the course of training given to the young men? What was the object of the training? What was the result of the course which the youths took?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Freedom in captivity.

I. Gained by loyalty to God.

II. Won by temperate living.

I. Gained by loyalty to God. The first chapter of Daniel is introductory to the whole book, giving an account of the selection and education of Daniel and his three companions by direction of the King of Babylon. Daniel was a young man of intense religious convictions, a true patriot, possessed of a powerful mind, upon whom numerous and weighty influences were brought to bear. Nebuchadnezzar, proud conqueror of the nations, purposed to turn the superiority of the four young Hebrews to account in his own kingdom. He proceeded to subject them to the habits and discipline which should naturalize them to his own country. As he had poured the treasure taken from the temple of the God of Israel into the temple of his heathen god, so he hoped to adapt the human treasure he had conquered to the purpose of his religion and its institutions. Daniel and his friends were wholly at the mercy of the king and his servants. Only one possessing more than ordinary strength of character could have withstood the tendency of such an education and continued at that heathen court, Jewish in thought, sympathy and religion. It was the design of Nebuchadnezzar to make Daniel and his friends subverters of Israel's national faith. With the resolution of deep conviction, coupled with his integrity, Daniel took his duty and did it. He stood practically alone in his conclusion that to partake of heathen food was a dishonor to God. Though a youth in a pagan court, he was not overborne by its evil influences. He gave himself to a certain definite purpose which he deliberately formed. From the beginning of his career Daniel was a true witness for the truth. The favor of God was more to him than life. Perhaps the low state of religion in his own land had served to increase in him the sense of responsibility for an absolutely true course in the matter which confronted him in the heathen court. In refusing the king's meat, Daniel proclaimed himself the follower of another religion, obedient to another God. His conduct was an indirect avowal of his Hebrew faith. He resolved at all hazards to be true to it. God vindicated his cause. Among all the Old Testament saints Daniel towers high as one of the superb specimens of manhood. His record is without parallel.

II. Won by temperate living. King Nebuchadnezzar was a tyrant and a despot, accustomed to having his own way, and his slightest order obeyed as law. The prince of the eunuchs, though high in favor and authority, knew what it was to tremble before the wrath of his monarch. He expressed a just estimate of it when he answered Daniel. It was not a trifling matter for the four young Hebrews to free themselves from the order of a jealous king whose slaves they were, since by such a course they endangered their lives. Daniel's courage was victorious. His heart was fixed. His personal resolution became the resolution of his companions. From his example they gained the firmness of his companionship. At the outset they took their stand on the side of right to resist the appearance of evil, however plausible. God was preparing them to do service for His church when it was in danger of being trampled under foot in the highway of the nations. The four Hebrews modeled their conduct so that their public profession and public acts should help in the hearts of their humble fellow men in captivity a spirit of patriotism and of reverence. They stood aloof from anything which was in opposition to God's law. They scrupulously maintained the moral and religious principles which had been implanted in their minds in their earlier education. Their consistent, godly, upright lives proved in heathendom the great benefit of temperance and true respect for the worship of God. Their tact and skill were commendable and necessary. "God's added blessing insured success.

SHEEP PARASITES AND HOW TO CONTROL THEM

Nodular Disease and Lung Worms Cause Death

There is another parasite causing serious disorders in sheep in many places. This is a roundworm known as Strongylus contortus, and in some instances creates sad havoc in the animal it attacks. It appears to prefer the fourth stomach of the animal, as its habitat rather than any other part of the economy. The disorder produced by this worm is familiarly known in the more southern latitudes of this country, as Lombrix, a somewhat ambiguous term inasmuch as it is a Spanish word, meaning a worm. The parasite produces characteristic symptoms, which can be recognized with more or less certainty by those who are familiar with the disorder, although it is perhaps unfortunate that they closely resemble the symptoms produced by other worms in the intestines, and, indeed, are often accompanied by other worms, so that it becomes a matter of some difficulty for the veterinarian to decide which of the two is producing the greater disturbance.

CONTRACTED BY EATING THE EGGS!

The sheep which is affected with them will be seen to hang behind the rest of the flock and have a marked expression of general languor. The head will hang and ears will droop; there will also be an expression of general debility. The bowels will frequently be costive, but in many instances this gives way to diarrhoea; the appetite of the animal will be capricious. In some instances I have noticed extreme prostration, even to the extent that the animal lay upon its side, little more than a lifeless mass.

If there is a special desire to diagnose the disease with more certainty, a careful examination of the faecal discharges from the animal, by the aid of an ordinary magnifying glass will sometimes reveal the presence of the worm. Should it not be found and the animal eventually die from an unknown complaint, a post mortem should be held and attention directed to the fourth stomach, where, if these worms are the cause, they will be found in vast numbers—their movements can be readily detected, as they wiggle about in the organ, appearing to some extent as if attached to the mucous membrane of it. Those that I have observed, present a somewhat chocolate hue and look like so many brown hairs about, say, an inch and a half long. They vary considerably, however, as far as their length is concerned.

It is believed that sheep contract this disorder by consuming the eggs, which fall to the ground along with the worms which infected other sheep and that when these eggs arrive at the fourth stomach of the sheep, finding a suitable habitat, they develop there.

I have found the spirits of turpentine and milk more effectual with this disease than any other agent which I have used. Add one part of spirits of turpentine to 16 parts of milk. The dose is from two to four ounces for each animal, according to the age of the patient, repeated in two days if necessary, and again in two days after that. The disease may be prevented to a large extent by requiring sheep to eat out of mangers and drink from troughs which have not been contaminated by affected sheep. The medicine should be administered in the same manner as was described in the last disease (see Countryman, page 924, issue of July 21st).

APPLY REMEDIES IN EARLY STAGE.

On several occasions I have been consulted concerning an outbreak of disease in sheep, the owners stating that the animals seemed to sicken and die without any apparent cause. I have, in some instances investigated these outbreaks and have found the walls of the bowels from beginning to end, affected with a peculiar beaded appearance, which was most striking. I have noticed that by drawing the small bowel through the fingers a sensation would be produced upon them which would remind one of a string of beads where the beads were a few inches apart. In other instances the nodule will assume considerable dimensions, being as large as a bean. When cut into, the nodules will be noticed to contain a green, cheesy-like substance, which has reminded me in some instances of the meat of the green pea. This disease may invade the economy of an animal to a considerable extent without apparently doing much harm. But when the bowels are as badly affected as I have seen them it is pretty evident to me that they were the cause of the sickness and death of the animal.

It is quite unfortunate that we cannot diagnose this disease with anything like certainty during the life of the animal. Having found it in some dead creatures our suspicions might be aroused, knowing that the whole flock had been treated about alike as far as external surroundings were concerned, so the exposure would be practically the same in all individuals. The worm causing this disorder may be found in the nodule by means of an ordinary, low-power magnifying glass.

This disease has not been investigated from a curative standpoint sufficiently to enable the writer to speak with anything like encouragement so far as individual medicines are concerned in overcoming it, although experience with like disorders suggests that treatment may profitably be applied, once we discover a specific for these organisms. The remedy should, no doubt, be used in the early stage of the disorder before it has time to weaken the constitution of the animal to such an extent that it might be doubtful if it would regain its original tone, even supposing the parasite was destroyed. It is probable, however, that some of the remedies used for intestinal parasites will answer very well for this if given in time.

As the disease is believed to be disseminated or spread from animal to animal by eggs dropping to the ground from affected sheep and taken from the pastures or drinking water by healthy animals, the cutting off of this means of circulation is a certain way of preventing this disorder, and sheep which are known to be healthy should be kept on new pastures by themselves and required to drink from troughs which have not been contaminated by diseased animals. If the sheep are fed from troughs instead of the ground, the chance of dissemination of the complaint are reduced to a minimum.

COUGH VIOLENTLY, SKIN WHITE.

In one or two instances my attention has been called to flocks of sheep which exhibited certain peculiar symptoms, to wit: The animals would possibly be lying quietly on the ground without suffering any unusual inconvenience, but if required to rise somewhat suddenly a paroxysm of coughing would be brought on and the creature would, in some cases, suffer great inconvenience thereby, even to the extent that it would be threatened with suffocation. The animals would be debilitated more or less according to the severity of the attack. Young worms are usually found in young animals, and the disease is sometimes called verminous bronchitis, it being dependent upon worms in the bronchial tubes which irritate these tubes under certain conditions, to an extent that the cough previously alluded to, will be brought on. Not only this, but the animals are often poorly nourished, and may have a copious nasal discharge, in which fragments of the worms can occasionally be discovered. The wool is easily pulled off, exhibiting a white, bloodless skin underneath, which peculiar appearance has given rise to the name "paper skin disease." The parasite which causes this disorder is technically called the strongylus filaria.

Of all the remedies which have been used by the writer, preference is given to turpentine. It is known to those who study the actions of drugs that turpentine is eliminated from the system to some extent by the lungs. During its passage through these organs it has a very baneful effect upon the lower forms of animal life which may invade them, and no doubt causes their destruction. The medicine may be administered in the same doses and in the same manner as recommended in the foregoing for worms. I have on some occasions resorted to the fumigation of the bronchial tubes with fumes of sulphur, and while, if judiciously applied, it will have a good effect, care must be taken that this line of treatment is not overdone, as by so doing more harm than good is likely to result.

Another worm which invades the lungs of sheep is strongylus ovispulmonalis. It seems to invade the lung substance itself and gives rise to a disease which, to a casual observer, resembles tuberculosis very much indeed, there being nodules of variable size on the surface of the lung, which in some instances contain pus. The nodules resemble very much the miliary appearance of tuberculosis. These two lung diseases often accompany one another and are overcome by the same kind of treatment, but it must be admitted that prevention is better than cure, and if the locality is free from the disorder the greatest care should be taken to keep the disease out, which can only be done by placing certain restrictions in the shape of quarantine upon new importations. Strange sheep, if permitted in the locality, should be kept by themselves for a month or two, and if found affected with any disease of the verminous or worm-like nature, the pasture upon which they have run during the quarantine season should not be used for healthy sheep for a season or so.

SUNDAY AT HOME

THE REFUGE.

My faith grew weak in sorrow's night,
So long delayed the morning light!
The bitterness, the mystery
Of pain and loss that came to me,
Against my soul hard onslaught made,
I trembled—I was sore afraid.

And then I saw a sweet, strange thing
That filled my soul with wondering;
The clouds hung black, the lightning flashed
In deadly fire, the thunder crashed—
And through it all a little child
Lay in its mother's arms and smiled!

Ah, sweet for me the lesson learned,
To God's strong refuge then I turned,
Securely held from life's alarms
Locked in my Father's arms,
And in that sure abiding place
I smiled into His loving face.

LET YOUR SPEECH BE ALWAYS WITH GRACE.

A word fitly spoken, is like apples of gold in pictures of silver. As an earring of gold, and an ornament of fine gold, so is a wise reprover upon an obedient ear.—Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers.—A good man out of the good treasure of the heart bringeth forth good things: and an evil man out of the evil treasure bringeth forth evil things. By thy words thou shalt be justified. The tongue of the wise is health.

They that feared the Lord spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name.

If thou take forth the precious from the vile, thou shalt be as my mouth.—Therefore, as ye abound in every thing, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, see that ye abound in this grace also.

SPIRITS.

(By the late Rev. H. T. Miller.)

What is a spirit? It is a flake from the eternal snows, a particle of foam from the eternal seas, an intuitive monition from the eternal mind. It is more! We come nearer, we are of God. Our bodies are from our mother, our spirits are from God; our bodies began to be, we are not sure that our spirits ever had a beginning. Our spirits are the essence of our personality. We are in the body, but we are not of it, by an easy process we can go on an excursion, and leave the body behind. We do this in sleep, when the ship has no helmsman; we do this when, in the full use of our powers we go into a region that is sexless, fleshless, timeless. We stand in the definition of the Master, "They are as the angels of God." This is easy, but it is amazing. Here is the simple life, the pure life, the Christ life. We can live it here, because spirits ever live in the present tense. Our spirits are perfect, whole (holy) not in part, but whole, because they are from God. It is only when we enter the region of the flesh, that we find darkness, sin, confusion, separation, which is only another name for hell. A spirit needs no food or clothing, does not go on journeys, is independent of time. Mountains and oceans are nothing: it never tires, never sleeps, never wears out; it never grows. What do you mean by growth? A town grows, trees, birds, bodies grow, but they reach the limit, and then begin to die, but the spirit never dies; there is no sunrise, no sunset to the spirits that are of God. The law of growth is on earth, not in heaven. "They neither marry nor are given in marriage," there is no increase; there is no decrease. If there is a past to the spirit of man, there is no future, but one eternal now, because we are of God. If the spirit grew it might go from normal to abnormal, then to dimensions which men might call monstrous.

They dwell in spaces where there is no night,
Where shadows come not, but the shade of light.
Their goods are carried free on ambient air.
Their vital breath is one unceasing prayer.

Their robes are woven in the loom of dew.
Their girdles dyed in shades of purest blue,
Their shoes are dainty, fleeting as the wind.
They move in regions of eternal mind.

They serve, they wait; they gather in the store,
The mighty harvests from the fields of yore.
They listen to His voice of human sound,
And thrilling notes for ever more abound.

H. T. Millie.

Can a man prune his family tree by cutting off the undesirable branches in his still?

GIRDLES AND BELTS

For mere accessories, belts and girdles are certainly receiving an amazing amount of attention just at the present time. Fashion is as it were, making up for past neglect, and she certainly is doing it royally.

Never were belts and girdles more gay, so unique, so altogether important. But a word to the well-dressed—they're not to be worn on frocks or coats that already have a sufficient amount of ornament. That's one of the mistakes that some women have been making lately. The new belts and girdles are for the frock or suit that isn't already gaily embroidered or trimmed with bright material or has too many broken lines. Just because the new belts and girdles are so striking they must be worn only with costumes that are more or less plain, even severe.

The new belt must not be drawn tight. It is merely meant to define the waistline in some of the loose-lined garments. To draw it tight would be to spoil dress and coat lines.

Beaded girdles are meeting with much success. They come in many widths and in variegated colors. The beads used are of the small size used in handbag making. A few odd girdles are composed of bright leathers or suede combined with large Japanese or Venetian beads. Metal girdles are also approved and many of the latter show fascinating Egyptian designs. Prices range from low to high, but usually from $1.50 to $6, $10 and a few at higher prices. One lovely girdle shows Egyptian motifs in the form of medallions having upon them Sphinx cameo heads upon a heavy chain of antique metal, a large pendant at the front giving a decidedly Oriental air to the pretty thing.

A cincture "throw" girdle is composed of bright large wooden beads, strung in single file, and ending with a silk tassel at each end. Another is a double chain of mottled green and blue metal with green gold filagree ornaments. Mock jewels appear in a Persian design. Jet cincture throw girdles are smart, Chinese girdles are in evidence, and there are some lovely enameled metals. All girdles and belts are comparatively narrow.

WITH ELECTRICITY.

Extreme Caution Should be Used in Handling All Fixtures.

"Electricians think nothing of touching with their fingers a 110 volt or 220 volt A. C. or D. C. switch to ascertain whether it is alive or not," says the Electrical Experimenter. "On the other hand it is claimed in a number of authentic cases on record that 110 volts, such as is used for ordinary lighting circuits, has sufficed to produce fatal results to a human being. Therefore it behooves everyone to take the utmost care in handling electrical apparatus of any nature, no matter whether it is a small toaster or an innocent looking electric light switch of the push button variety.

"A good point to keep in mind would be to exercise extreme caution in manipulating all lamp sockets or switches directly before or directly after a severe storm, which may have blown down high voltage wires so as to cause them to drop across low tension wires supplying house circuits.

"Those having electric lights in their homes should always exercise the greatest care in manipulating any of the devices connected to such service. In the bathroom especially they should never touch the socket or wall switch while standing in the bathtub or with wet feet on a floor where there is any water, as these accidents happen at the most unexpected moment. They are practically immune from danger if they would just take the trouble to see that they always stand on a dry floor."

Through Many Trials

It is in the first week of July, and it is an oppressively hot, still afternoon; there is not a breath of air anywhere; not even the least freshness the occasional breeze from the bright, still surface of the ocean, which looks hot and glittering as molten lead; and Miriam Lilly, finding it unendurable to remain indoors, has taken her knitting and gone out on the lawn to sit in the shade of the Portugal laurels and keep Lionel company—and watch and wait for the postman also.

And—away from them all—unseen by any one—unknown to any one—Imogene is standing by the staircase window, where Dumaresq first saw her, watching and waiting as well as the rest.

It is nearly four o'clock when they see the postman toiling up the hill, coming direct to Portdreath.

CHAPTER XII.

She leans over the balustrade as the servant comes through the hall with the letters on the well-worn old salver, cleaned to glittering perfection, though the silver is thin as a knife; and the fair young face is white as marble, and her eyes dark and distended with anxiety, so that when she asks the footman if there are any letters for her, the man—Borlase, her father's confidential servant and Imogene's secret antipathy—thinks he may venture on a little sympathetic familiarity.

"No, 'm, not one for you," he says, with a smirk of regret. "Only two for Sir Philip—the London postmark, Miss Imogene"—in a cautiously lowered tone, as if to satisfy some pressing inquisitiveness on the part of his young mistress, who is thus fairly entrapped into scanning the writing on the envelopes for a moment or two before she recollects herself.

And in that moment Borlase presumes still more.

"Might I make bold to inquire, ma'am, if Mr. Lionel's tutor is coming back again?" he asks, with exaggerated deferential interest. "They were saying in the kitchen that he was gone for good," he adds, with a furtive gleam in his crafty, small eyes; "but I hope that isn't true. He was such a nice person—quite the gentleman, wasn't he, ma'am?"

"I don't know, indeed, if Mr. Dumaresq will return—I have heard nothing to the contrary from papa," Imogene returns; and not even Sir Philip himself could assume more chilling reserve, or rebuking haughtiness of tone and demeanor, than Sir Philip's gentle, young daughter.

She turns away, swiftly but statelily, and goes up to the wide, old staircase window once more, and stands there again, though there is nothing now to wait for, with both her hands tight pressed to her bosom, and her sweet eyes—misty with a vague, sickening pain—gaze out blandly over the wide, lone, silvery sea.

"It can't be that I care," she whispers, with white, quivering lips. "I fancied he did, and was unhappy, and I pitied him, and—and liked him; although, of course, though he was a gentleman, he never could hope to come nearer to me."

All the pride of the proud Trefusis blood flashes up in her at the thought: all the vain, empty pride of birth in which she has been nurtured, strives for a moment successfully with her true womanly nature; only for a few moments though.

The poor child recollects him as he has been an epoch of brightness, and pleasure, and happy friendship since he entered her life in her dull, old ancestral home; well-informed, well-bred, courteous, and gallant; with honest, innate courtesy; boyishly gay, and full of strong, manly feeling at the same time; handsome, young and brave; recollects the look, passionate, bold and yet full of reverence which she has seen more than once in his bright, dauntless eyes when bent on her; recollects the hour when he lifted her in his strong, tender arms from a horrible death; recollects the hour when he sung to her, for the first and last time, the ardent words of the French song, in his soft, rich baritone voice, and when he dared to tell her, she had not rebuked him—dared to kiss her hand. The touch of his lips seems to burn there still, and as she stands there gazing out at the shimmering brightness of the sea, and the hot July sunshine glaring bright and dry on the road, down hill to the station in the valley—the road by which he went away—the road by which he will never, it may be, return again—it all grows indistinct and blotted out in a rain of tears. Silent, bitter tears, falling on her clasped hands, bitter, despairing tears, wrung from the aching, desolate pain which is quivering through her heart.

"If—if I had not been Imogene Trefusis," she whispers, for the pride of race, in which she had been submerged from her cradle, is difficult to rise above—"if I had not been Imogene Trefusis, he—he might have loved me, and stayed with us forever, and I should have been so happy! so happy!"

"It will be so lonely!" whispers the poor child, striving to cheat her heart out of its dawning womanly belief in its own feeling—"so lonely!"

The aching pain grows keener, the burning, bitter regret and longing more intolerable as the handsome face, the gallant form, rise up before her, and then fade away for aye! Had she not been Imogene Trefusis he might have loved her—vague and wild as are her innocent imaginations of what such love would be—he would have loved her, and never have left her, and life would have been so sweet and glad a thing in the sunshine of his presence, in the shelter of his strong protection, had she not been Imogene Trefusis! But now he has gone away—gone back to the busy world of life and men, and they will see his face no more!

And just then there comes a sudden clamor and outcry from Lionel's dogs on the lawn, and the sound of rapid hoofs and carriage wheels crashing over the gravelled drive; and as Imogene, with her heart leaping up in wild throbs of hope and fear, leans out in the eagerness of her impatience and looks down, she sees Richard Dumaresq entering in at the hall door.

Richard Dumaresq surely, his height, his figure, and the carriage of his head and shoulders, and yet in some way altered and different from what she had known him.

Elegantly and fashionably attired, with a certain dandyism in his air, and self-assertiveness in his step, which is new to her; and a sickening sense of uncertainty and disappointment begins to torture her.

And all the time the dogs are barking loudly, and angrily as at the advent of a strange visitor, who has incurred canine suspicion or dislike, and Imogene can bear it no longer and descends into the hall.

"Who was that who came in just now?" she asks of Borlase, who is standing midway in the hall, staring out through the open door at the waiting vehicle, which is a smart dogcart, with a smart groom in livery standing to the head of the handsome bay mare in the shafts.

"Came just now, ma'am," he repeats, staring about him still with the air of a man who is half dazed with astonishment. "Why, ma'am, it's a most strange thing, Miss Trefusis"—with his unpleasant, confidential tone, and the furtive leer in his meaning eyes—"but if you had seen him you would have declared it was Mr. Lionel's tutor come back again. There! The most striking likeness I ever saw."

"But I have asked you who is the gentleman?" Imogene interrupts, and she has an inward struggle to speak quietly, and not angrily and sternly.

"That is the most strange thing of all, ma'am," Borlase replies, with a small, mysterious cough, and the furtive gleam of his eyes; "it might be a coincidence, of course; it's not for me to say."

"Did he send in no card?" interrupts Imogene, quickly and sternly.

"Oh, yes'm! he gave his card and requested to see Sir Philip," Borlase answers, demurely, and then waits as a cat waits for a mouse.

"I have asked you the name of this gentleman, papa's visitor, twice already, Borlase!" Imogene says, with flashing eyes.

"Beg pardon, ma'am," the man says smoothly, but watching her closely, "the name on the gentleman's card was 'Captain Richard Dumaresq, —th Hussars.'"

There was a slight spasmodic drawing together of her delicate, even brows, but no other sign betrays agitation at his news. She pauses a moment to steady her voice, and then says, quietly:

"A relative of Mr. Dumaresq, I dare say," and passes on through the hall door toward the housekeeper's parlor at the further end.

Mrs. Lilly is not there; the quiet little shadowy parlor is tenantless, and for the moment Imogene is deeply thankful that it is so. For a few minutes she cannot endure that human eyes should rest on her, panting with excitement, sick with the nervousness of mingled hopes and fears, oppressed and trembling beneath the shadow of a dread.

She sits down in a little, old-fashioned rush chair, by the window, and tries not to think, tries not to hear, though the study window is open, and she can plainly discern the tones of her father's voice, though not a word is distinguishable.

Once she ventures into the hall again, near the study door, and she hears those tones in unmistakable anger, and she shrinks back cold and faint, in the summer warmth.

Then she begins to wonder, feverishly, where Miriam Lilly can be, to wonder how long the visitor will remain, to wonder with an ominous sinking at the heart what she will hear.

The minutes slip by into a quarter of an hour, and at last Imogene can bear it no longer.

"Is that gentleman with papa yet, Borlase?" she asks of that astute personage, who has found absorbing employment for the time in adjusting the cords of a window blind near the study door.

"Yes'm; he is with Sir Philip yet," Borlase says, throwing a certain significance into his tones which no one could fail to perceive, and no one could reasonably complain of. "The dogcart and groom have been waiting here three-quarters of an hour for him, ma'am."

And Imogene goes back again to the housekeeper's room, looking and longing now in the agony of nervous suspense that holds her in thrall, body and mind, for the support and comfort of Miriam Lilly's grave, calm presence.

But it so happens, strangely enough, that Miriam Lilly knows nothing whatever of the stranger's arrival, having left her seat on the lawn as soon as the post had come in, bringing no letter to her or to anyone from the absent Dumaresq, and is at the present time absorbed in inspecting the cucumber and melon frames in the gardens—as the frames in question, having been filled and planted after her own directions early in the spring, she's interested in the results in no common degree.

Another quarter of an hour passes away, and then Imogene, with every nerve at a tension and her sense of hearing strained to painfulness, gladly hears the study door open and close, and an echo of footsteps across the worn white and black marble of the entrance hall, and plainly hears the crash of hoofs and wheels as the dogcart drives rapidly away.

Minutes pass on again into another quarter of an hour. Imogene hears Miriam Lilly's clear, incisive tones speaking somewhere in the yards or outoffices—she is equal to two stewards, three gardeners and half-a-dozen yard helpers in her own proper person and in the same moment. While Imogene waits her appearance, she hears the study door open again and her father's voice giving an order to Borlase. She fancies she hears her own name, and the fancy is transformed to fact the next instant.

"If you please, Miss Imogene, Sir Philip wants you in the study," Sir Philip's confidential servant says, his smug, falsely bland face appearing at the door of the room, where his young mistress is crouching in the chair by the window.

And the nervous, despondent attitude does not escape him any more than the uncontrollable flush and start of excitement at the summons.

He marches before and opens the study door for her with punctilious deference, bows her in with the formality of a court chamberlain, shuts the door and—listens.

"I wonder what's hup?" he mutters, with a cynical grin; "something about that feller who I never liked, with his proud look and his grand-gentleman hairs, as if he was more than a hupper servant, after all! Ah, he was a deep customer, an' I never thought nothin' else."

Mr. Borlase's Cornish phraseology comes uppermost at times, when he does not carefully repress it.

Sir Philip is seated at the other side of the table, and, as his young daughter enters the room, he raises his head, and Imogene sees his cold, hard, aristocratic face, in which narrowness of opinion and pride of race are written now, in addition, frigid, displeasure, contemptuous haughtiness and resolution, and she has a prevision, clear almost as words can give her, of what she is going to hear.

"Imogene, how old are you?" he demands.

The innocent, girlish face pales to her lips, with the rapid beating of her heart, at the subtleness and strangeness of the question, and still more at the look in her father's eyes, which she knows well betokens intense anger.

"Seventeen in August, papa," she answers.

"Then you are woman enough to understand what I am going to say to you, and child enough to make me intensely displeased at being obliged to discuss such matters with you," is his retort, harshly spoken, in tones that tremble with suppressed indignation that his state of feeling must be inadequately described.

"Without any preamble in the matter," he continues, "I wish to ask you a few questions. I trust they will be as distasteful to you to hear as they are to me to speak, and I trust likewise"—there is a little gleam of paternal feeling to soften the icy pride and anger of his face and voice—"I trust my daughter to speak the truth to me as a gentlewoman!"

"Yes, papa," Imogene answers, with head erect and steadfast eyes confronting him. Sir Philip's stern rule, which subdues, cannot crush a spirit brighter and braver than his own ever was, even in his brightest, bravest days.

"Well, then, please to tell me candidly"—Sir Philip coughs and falters a little at what he is about to utter to that pure, listening face—"candidly and frankly, Imogene, if—if—that person who was employed here as Lionel's tutor—Dumaresq—Richard Dumaresq, as he called himself—if he ever presumed on his position in any way with you? I am sure, quite sure," Sir Philip says, sternly and decisively, clearing his throat, "that you, as my daughter, never gave him the least occasion to so presume; but—but—I could 'ave wished your aunt Althea were here to speak to you of this, and not me," Sir Philip says, nervously and irritably. "To me it is simply incomprehensible, outrageous, audacious beyond belief, that the man can have forgotten his position without some misleading!"

His cold blue eyes flash fiercely on his daughter's dark, sweet eyes, which are full of eager light, and on the lily-like face which has blushed like the heart of a rose.

In the excitement of shy glad amazement she forgets everything else.

"Oh, papa! Then he came back here to-day?" she exclaims. "He has just been here with you, has he not?"

"Who has?" Sir Philip shouts, hoarsely. "What do you mean, girl? That impostor—that scoundrel—who came into my house with a false name and with a false character! How dare you speak of him—of it—as if—you—Imogene! One word, and that without prevarication," Sir Philip says, meaningly. "Have you—child as you are—have you dared to forget your birth and position and encouraged that man, your brother's tutor and attendant, to—to speak of love or courtship to you?"

"No, papa," she answers, and the tender blush has faded into deathly pallor. "Mr. Dumaresq never spoke of such matters to me."

His child's dignity, even in her maidenly shame and trouble, is a rebuke to the proud old baronet's fierceness.

"Then did he ever," he persists, in a feebler tone of anger, "give you reason to think he was in love with you?"

"Before I answer that question, papa," Imogene says, firmly, although her lips are quivering painfully, and across the whiteness of her cheeks has flitted a faint flush—"I must tell you that Mr. Dumaresq is neither an impostor nor a scoundrel, but a man well-born and well-bred as any of our friends—a gentleman in word and deed!"

"Permit me to judge, madam," Sir Philip says, breathless in wrath, "on such matters as the birth and breeding of the gentlemen whom I permit my daughters to regard as friends or lovers.

"Out of your own lips I condemn you then," he continues, holding up one thin white hand, shaking with excitement. "I know the man to be not well-born, not well-bred—an impostor who trades upon a name and a high relationship to which he has no right; and it is the act of a scoundrel to betray the trust reposed in him by his employer, and to dare to employ his leisure time in his master's service in endeavoring to win the affections of his master's sister—a girl of your age, and I perceive plainly, with your tacit consent at the least. A scoundrel and a villain of the deepest dye! He knew well he dare not face exposure," continues Sir Philip, violently, for his agitation will not suffer even the aristocratic representation of a display of strong feeling, "so he invented the story of a telegram, or invented a telegram, I know not which, from a dying uncle, who only existed in his imagination, as an excuse to get far away before an exposé came!"

"Who has told you all this, papa?" Imogene asked, suddenly.

"I fail to see by what right you ask for my sources of information," Sir Philip says, freezingly.

FARM AND GARDEN

UTILIZING HEN HOUSE LITTER.

The value of poultry manure as a fertilizer depends largely on the food fed to the stock producing it, and also upon the method employed in saving the dung. Under ordinary conditions, where the birds are well fed, hen manure possesses a greater value as a fertilizer than ordinary barn manure. In tests made by one of the leading U. S. experiment stations, it was estimated that with a large, well-fed flock the amount of night droppings produced per hen per year amounted to about 30 pounds, which contains approximately about .8 of a pound of nitrogen, .5 of a pound of phosphoric acid, .25 of a pound of potash and having a valuation based on the value of commercial fertilizers of about 14 cents. As a considerable part of the manure consists of decomposed nitrogenous matter, it is necessary that some good absorbent be used for preserving the dung for use as a fertilizer. As it is ordinarily stored by simply scraping the droppings which are voided during the day when the fowls are not at roost, which amount probably exceeds that of the night droppings.

For ordinary purposes of preservation land plaster or pulverized gypsum should be freely sprinkled over the droppings and thoroughly mixed with them before they are stored in barrels. If land plaster is not available, good loam or dry muck will answer admirably. Sandy soil has very little value as a preservative of poultry manure.

The droppings should be stored in a cold, dry place until they are needed. To avoid loss it is advisable to clean off the droppings boards once a day, as such practice is also much better for the fowls; it is also a wiser course because when large accumulations of droppings are allowed to remain on the roosts the escaping ammonia is a source of discomfort and injury to the fowls, as well as a loss in the fertilizer value of the dung.

Nearly all authorities agree that hen manure is of much more value as a plant food than ordinary farm manures, and this is due to the fact that its nitrogen is in a much more available form. When used in the garden it should be applied in small quantities as compared with other manures.

KAINIT AND SAWDUST.

Besides land plaster or loam, a mixture of kainit and sawdust in the proportion of about 15 pounds sawdust, 51 pounds kainit to 30 pounds of hen manure, it is claimed will keep the dung in excellent condition, so that it can be readily broken up for use as fertilizer. Hen manure which has been stored with the simple addition of land plaster or loam should be mixed with wood ashes before being used as a land dressing. Some experienced gardeners recommend that for every bushel of a mixture of hen manure and loam, equal parts, one bushel of wood ashes be added. This mixture is moistened a little occasionally and turned over frequently to fine it before using. It is claimed that this makes a powerful forcing manure which should be used sparingly in drills.

The Main Experiment Station recommends the following as a well balanced fertilizer: Thirty pounds hen manure, 10 pounds sawdust, 16 pounds acid phosphate, 8 pounds kainit.

It states that this used at the rate of two tons per acre would furnish about 30 pounds nitrogen, 85 pounds phosphoric acid and 80 pounds potash.

AS GOOD AS GUANO.

Poultry manure is equal as a fertilizer to the best article of Peruvian Guano, and, if properly cured under cover, is worth as much as Pacific guano, which before the war sold at $50 per ton. Professor Norton says that 300 pounds of well-kept hen manure are equal in value to 11 (or 12 two-horse) loads of stable manure. Science in farming says 100 pounds of fresh hen manure contains 22.6 pounds of nitrogen, 20.8 pounds phosphoric acid and 17 pounds of potash.

Poultry manures is the richest of farm manures, but, like all others, it is in part to the fact that the urinary secretion is variable in composition. It is rich in all the fertilizing elements, but especially so in nitrogen, which is the cretions are semi-solid, and voided with solid excrements.

Poultry manure ferments easily, and is quick acting. It loses nitrogen and ammonia very easily if not properly cared for. It should be kept dry, and, if possible, also mixed with some absorbent and preservative. Acid phosphate, phosphate rock, plaster and dry earth are good materials for this purpose. Hardwood ashes (excepting as stated above), ordinary slaked lime and such alkaline materials, should be avoided, as they will liberate the ammonia, and cause it to be lost.

A hen will produce thirty to forty pounds of manure in a year, and a turkey from forty to sixty pounds.

The weekly droppings of a flock of, say, 25 hens, when scraped from the roosting platforms should be mixed with about eight pounds of kainit, or acid phosphate and a half peck of sawdust. If one desires a balanced fertilizer for form and other hoed crops, a mixture of equal parts of kainit and acid phosphates could be used. Good dry meadow muck or peat would be equally as good as sawdust, if not better, to use as an absorbent.

NOTES.

To prevent loss of plant food by fermentation and leaching in barnyards and stables, manure should be spread on the corn ground during the late winter and early spring months. Greater returns are obtained from manure spread evenly over a larger area than from the same amount scattered heavily over a smaller tract. As an average of seventeen years' test at

THE SECRET OF SILK.

Story of the English Worker Who Stole It From Leghorn.

The development of the silk manufature in England began some time in the seventeenth century, but was greatly extended through the enterprise of John Lombe, of Derby, who in 1715 went to Leghorn, Italy, to learn the secret of the Leghorn silk manufactures, a most difficult and dangerous adventure.

Visitors were allowed to pass through the factories and see the machines in motion, but could learn nothing of their construction and operation. Finally, through the good offices of a priest to whom he appealed to find him a situation, Lombe secured employment as a workman, slept in the mill, worked at a spinning machine by day and by night made measurements and plans. He worked at the mill until an English ship was sent on purpose to take him away.

He had scarcely sailed from Leghorn when an armed brig was sent after him, and he barely escaped safely to England. It is said that he died at the age of twenty-nine, poisoned by the emissaries of his Leghorn employers, but the silk manufacture was securely established, became a great industry in England and has since been established all over the world.—National Magazine.

SAVE THE CHILDREN

Mothers who keep a box of Baby's Own Tablets in the house may feel that the lives of their little ones are reasonably safe during the hot weather. Stomach troubles, cholera infantum and diarrhoea carry off thousands of little ones every summer, in most cases because the mother does not have a safe medicine at hand to give promptly. Baby's Own Tablets cure these troubles, or if given occasionally to the well child, will prevent their coming on. The Tablets are guaranteed by a government analyst to be absolutely harmless even to the newborn babe. They are especially good in summer because they regulate the bowels and keep the stomach sweet and pure. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Making Sure.

The Irish sergeant had a squad of recruits on the rifle range.

He tried them on the 500-yard range, but none of them could hit the target. Then he tried them on the 300-yard, the 200-yard and the 100-yard ranges in turn, but with no better success. When they had all missed on the shortest range he looked around in despair. Then he straightened up.

"Squad, attention!" he commanded. "Fix bayonets! Charge!"—Everybody's Magazine.

Slipper Day in Holland.

There is a curious festival known as slipper day celebrated in Holland. Slipper day in the Netherlands is the one day in the year in which the Dutchwoman claims superiority over her husband. On that day she rules him to her heart's content, and he generally obeys good humoredly enough—that is, unless she is one of those ladies not unknown in Holland or in any other country who desire to keep a rule over their husbands [illegible] throughout the year.

NOT WHAT SHE MEANT.

(Judge.)

Author's friend—Does your husband use a pseudonym in his writing?

Author's wife—He used to, but [illegible] perfectly horrid, so I have [illegible] use it myself.

Perhaps it isn't so bad to waste time if you really know it belongs to you.

ARRAN COUNCIL

Members all present. Clerk absent owing to illness. A. G. Esplen acted as Clerk. Minutes read and adopted.

Councillor George was appointed to have bridge on 4 S R, Con 6, repaired. Robt. Henderson asked to have ditching on 20 S R. No action. Councillor Scarrow was appointed to examine and see what is needed and report to Reeve. Communications from Capt. Danard to the young men who enlisted from Arran $5 each. Laid over. Clerk to write Capt. Danard. Council thought it should be made a County affair. Council then took up the estimates of 1917. There will be large increase in Tp. rates. Last year the Tp levy was slightly less than $4000, this year it is $15,687. Council had to borrow money from the new year. The chief items are as follows:—borrowed, $4000; Kennedy's bridge, $5500; Red Cross, $1000 and $2500 to finish 1917 and $1500 to have on hand for 1918, printing, stationery, salaries, miscellaneous and H. O. H. Dr is also in this sum, and it will require 11 mills in the $ to meet the levy. Last year the rate was 2 and five tenths, but should have been much higher. By-Law No 11 fixing rates was then finally passed, sealed and signed. Moved by C. A. Thomas sec by Fred. J. Scarrow—that this Council now assembled do extend our sincere sympathy to our highly esteemed friend and Clerk H. T. Potts in his severe illness and hope for his recovery. Orders to the amount of $15 were passed. Council then adjourned until Sept. 17th next.

Mr. and Mrs. S. Reech of North Bruce, visited friends here on Sunday last.

Mrs. (Pte.) George Dymer and children of Kincardine, visited at S. F. Smith's last week.

Misses Nellie and Grace Bailey were visiting at their home here.

Word came to hand that Mrs. David Esplen Sr., who has been living with members of her family in the west, died in Banff, last week. The remains are to be brought home and the funeral will take place Thursday at 2.30 p.m. from her son William's residence, to Burgoyne cemetery. Deceased had met with an accident recently and never fully recovered.

Mr. John Lamont, formerly of the B line, Arran, is visiting old friends here. Although bordering on the four score years he is still hale and hearty.

Weather permitting harvest will be well in this week. From general remarks the spring crops will beat the record of many years and threshers will have their hands full till winter. This part of the country is also full of potatoes and greens. There will be no $5 bags of tubers this year, evidently.

Mr. St. Clair, representing the Dominion Alliance took the morning service in the church here Sunday. Evening service was cancelled.

Death of Mrs. Thomas Dent

At the ripe old age of [illegible] years 4 mos. Mrs. Thos. Dent, of 8th Bruce, passed away on Wednesday night of last week. Five years ago the deceased was stricken with paralysis, and death was due to the trouble. The maiden name of the deceased was Elizabeth Wilson, and she was born in Yorkshire, England. She came to Canada with her husband in 1853. They first settled at Blenheim, but three years later came to the 8th Bruce where they lived the remainder of their days. Mr. Dent died a few years ago. Of their family there are three living Anne on the homestead, Mrs. Jos. Wrigtson, Sr. and Mrs. F. Wrightson. Mrs. Dent took an unusual interest in political and national affairs for a woman. She was just four years younger than the late Queen Victoria. In her childhood Mrs. Dent sometimes stayed with friends who occupied a position on the estate of the Duke of Kent, and so it came about that the subject of the sketch at times played with the little princess who afterwards became the Queen of the realm. Because of this early acquaintance with the sovereign family Mrs. Dent became well acquainted with history and royalty doings. She also saw some lively political times in England, and was also well versed in the events of the period. In many of our political campaigns here, notably in that of 1878, Mrs. Dent was better able to discuss such questions as the National Policy than many of the men voters, and she would have been proud indeed to have the privilege only now extended to the women to exercise the franchise. The deceased was spoken of by those among whom she lived so long as a very kindly person and a good neighbour. The funeral was held on Friday, interment being made in the U. B. cemetery, 4th con. and the services were conducted by the pastor of that church.—Advocate.

A Pound of Honey

When you eat a spoonful of honey you have very little idea as to the amount of work and travel necessary to produce it. To make a pound of clover honey, bees must take the nectar from sixty-two thousand clover blossoms; and to do this requires two million seven hundred and fifty thousand visits to the blossoms by the bees.

In other words, in order to collect enough nectar to make one pound of honey, a bee must go from hive to flower and back again two million seven hundred and fifty thousand times. Then, when you think how far these bees sometimes fly in search of these clover fields, one or two miles distant from the hive, you will begin to get a small idea of the number of miles one of the industrious little creatures must travel in order that you may have a pound of honey.—Presbyterian

West Bruce Pupils Win for Fourth Time

West Bruce Inspectorate pupils are winners. For the fourth consecutive time a pupil from Inspector Reid's district has won the coveted Halliday medal for the highest marks in Entrance exams in Bruce County.

Louise Garbutt, a Lucknow pupil, obtained the highest marks this year in West Bruce, 822, while Rose Moss secured a total of 803 in East Bruce.

In order to win the medal these papers must be re-read by an independent examiner. Inspector Burgess did the work, and declared that in the re-reading Miss Garbutt's total was 821, and Miss Moss' 803, thus giving to the West Bruce pupil the medal by a large margin.

BURGOYNE AND DISTRICT

Rev. C. C. Strachan and family moved up from Toronto, Monday of last week and are now in possession of the manse. It need scarcely be said they are made heartily welcome by the people in this community.

At the induction of Rev. C. C. Strachan Tuesday evening there was a well filled church, from both congregations. Several ministers and elders from the meeting of Presbytery in Paisley drove to Burgoyne in the evening and after a light supper in the church the meeting was called to order by Rev. Mr. Gale, moderator of the Presbytery. The induction ceremony was very simple. The usual questions were put to the called minister and answered by yes or no. Rev. Mr. Boulos who had been appointed to preach, delivered a lengthy sermon of 65 minutes. After the sermon Rev. Mr. Robertson whose part was to address the minister arose and asked the people to stand and sing "Blest be the tie that binds." His address was good and his praises of the new pastor, who was an intimate friend of his, were unbounded. To address the people was the part assigned to Rev. Mr. Mann. He having been moderator of the sessions here during the part of the vacancy, gave a short speech of how the call had been brought about and made unanimous. Sufficient to say, the addresses were all good and helpful, and that a happy evening was spent. After the introducing of the new Pastor and shaking of hands, a lunch was served and the meeting broke up at a late hour.

The remains of the late Mr. McFee, of Southampton, were interred in Burgoyne cemetery Saturday afternoon.

Miss Currie is visiting her cousin, Mrs. W. J. Pierson,

The funeral of the late Mrs. David Esplen took place Thursday, and was attended by a large number of relatives and former acquaintances. Rev. Mr. Strachan conducted the services. Deceased was another of our estimable women, who served faithfully in the front in pioneer days.

Pte. Frank Geddes Describes the Capture of Vimy Ridge

In a most vivid description of the big attack and capture of Vimy Ridge, Pte. Frank Geddes writes to his mother here. As he was among the first battalions "over" the letter will be most interesting to Times Readers :

France, May 10, 1917

Dear Mother :

Am I not right in thinking this is your birthday and how better can I celebrate it, in a captured German dugout, than by writing to you!

First you mention the devastation shown by a card I sent. That is only a pin prick to what we see out here. I am glad to say that owing to our efforts the tower on the silken card is now out of range of his guns, let us hope forever. I have noticed the French peasants starting to come back to their ruined homes all old men, and women, or very young children, for the most part. The most pathetic sight in the world to see them ploughing a patch of ground with our artillery or transports occupying their front yard or back garden.

Yes, Mother, I see beautiful sunsets, some of the most wonderful I have ever seen. As I write, I am thinking of one night I watched it set behind "our" ridge. Such a blaze, on the crest—below, the white chalk, marked by paths among the scarred and shattered trees—bushes. I couldn't help thinking that it was setting back there, on two years of British inferiority in guns, lack of shells, and all that, and that in the opposite direction, was dawning for us a new day, where everything is in our favor.

Oh, it would do your heart good to hear John Bull when he "strafes." You've heard a machine gun. Well, the morning we went over, there were several scores of these engines behind us, besides the ones we took over. They opened on a set minute, breaking the silence with a noise like a dozen combined boiler factories. And then—oh, its indescribable—the noise of innumerable field guns and heavies everything from whizz bang to 18 inch. (Now I've started, I may as well give you an idea of a modern battle.)

Before dawn we went up and took our positions in the shelter of the mine craters I have often mentioned. Crouched in shell holes, to be out of the way of any of our shells dropping short (this is unavoidable) we waited the opening of barrage, sometime about dawn. The infantry were a few yards in front of us, and as I described before, everything opens at once. To be blunt—it isn't hell let loose as it is often called—it's dozens of them. Behind, the sky is a sheet of flame, ahead—view is blocked pretty well by the craters—and it's just as well it is. The shells shriek overhead, the machine gun bullets (our own) swish after them. Away above, the planes do the observing You know then you haven't long to wait. In a minutes the infantry gets the word—we are to follow them in several minutes. As they scramble up and over the edge, we stand up and give them a cheer, more to be doing something than anything else. I remember an infantry officer signalling on the crest of a crater for his men to follow—as two ran past him a German "crump" landed beneath them—taking away their footing, and they went head over heels through space into the crater. I don't imagine they were killed, but that made me mad. So at the same minute we got the "up and over" and were away—past the pipers playing "Blue Bonnets over the Border" up to the crest and then down the slope to the German side. But in that fraction of a second as I was on the very top of things, I got an impression I will never forget. In the half light of dawn it was the wildest thing I ever saw or ever expect to see. Below—the infantry, in waves, struggling over the shell craters, behind—our barrage which formed a perfect curtain of fire—light and heavy, shrapnel and high explosive. Over and behind—yes and among them, other shells bursting, but not ours, Luckily these latter were few in comparison. Ahead of them, rockets of all colors—German signals of smoke—cordite smoke, whose acrid fumes are "the smell of battle" and which, by the way, you cough up for twenty-four hours after.

All this in a second, and then you are down the slope—all fear vanished—your one aim to be up with the [illegible]—to be there when the goal is scored. You're not exactly nervous—but strung up to a high pitch. You grab barbed wire without feeling the cut—laugh at nothing—and above all, you want a cigarette. Machine gun bullets "Zip zip" past, shrapnel "pings" right overhead, but I just had the feeling that Fritz had absolutely nothing that could touch me—that day at least.

I remember one incident—a group of us were getting our wind in the shelter of a shell hole (we carried 500 rounds of ammunition in belts) One chap lit a match—lit a chum's cigarette—then his own. I clenched my fists while I waited to see what he would do. I have always laughed at and dared that superstition of three lights being bad luck, time and again, but I didn't want to take that light then. He evidently felt the same, for he blew it out and with a nervous laugh, handed me the box, saying, "That's the first time in my life I've done that," I said it was my first, too, so he said "Well, let's hope not making three, will be good luck"—and so it proved in all three cases, I think, I just relate that as an example of the tension on one's nerves.

[A popular superstition among the soldiers is that one match lighting three cigarets is bad luck.—Editor]

But we finally reached our objective, and had nothing to do but hold it against counter attacks, which is much the worst part of the affair, as the reaction on the nerves has set in, and unless his aeroplanes are kept back, you are in for a continual shower of shells. But relief comes at last, and your part of that particular "push" is done, and there's nothing to worry about except occasional shells and the next push. Not until after, does one realize he has taken part in the largest affair Canadians have ever been in (by numbers as well as results) and one of the best planned and best executed strokes of the war.

Advertise it in The Times.

Mrs Thomas Cairns Passes Away

In the death of Mrs Thomas Cairns on Monday night the remaining member of the family of the late Thomas Cairns is taken. In three years' time the father, the daughter, and now the mother, have passed to their reward. Mrs. Cairns had attained a ripe old age, being in her 85th year. For the past few months she has been ailing, and gradually weakening until she slept peacefully into eternal rest.

She was a good woman, and one in whom all trusted, and whose memory will be revered by many friends as a patient, trustful, Christian woman. Mrs Cairns was born in Kintyre, Argyleshire, Scotland, her maiden name being Catharine Wallace. She came with her family to King township, where she was married to the late Thomas Cairns. She has been a resident here for over forty years, and was very well-known and highly-respected by all. She was a member of the Presbyterian church, and was active in all its undertakings in her stronger days. The funeral takes place at 3 p. m. to Port Elgin cemetery.

Mr. Chas. E. Moore, of Chicago, who has a commission in the United States Reserve Corps, made a hurried call on his aunt, Mrs. Morton, a few days ago, prior to leaving for instruction in this branch of Army service.

Tara Suffers Disastrous Fire

Tara, Wed. Sept 12, 6 a.m—Fire started in the pool room at 4 a. m. and before being noticed it and Scarrow's store were in flames, Mr. Scarrow and his family only escaping in their night clothes.

From the pool room it burned everything to the blacksmith shop, then across the street flaming several stores which were, however, saved.

All the plate glass in the store windows not burned were cracked and great damage was done generally to the side of the street not burned.

Division Court

Judge Greig held division court here on Thursday. There was a very small docket, the chief case being that of Blundell vs. Robertson.

Plaintiff Blundell sued for damages for Mr. Robertson's cattle destroying his garden. Plaintiff himself and several witnesses testified that the cattle had destroyed 400 hills of corn, some beets and beans, and that while they were being taken to pound, defendant offered to pay damages. The plaintiff, however, asked $35, which was more than Mr. Robertson thought fair, and hence the suit.

The defence showed that Constable Fisher and R. D. Northgrave were asked to value the damage the next morning, and they offered $3, as the corn crop was practically a failure.

Judge Greig concurred in the finding of the valuators, and Mr. Blundell was given $3 damages, but had to pay all the costs.

Otto Klein appeared for Mr. Robertson, while the plaintiff conducted his own case.

Ruth Philps is improving from a severely sprained arm.

Council Meeting

The regular meeting of the council was held Friday night. There were present Reeve Izzard and Councillors McCallum and Eidt.

The business of the session was light. Consideration of the streets was given. Some culverts, one on Market street at the Grand Trunk end, and one on Market street joining Goderich. Also culverts were considered on Goderich street south.

The price of lots sold to C. A. Philps in 1917 was fixed at $30.

The account of A. J. Vandrick against the town for sidewalk on Catherine street for $13.82 was passed. In future no claims of this kind will be paid unless work is authorized by council.

The reeve and treasurer were empowered to borrow from the bank on note to meet current expenditures.

The following accounts were ordered paid:

The Times, $39.75; George Gray, 3.70; Walter Brown, 18.00; Electric Light, 53.75; George Fisher, 70.00; Smith Bros. 3.00; N. B. Snyder, 3.60; T. Harmon 7.50; R. Wipp, $9.00; W. J. McCullough, 33.00; W. McDuff, 12.00; G. T. R. 283.25; Mouler & Co. 8.83; Lake Erie Coal Co. 137.82. Total $669.20.

Sold Fine Farm

Mr. Colin Campbell has sold his fine farm to his brothers George and Archie, who will take possession this fall. It is understood the price was $6000.

Mr and Mrs. Campbell will move to Port Elgin for awhile before taking up farming again.

Kincardine Fall Fair

Don't miss the best fair of the year Friday, September 21st. Among the special attractions this year will be a Free-for-all and a 2.40 race, with a good entry list. In front of the grand stand a programme of Scotch dancing and bagpipe playing will be presented. This will consist of twelve events. A baby show open to babies two years and under is another feature. The special prize for this is $10.00 being donated by Principal Nelson and Mr. Ed. Blaker. The pipe band will be in attendance. Remember the date Friday, September 21st.

DON'T MISS IT

It will pay you to attend the Owen Sound Fair, Sept. 11 to 13 this year, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson XII. Sept. 16, 1917.

The Fiery Furnace. Daniel 3: 1-30.

Commentary.—I. A call to image worship disregarded (vs. 1-12). It is probable that the time of Nebuchadnezzar's erection of the great image here mentioned was upon his return from the conquest of western Asia and Egypt, and his purpose was to celebrate his great victories. It is likely that the king thought that a public act of this kind would unify the various peoples of his world-empire, since all would do reverence to the same god. The image erected was ninety feet high and nine feet in width, but this may be supposed to include a pedestal from thirty to forty feet in height. The Colossus of Rhodes was fifteen feet higher than this image, and the Statue of Liberty in New York harbor is three hundred and six feet high, including the pedestal. Nebuchadnezzar's image was in all probability a representation of the chief god of Babylon, Bel Merodach, but it may have been an image of the king himself. The image was of gold, that is, covered with gold, for it is scarcely to be supposed that it was of solid gold, since it has been estimated that an image of that size would contain two billion dollars' worth of the precious metal. Some have fixed the site of the image at a point six or seven miles below Babylon, where there is a solid structure, which may have been the pedestal of the image. Strict orders were sent to all the officers of the kingdom to be present at the dedication of the image, and all the people, of whatever language, were commanded to fall down to worship it. If any failed to comply, they were to be burned alive.

II. A noble answer (vs. 13-18). 13-15. The king became violently enraged at the three Hebrews, entirely overlooking their excellence and their great service to the nation; but the hasty temper of the Oriental is proverbial, and we must let this stand as an explanation of his senseless anger. These Hebrews were three of the four who had received special training for the king's service, and who had refrained from defiling themselves with the king's meat and wine (Dan. 1: 8). The absence of Daniel from this narrative is variously explained. He may have been on government business in some remote part of the kingdom. Perhaps he was in such a high position that he was not included in the king's decree. It may be that although he was present and failed to bow the knee, no one reported him, his three companions being the chief objects of the people's envy. The three were brought before the king and questioned by him. He thought it incredible that any one should refuse to obey his edict, and he offered them another opportunity. If, however, they should fail then to fall down before the image, they would be cast into a burning fiery furnace. 16. Shadrach, Meshach and Abed-nego—For the significance of these names and the Hebrew names these youths bore, see notes on verses 1-7 of the preceding lesson. They knew the import of the royal decree, and were not surprised at the threat made by the king. They had already weighed the consequences of a refusal and were prepared to accept them. We are not careful—"We have no need."—R. V. There was no anxiety on their part in this matter; in fact, their conduct had already indicated the course they would pursue. 17. If it be so, our God . . . . is able to deliver us—The Hebrews were certain that, if the king's threat was carried out and they were cast into the burning fiery furnace, God was able to deliver them even from that. They were assured that the king would have no power over them as against Jehovah's power. They were perfectly secure in God's hands. 18. But if not—Even if God should not see fit to deliver them.

III. A Miraculous Deliverance (vs. 19-30). 19. Form of his visage was changed—The expression upon his countenance indicated fierce anger. One seven times more—"Seven times more."—R. V. The command implied that the furnace should be made as hot as possible. The order showed that the king was "full of fury." There was plenty of fuel at hand, as wood and pitch, to carry out the order. It is not known what was the form of the furnace used on this occasion. In the catacombs at Rome there are pictures which represent the three Hebrews in a furnace with the whole top open and with doors in the sides below. The flames are leaping above the top of the furnace around the Hebrews. Another suggestion is that the furnace was a pit with an opening at the top and one at the side, something like a smelting furnace. 20. Mighty men—Either men possessed of high rank or men possessed of great strength. 21. Bound—The Hebrews were bound with fetters, presumably of metal, to insure against their escape. Coats—hosen—"Coats" are the long undergarment; "hosen" is the cape that was thrown over the head and shoulders for protection from the sun.—Tristram. 22. Slew those men—The fact that the King's officers suffered death from the intense heat outside the furnace is a proof of the miraculous nature of the preservation of the Hebrews within the furnace. 23. Fell down bound—They were cast in through the opening at the top, and, being bound, were unable at first to walk. 24. The king was astonied—"Astonied" is the old form of the word "astonished." He evidently was sitting where he could view the proceedings and was alarmed at the sight of the three men unbound and walking in the furnace, and a fourth person with them. 25. Like the Son of God—"Like a son of the gods."—R. V. Nebuchadnezzar knew that no ordinary person could survive such a heat. He supposed the fourth form must be that of some deity. He knew nothing of Christ, so he surely could not have intended to say it was he. 26. Came . . . and said—The king's fury had given place to astonishment, and astonishment was giving place to admiring interest. Servants of the most high God—An acknowledgment of the power of the true God. 27. The fire had no power—Even the light, inflammable clothing which they wore was not singed, nor their hair, and there was no smell of fire. 28-30. Nebuchadnezzar was so profoundly impressed with this occurrence that he at once expressed his admiration for the youths who had the courage to stand against his decree, and go into the fiery furnace trusting in the Lord for deliverance.

QUESTIONS.—What decree did Nebuchadnezzar make? Describe the image which he set up. What was the penalty for not bowing down to the image? Who refused to worship the image? What efforts did the king make in their behalf? What command did the king give regarding their punishment? Describe the scene that the king beheld after the young men were placed in the furnace. How did the king feel toward the Hebrews after they came out of the fire? What new decree did he make?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic—Heroic piety.

I. Regarded as rebellion.

II. Triumphed over idolatry.

III. Exalted the name of God.

I. Regarded as rebellion. The lesson affords a vivid illustration of despotic power in contrast to an exhibition of true principle as the foundation of a religious life, a contrast between spiritual and human greatness. It presents the lamentable spectacle of rulers of a great nation bending before tyranny, doing homage to a creation of man. Nebuchadnezzar had been so elated by Daniel's interpretation of his dream, showing that he was the greatest of the rulers of his time, as to convert the very emblem of warning into an emblem of daring and blasphemous impiety. He regarded his success as wholly due to his idol god. His purpose was to force all who were under his government to celebrate his universal sovereignty by paying homage to the idol he erected. It was a political expedient to strengthen and consolidate his government by promoting uniformity of religion among his subjects. As long as the various nations retained a diversity of opinion, they could not be thoroughly amalgamated into one empire. Nebuchadnezzar made himself supreme dictator in matters of religion in his whole realm. God's people had been completely subjugated by the mighty autocrat of Babylon. The king was compelled to acknowledge the power and influence of three decided and holy men of that nation, a small supply to appear for the Lord God of Israel in opposition to the idolatry of the king and the court of Babylon. He was obliged either to recognize their right to religious liberty or he must suppress them. To do the former would be to undo all that was involved in the great celebration. To enforce his decree might result in increased power. In his haughtiness and bigotry Nebuchadnezzar added rudeness and insolence to idolatry and impiously challenged the might of the God of Israel while he regarded the conduct of his faithful servants as rebellion.

II. Triumphed over idolatry. It was brought to trial whether any would dare to refuse to be idolators in conformity to the whole great assemblage. These young Hebrews were called to combat the power of darkness and to vindicate the insulted majesty of Jehovah. They fulfilled the special duties as Jews and did what God had designed the Jewish people as his witnesses to do. Against royalty, public opinion and in the face of death they acted according to their conscience and refused to bow down in idolatrous worship. Their first consideration was not their earthly prospects but their personal responsibility to God. They had to oppose the will of a powerful benefactor. They had to incur the odium of an excited public. They had to forfeit the honor and emoluments of office. They had to face death in one of the most terrible forms. This they did in calm assurance, strong faith and with inflexible determination.

III. Exalted the name of God. Solely on account of their adherence to the divine cause were the three Hebrews cast into the burning fiery furnace. Firm and decided for Jehovah, they approached the eventful hour. Their example was a sermon on heroic piety and invincible fortitude. They conducted themselves with discretion, composure and presence of mind, with confidence, with steadfastness and with uprightness. They did not covet martyrdom or persecution. They gave no willing offence. The king was first to perceive that his fury and the doom he had decreed were frustrated. The three Hebrews were seen to walk unharmed in the flames, accompanied by the presence of One who seemed to have them under his protection. Nothing was consumed but their bonds, which stigmatized them as criminals. They honored God before the world and he especially honored them. Their deliverance produced a deep public impression. The impious ambition of the monarch was checked. The faith of the weak and wavering was confirmed. The welfare of the captive Jews was effectually promoted. The deliverance of those faithful servants of the Most High bore testimony to their integrity and secured their promotion in the kingdom. T. R. A.

ATTRACTIVE EXHIBIT OF GRAIN AND ROOT CROPS

The Making of an Attractive Exhibit Lies Chiefly in the Hands of Those Who Prepare It.

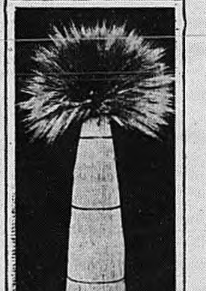
BY W. J. SQUIRREL.

The display of agricultural products at exhibitions held throughout Canada has long been part of the propaganda work in agricultural education. The value of any agricultural exhibit depends almost entirely on the preparation of the material and the exhibiting of this in such a manner that it be attractive to the eye and its educational features readily available without too much study by the public.

Undoubtedly the preparing of material is by far the larger part of the work in connection with exhibits. It should not be forgotten either that with every agricultural exhibit, a certain amount of material is required for decorative purposes. This material does not, as a rule, fit into the general scheme of education. However, the material used for decoration requires the same care in preparation as does the material which would more properly be called educational material.

MAKING A SIX-INCH SHEAF.

Grains exhibited in the sheaf are always attractive and very often make up the chief class of agricultural material shown. It is very important that all material of this class be thoroughly dried before using. Wheat, oats and barley to be exhibited in the sheaf should be cut between the period when they commence to turn yellow and the time when they would be ripe. If cut at this stage, the grain possesses a greater elasticity of straw than when cut at any earlier or later period. After cutting it should be bleached in the sun for a period of from ten to fourteen days. Exposure of these grains in the straw in a cold frame is a method often employed. With the large amount of straw and moisture present in grain crops this year, fourteen days would not be any too long for the bleaching period. At the end of this bleaching period stripping off the outer straw and exhibiting only the bright inner straw will add much to the appearance of the sheaves. This may be accomplished by ringing round straws at the joints or nodes with a jack knife, when the outer sheath is easily removed.



What could be more pleasing than this head of O.A.C. No. 21 Barley. Note how carefully it has been prepared.

The size of sheaf will, of course, depend much on the size of the exhibit. A thousand heads of wheat, barley or oats in the straw make a sheaf of about six inches in diameter at the smallest part, and nearly one foot in diameter at the butt. The most imposing and important part of the sheaf is, of course, the head. Many exhibitors make the mistake of cutting each of the straws the same length, and the head consequently square across the top. This is not only unsightly, but often results in many of the heads breaking over when tied. The accompanying photos show sheaves with heads properly shaped. It will be noted that the longest straw is that in the centre, the outside of the sheaf gradually sloping away from the centre.

TYING IS IMPORTANT.

When preparing especially large sheaves it is often a good plan to make it of a number of smaller ones. This may be done by shaping the head of the sheaf as in the former case, using small sheaves in the operation as individual straws. The sheaf is then finished off by ringing around the outside two or three layers of individual straws and heads, giving the whole the appearance of a solid sheaf. The above method is especially suitable when the grain is over-ripe and the straw brittle.

The tying of the sheaf is by no means the least important part of its preparation. The average length of sheaf will require to be tied in at least three places, and barley will generally keep its shape better if tied in four places. The first tie should be about four inches below the heads, the second about the centre of the sheaf, and the third about six inches from the butt.

The appearance of many sheaves is spoiled by tying them with a band, ordinary string or twine. Red or blue ribbon about one-half inch wide for tying material makes a nice contrast to the golden yellow of the straw, and will add much to the appearance of the sheaf.

Cutting the butt of squarely at the bottom produces a nice trim sheaf. This may be accomplished by laying the sheaf, after being properly tied, on a broad board or table and removing the ends with a large pair of scissors. The butts of large sheaves will need to be cut off in sections; in such cases the operator starts at the top of the sheaf.

Only straight straw should be used for this work. It should be of good average length and the heads should be of good size and filled with plump grain. In all cases sheaves should be representative of the variety in the class exhibited.

The well prepared sheaves should be safely packed for despatch to place of exhibition. Careless packing of sheaves will result in a ragged sheaf exhibit. The man who is a regular exhibitor of sheaves at exhibitions usually has boxes built to house this material. These special boxes require less packing material and there is less room for the sheaves to shake about when in transit. Excelsior or old newspapers, pieces of burlap, etc., all make suitable material.

While the display of sheaves at our exhibitions is each year becoming more important, it cannot yet be said that these occupy as great a space as the shelled grain. Many a ready good shelled grain exhibit is spoiled because it lacks the one great essential—uniformity—not only of amount shown, receptacles in which exhibited, but uniformity of product as well. Grain for exhibition purposes should be well ripened, as it is only when grain is thoroughly ripened that it takes on its best color and has the best general appearance. Besides possessing these two characteristics, shelled grain should be true to variety and free from weed seeds of all kinds, as well as other grains, dirt or chaff, etc.

It is possible to get these conditions in shelled grain if the best section of the field (which of course must be thoroughly clean) after being well ripened, is threshed separately, thoroughly fanned with a good fanning mill, and then possibly further improved by means of hand sieves. It is not uncommon to-day to see, shown at some of our best exhibitions, considerable quantities of hand-picked seed.

It should not be forgotten that the best shelled grain, straw and grain in the head are most likely to be found in those fields which have been seeded a little less per acre than the average. Care should also be taken to avoid selecting those portions of the field which are at all injured by rust or smut. These fungus diseases will not only spoil the appearance of the shelled grain, the straw and the heads, but are a possible source of injury to other exhibits.

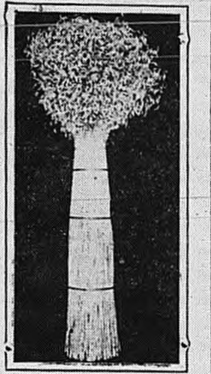
SECURING ROOTS FOR EXHIBITION.

At the period of the year when some exhibitions are held, it is difficult to get swede and fall turnips far enough advanced for display purposes. The exhibitor has, therefore, to depend largely for his root material on the mangel, sugar beet and carrot crops. Mangels in themselves make a nice root exhibit, as it is possible in this class of roots to get four distinct shapes, long, intermediate, tankard and globe. Besides this difference of shape, two different colors, red and yellow, are common in different mangel varieties. Some kinds of mangels have the natural characteristics of prongy roots and especially is this true of the long red type. In selecting this type, therefore, care should be taken to eliminate, as far as possible, this objectionable feature. The same fault is also found in sugar mangels, although to a lesser extent.

There is a tendency to-day at most exhibitions to sacrifice something in size for the sake of better quality in the roots. This last condition, too, has resulted in a root of a more uniform shape being shown. There seems to be no good reason to support the position of the man who in the past exhibited extremely large roots, as this is not the root which produces the most per acre, nor is it the root which possesses the best quality.

Roots for show should be sound, free from disease, of good size for the variety, true to shape and color of the variety or class which they represent, and, as far as possible, should be smooth in outline. They should be of good quality, indicated by firmness—not hollow or spongy. The appearance of any class of root will be improved by trimming off the prongy or small rootlets at the tip, and by removing the tops as close as possible to the root. In mangels and sugar beets it is best to twist off the tops to prevent bleeding. In turnips the tops may be removed with a knife which causes no injury to the roots.

It requires less care to pack roots for shipment than grains. They should however, be packed in such a manner that they will not be broken or the skin removed by rubbing against one another.



Such a head of Oats as shown here is always attractive. The variety is O. A. C. No. 72.

DON'T TIE GRASSES TOO TIGHT.

As has been intimated in the first part of this article, the blending and contrasting of colors is necessary if the exhibit is to be attractive. The use of fodder plants, especially of grasses and clovers, will provide this color material better perhaps than any other class of crops. Grasses should be cut just after coming into full head, and clovers at a little later period. They should then be thoroughly dried, but not bleached in the sun like grain in the straw. A very satisfactory way to do this is to bring the fodder material in as soon as cut and spread it out thinly on the barn floor, or in some covered building, sheltered from the sun and rain, but where there is a good air draught.

This class of material gives better satisfaction if tied in smaller bundles than grain sheaves. Owing to the larger amount of moisture which is present in the grass or clover bundles, even when thoroughly dried, they require to be more loosely tied than grains. If too tightly tied the heads will break down. The shaping up of heads and packing is much the same for grasses as for grains. Clovers require extreme care in packing, because of the ease with which the leaves drop off. In order that the educational features of the exhibit should be as prominent as possible, all fodder material used should be correctly labelled. As some of the grasses and clovers are known by more than one common name, the scientific name is usually mentioned as well.

The Original Macaroni.

Macaroni, which is now being strongly recommended as a cheap and sustaining food, is not at all what its name implies, for maccheroni, as Italians spell it, means a mixture, and at first was one, the ingredients being butter, cheese and flour. But to-day macaroni is the name for the familiar tubes which are compounded of hard Italian wheat and water alone. It was therefore from the original meaning of the word that macaroni poetry, in which Latin is blended with a vernacular, derived its name.—London Chronicle.

A GUIDING STAR.

Confess the error of your way
And bury the dead past.
Uplift your thoughts to higher plane
And stick until the last.

Don't think of what you might have

But be just what you are;
Let honesty of purpose be
Your future guiding star.
Sing Sing No. 66158, in "The Star of Hope."

BEHOLD HOW HE LOVED.

He died for all—Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.

He liveth to make intercession for them—I go to prepare a place for you. I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.—Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am.—Having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end.

We love him, because he first loved us.—The love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead, and that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again.

If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love.

ONE.

A congregation of one is my supreme, absorbing and satisfying study. He who did not refuse the presence of one, Nichodemus by night, the woman of Samaria by day, the thief on the cross, and Mary at the tomb, doth not refuse one, nay, brings the most delightful moments of my life, as He helps me to minister to one.

By Him I discern, with Him I suffer concern, by sanction of His presence I minister; by an educated abnegation I make no request, and thereby I am open to receive, and do actually receive, the most surprising and joyful indications of His most gracious helpfulness. Is this a spiritual partnership? Him first, and most, and best; Him near, and dear, and intertwined; fibre folded in fibre, that the dissecting knife cannot cut without destroying both.

Where are the words to help me here? I need the alphabet of the stars, and then have only words! Who can draw a diagram of the doings of Christ in you, or give a programme of the glory that is to follow?

A congregation of one. Have we ever any more than one? Is not all ministry the contact of personality on personality? It must be so. This is the way God works with man. The highest type of grace in the human heart emphasizes an immediate awareness of God, in direct and intimate consciousness of the Divine Presence. Its religion is its most acute and living stage. There have been in all ages, religious geniuses who have been made aware of a realm of reality on a higher level than that which is revealed by the senses.

A congregation of one. This is the way man works on man; some are moved by fear, some by hope, some by beauty, some are overshadowed by dreams, by storms, by unspeakable visitations of God.

If ten men are converted in one church by one man, at one time, it is not one act of the Holy Ghost lumping the ten together, but ten distinct, sovereign, peculiar acts of revelation. Where art thou, what thinkest thou, who art thou? The majestic stillness of the Divine Presence is not enough; God is an activity, moves, breaks, mends, builds: all this is personal work on persons, secret, sacred, solemnly alone. "Hast thou faith? Have it to thyself before God."

"Rest, which the weary know;
Shade, mid the noontide glow;
Peace, when deep griefs o'erflow;
We know no dawn but Thine;
Send forth Thy beams divine
On our dark souls to shine,
And make us blest."
—H. T. Miller.

Through Many Trials

"Because I believe Mr. Dumaresq has been foully slandered!" she answers, with flashing eyes. "We ought to know something of his character, papa—Lionel and I. He saved me from a dreadful death—he nursed Lionel through illness, day and night, as tenderly and carefully as if he had been his own brother or son! We have never known him guilty of an ungenerous or ungentlemanly word or deed while he has been with us," Imogene cries, her eyes glittering, her breast heaving, her beautiful color ebbing and flowing beneath the transparent skin; "but we have known him to be brave and kind, and generous and honest! He has never wronged you, papa," the girl says, passionately; "he has rendered you great service. Why have you been so ready to receive a stranger's testimony against him?"

"I have received no stranger's testimony," Sir Philip answers, sternly bending his gray brows on her, "but the warning I received which, after hearing your vehement and unladylike defense of 'Mr. Dumaresq,' I confess was surely needed—was given me by a person who knows Richard Dumaresq—'Dick Dumaresq,' they call him—from his boyhood; a gentleman whose name, unfortunately for himself, I should think, is the same as this man's, who is a sort of relative of the Dumaresq family; and, moreover, the gentleman who called on me today—Captain Richard Dumaresq, Lord Heneage's nephew and heir—came hither for a very different reason than to bear testimony against this person, who is unhappily connected with the family, as I said before. It was with the utmost reluctance Captain Dumaresq confessed the truth to me—impelled to do so, I am ashamed to say, on your account."

"On my account?" Imogene interrupts, breathlessly.

"Yes, on your account, I am deeply ashamed to say!" Sir Philip repeats, with trembling accents. "Mr. Dumaresq has been boasting about his love affair with my daughter."

"Father! It is a lie!" Imogene exclaims, fearlessly and passionately, "and if Captain Dumaresq told you so, he is a liar, and Richard Dumaresq has more reason to be ashamed of his relationship with him than he has with Richard Dumaresq. He is a liar and a slanderer, if he were the nephew and heir of Lord Heneage twice over!"

"Have a care of your language, young lady!" Sir Philip exclaims, incensed beyond measure. "You require to be kept under stricter supervision than you have been, and you shall be. I shall speak to your Aunt Althea at once on the subject. For the rest, please to learn that the gentleman to whom you are applying abusive epithets is the suitor I have accepted for Evelyn, and he will be your sister's husband very shortly."

CHAPTER XIII.

On the day on which Richard Dumaresq leaves Portdreath, he travels on through the evening and the night into the morning of the next day, and knows no fatigue, any more than he does fear and uncertainty in his bright anticipations. He is filled with hope and gladness when the dawn of the golden summer morn comes, when his journey's end is nigh, and he can see from the train gliding into the station far off the yellow shafts of sunlight gleaming over the clumps of gray, old chimneys above the dark masses of woodland that lie around his boyhood's home—the home of his forefathers before him.

Soon he has left the dust and noise and weariness of the railroad all behind him, and with buoyant step is marching up the village street to the village inn, whose doors are only just opened, and whose rooms are only just being swept by an untidy, sleepy-looking maid-servant. He has to wait some time for even the use of a room and such simple accommodations as he requires.

It used not to be so in the old days; no cheerier, brighter, easier service was anywhere to be found than at the Heneage Arms. The inn has changed hands, and no familiar face meets his eye, nor no welcoming word falls on his ear. He is glad of being unrecognized, and yet it depresses him with the first chill shadow of misgiving that has fallen on his spirit since he left Portdreath.

He is glad to escape from the strangeness of the familiar place, as well as from its discomforts, and feeling morally and physically better for a good wash in plenty of cold water, a clean shave, fresh linen and a cup of strong tea, he walks away through the sunlit village street, dappled with the cool shadow of the occasional sycamore trees, and beside the little cottage gardens, the humble flowers in the little borders, all fragrant and glistening with dew; walks on with his firm, swinging, military tread, which brings many a woman's face to the cottage doors to look after him, that and the likeness they begin suddenly to perceive.

And then presently he is entering in at the lodge gates, with their granite pillars and carved crests inclasped with waving ivy.

He pushed open the side entrance gate and passes in mechanically, and it has swung to behind him, and he is striding on into the deep, moist shade of the grand old elm trees which arch across the carriage drive for half its length, before the lodge-keeper can rush out and halloa angrily after the intruder.

And, mechanically almost, but with a joyous gesture of assurance, Dumaresq waves his hand back, and goes on, leaving the man staring dazedly after him.

"Blessed if it ain't the captain," the lodge-keeper tells his wife, "come back from Lunnon at this hour o' the day, and walking, too!"

A slight thrill passes through him at the lodge-keeper's interference, telling him plainly enough he is but a stranger and an alien here now, but the journey is nearly over, the goal is nearly reached; there is no sure reason for despondency now. He can see gleams of the gray masonry of the old court through the holes in the trees; by and by the road runs through open glades and by mossy lawns, exquisitely kept "in living green," mown and rolled to velvety perfection, with clumps of stately evergreens, or silvery-waving pampas grass here and there; and all around the grand, dark old woods closing in the sheltered, sunny paradise of close-mown lands and blossoming flowers and shining leaves, odorous of dewy perfumes, full of the melody of the song of birds; and, amid it all, while tears of deep emotion fill his eyes, and his heart is throbbing with pain and pleasure at old, fair sights, old memories bitter-sweet revived, one thought is making music in his soul, one hope makes the fair gardens around him a veritable Eden.

"My white lily would bloom in happiness in a home like this!" he mutters low to himself, smiling and sighing while he looks around. "Oh, my fair, pale darling! Sunny, sweet, old Heneage Court is a fitter place for you than cold, dreary, old Portdreath!"

And then for a few minutes he gives his fancy reins, to think of Imogene Tretusis as the fair young chatelaine of Heneage Court. Fair, innocent, young and happy—her bright presence is all those silent gardens and lonely woodlands need. She would bring a blessing with her—honor and blessing on the house and name of Heneage—sweet maiden—sweeter wife. Imogene—his wife, fair, young mother of angel children, who should call him father!

His heart aches with rapture at the thought. Imogene, his wife—Heneage Court his home. Earth could hold for him no greater or dearer bliss! How mad and wild, and wicked he had been to nearly forfeit it all! How good and kind, was the old man, who, after years of alienation, was the first to seek reconciliation.

And as he thinks thus his foot is on the doorstone and he is knocking for admittance at the door of Heneage Court.

"I will be very humble, very patient with the old man, let him say what he will to me. I deserve he should blame me and feel wronged and offended with me," Dick Dumaresq thinks, with yearning contrition in his heart as ever the prodigal felt; and then the door is opened, and a strange face meets him, and strange voices of haughty servants coldly inquire what he pleases to want.

A flitting pang of disappointment touches him for an instant. They have not been informed of the expected arrival—not the least preparation has evidently been made for the visit he has been requested to make.

But he thrusts every minor care aside before the great blessed reality of his uncle's forgiveness—his uncle's kindly feeling revived in some degree for him, for whom it had been the proud affection of a stern but loving father, which gave him a happy childhood and a favored boyhood, here in the dear old ancestral home.

He looks at the strange footmen, with their gravely supercilious faces, with a smile of good-humored impatience.

"Mr. Richard Dumaresq," he says, briefly; "the viscount expects me. Show me to him at once!"

"His lordship is at breakfast, sir," the footman says, glancing at his fellow footman with appealing indecision, "but, of course, if his lordship expects you—"

"I have said so," Dumaresq interrupts, with a flash of his eyes like the glitter of a swordblade, and the footman precedes him in silence, and passes before the door of a small, choicely-furnished room, entirely paneled in oak.

There is a fire in the room, as there used to be twenty-three years ago, and at the table, with the self-same breakfast cup of exquisite pale-pink porcelain, a Du Barri chocolate-cup, worth its weight in gold twice over, Francis Dumaresq, Viscount Heneage, is seated in the same place, in the same attitude that he has accustomed himself to for more than thirty years.

Only he himself is changed—woefully changed—with the hand of time laid so visibly on the thin, contracted figure, the white head, the deeply lined face. He starts violently as the footman announces "Mr. Richard Dumaresq," lowers the Times, which he has been perusing, and gazes, with unbelief and amazement at first blotting out every other expression on his face.

The footman—feeling less sure than ever of the correctness of the admission of the strange visitor, since he has seen that look of blank astonishment on his master's face — hastily quits the room, and scarcely has he done so when the astonished expression on Viscount Heneage's stern, wrinkled face changes to fiery pride and wrath.

"How—how dare you," he exclaims, rising to his feet, while his worn features quiver with agitation—"how dare you force yourself into my presence?"

"Force myself into your presence, uncle!" Dumaresq exclaims, and his words are almost a cry of pain—"when you wrote to me yourself—telegraphed to me yourself to come to you, and I have traveled since yesterday afternoon without stopping an hour! Uncle, here is the telegram; pray read it—pray, do sir!" he entreats, as the old man haughtily pushes the paper away—"or I will read it to you."

With shaking hands and shaking voice, and eyes that are dim with agitation Dumaresq reads the telegram aloud, every word, and looks up pale and breathless with imploring inquiry into the old man's face.

But the paper drops from his hand and rustles to the floor as he reads the sole result of his appeal in his uncle's countenance.

It is dark with suppressed feeling; it is fierce with unseemly rage, and rigid with bitter scorn.

"The next time you attempt a piece of imposition, sir," he says, in tones of bitter sarcasm and contempt, "let it be at least more cleverly carried out, and not so audaciously transparent!"

"Sir, I declare to you—I swear to you on my faith, on my honor," gasps Dumaresq, the cold sweat starting on his brow, "that I know nothing of this message from you to me than what I have told you. The message came to me, as I said—"

"The message—the message, sir!" interrupts the viscount, his worn face reddening, his eyes and teeth gleaming with rage. "The message from me to you, whining about my illness and advancing years—requesting your forgiveness, in a word! Your message, sir, is an impudent forgery, which no one who knows me personally would believe you would have the hardihood to dare to foist on me as an expression of my wishes—an impudent forgery which deserves condign punishment!"

CHAPTER XIV.

With the old viscount's wrathful words ringing in his ears, Dick Dumaresq stands rigid, silent, blankly staring at the telegram with a stunned, bewildered feeling for several moments.

Truth to tell, his terrible disappointment has come upon him so suddenly, so unexpectedly, as to almost overwhelm him.

"I—didn't think it was a forgery!" he says at last, involuntarily, and the words burst spasmodically from his dry lips with an accent of despair, and he lifts his eyes once with a passionate glance of entreaty to his uncle's face.

But the proud old man has steeled himself against, the mute supplication of a look or a tone; although those tremulous, dismayed accents in the once-beloved voice, the pleading look—just like the pleading looks of his boyish days, when he used to try what no one else on earth ever tried with the stern, tyrannical man—coaxing and entreaty—has touched Viscount Dumaresq to the core of his heart.

Though he longs with fierce pain and longing to have good reason to forgive the truant, to bid him stay beside him for evermore, and keep the light of his goodly presence his bright, handsome face, and kind, winning smile to make sunshine in the gloom of his lonely home. For he never asks, or, indeed, wishes his younger nephew to remain at Heneage Court an hour longer than suits that gentleman's inclinations; and, as Captain Richard Dumaresq abhors Heneage Court in the sole society of his uncle, it very seldom suits his inclinations, and the old man's life is utterly solitary, save for the occasional presence of a guest or his nephew's flying visits.

All his years of loneliness, all his stern affection for his elder favorite nephew, all his pride in him, for his personal beauty, his brightness, cleverness, his sunny temper and winning ways, which the boy had repaid with base ingratitude—or so he deems it—arouses the chilled emotions of his breast to fury.

It will take more than the mute pleading of a glance or a tone to win the least forgiveness from him. Nothing short of the deepest humility, the sincerest contrition, and earnest and direct prayers to him for forgiveness will avail, and those he knows, or he should know, from his past knowledge of his elder nephew's nature, he will never receive! not that the boy was ever stubborn or obstinate; except where violence or injustice aroused his strong will and proud spirit.

The viscount makes no reply to his nephew's ejaculations, but remains standing erect, repellent, stately, his lean white hand clinched on the back of his chair.

"I thought," Dick falters, trembling with agitation as he strives to attain masonry over himself, and successfully struggles with the bitter pain of each dying hope—"I thought—I was sure—you wanted to see me; I thought it was a message of good wishes to me, in—in the prospect of——"

But here the words stop in his throat. What are his prospects. What are his hopes now?

The telegram is a lie, a cruel jest, or a bold forgery, therefore all the bright hopes are but a mirage, and the way before him is but a desert, still lonelier, barer, drearier, for that sweet brief illusion.

Still no word, no glance, no gesture of the lined, pale, haughty face, or the thin, upright form, and Dick swallows that something down, that something in his throat which is suffocating him, and resolutely conquers himself.

"I thought—I assure you sir," he says, very quietly, "that the message was from you, and so I lost no time in obeying the summons. I came up from Portdreath, in Cornwall, since 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon; but, as a cruel jest, or as a crueler injury, I must go back again without delay."

Still no word, or glance, or gesture; the silent, stately, spare figure might be a statue of haughtiness personified.

And yet one earnest look at the thin, silvery locks, the hollow temples, the sunken, pallid face, the rounded shoulders, and the weak, emaciated limbs, telling of old age and bodily decrepitude in language too loud for the proud tongue to silence, softens all anger, pride, or self-will out of Dick Dumaresq's heart, as utterly as the sun melts ice.

"Uncle," he says, gently, almost tenderly, "will you shake hands once before I go? I will never trouble you with my unwelcome presence again. Only, I should so like to hear you say: 'Good-by, Dick,' and shake hands once more!"

But the humble mood of the younger man affords too great a temptation to the elder one as an opportunity of avenging his long-cherished wrongs to his pride and affection for him to be able to let it pass.

"You forget, sir—we are strangers—or equivalent to such," he says, with a slight sneering smile, and in icy accents: "I do not presume to address strangers familiarly, whatever you may choose to do"

"I suppose that means," Dick says, sadly, but quite calmly now, "all hope is quite dead and done with?" A slight spasm of surprise at his own folly in having ever hoped alone stirs in his breast. "I suppose that means that I have forfeited the right to call you 'uncle'?"

"Your supposition dates ten years back, as you know quite well!" the viscount retorts, his cold tones shaking with passion for the moment, though he preserves unaltered his unbending attitude and his icy demeanor, with the cold smile that is half a sneer on his thin, closed lips.

"Nevertheless," Dick replies, calmly, and meeting his glance steadfastly, "you are always 'uncle' in my thought. Farewell, sir, and Heaven bless you! We shall never meet again, and—I only wanted a kind word and a touch of your hand."

RICE RECIPES.

To Use the Grain in Place of Potatoes.

Eight ways to cook rice, so that its use as a substitute for potatoes may not grow tiresome, were described by Miss Anna C. Johnson, dietitian at the Chicago municipal tuberculosis sanitorium. Miss Johnson's rice dishes were approved by Health Commissioner Robertson.

Boiled rice—One cup rice, two quarts boiling water, one tablespoon salt. Add rice slowly to boiling salted water; boil for thirty minutes; drain and let stand for few minutes.

Rice with cheese—Steam one cup rice with salt; cover bottom of buttered dish with rice add butter, sprinkle with grated cheese and cayenne until rice and one-fourth pound cheese is used; add milk and water and cover with cracker crumbs; bake until cheese melts.

Rice a la Creole—One cup rice; two and one-half cups seasoned brown stock; two tablespoons butter and pimentos. Melt butter; add boiled rice, stirring until rice is brown; add hot stock and cook in double boiler until rice is soft; turn on serving dish, garnish with pimento and cover with Creole sauce.

Rice with tomatoes—Cook cup rice in two tablespoons butter until until brown; add cup and half boiling water; steam until water is absorbed; add two and one-half cups hot stewed tomatoes; cook until rice is soft and seasoned.

Rice a la Ritson—Finely chop two slices of bacon; add firmly chopped cabbage; cover and cook slowly for thirty minutes; add one-fourth cup boiled rice; chopped parsley; salt and pepper. Moisten with one-half cup stock and cook fifteen minutes.

Rice croquettes—One-half cup rice; one teaspoon salt; one-half cup boiling water; yolks two eggs; one cup scalded milk; one tablespoon butter. Steam until it has absorbed water; add milk, stir; cover and steam until rice is soft; remove from fire; add egg yolks and butter; cool, roll balls in crumbs, and fry.

Rice timbales—Pack hot boiled rice in buttered tin molds; let stand in hot water ten minutes.

Casserole of rice and veal—Line greased mold with steamed rice; fill centre with two cups cold, finely chopped cooked veal; add salt, pepper, celery salt, and onion juice; add one-fourth cup cracker crumbs, one egg slightly beaten; moisten with hot water; cover meat with rice; cover rice with buttered paper and steam forty-five minutes.

KEEP CHILDREN WELL DURING HOT WEATHER

Every mother knows how fatal the hot summer months are to small children. Cholera, infantum, diarrhoea, dysentry and stomach troubles are rife at this time and often a precious little life is lost after only a few hours illness. The mother who keeps Baby's Own Tablets in the house feels safe. The occasional use of the Tablets prevents stomach and bowel troubles, or if trouble comes suddenly—as it generally does—the Tablets will bring the baby safely through. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

WHAT ECHOES ARE.

Created When Waves of Sound Are Thrown Back to Source.

An echo is caused when the waves of air which are created when you shout are thrown back again. They may be stopped by something they encounter, and are turned back without changing their shape. Any kind of a sound wave will make an echo in this way.

You see, you can give no sound of any kind without sound waves. You could not make a sound if there was no air. Now, when you shout, you start a series of sound waves that go out from you in every direction and they spread away from you in circles. These circles, says "The Book of Wonders," are just like the ripples sent out along the surface by the pebble you drop in the water.

You can prove this by having one, two, three, or more of your friends stand around you in a large circle. Place as far away from you as your shout can be heard. When you shout each of your friends will hear you at the precise same moment, provided they are stationed at equal distances from you. Let each of them raise his hand at the very moment he hears you. The hands will go up together.

Sometimes these sound waves as they go away from you strike objects that turn the waves back broken until they reach you. The waves will bounce back just like a rubber ball from a wall which it has been thrown against. This is the echo.

No doubt you have sometimes noticed when you shout that you hear a distant echo. Then, at other times, standing in the same place, you cannot hear any echo, although you shout in the same way. This is explained by the fact that at times conditions of the air are such that no echo is produced.

The possibilities of an echo have to be taken into account by the architects and builders of all public buildings, such as theatres, halls and churches, where persons are to speak and must be heard by others. Unless they are very careful, the walls and ceilings may be arranged so that when anyone sings or speaks in the room there is such an echo that it interferes with the music or speaking. It sometimes happens also that through some peculiarity in which the walls and ceilings of a building are constructed there will be certain places in the room where an echo can be heard, even a whisper which cannot be heard in other parts of the room at all. This is called a whispering gallery. Loud talking would of course produce the same effect. A whispering gallery is a gallery with an echo which can be heard from certain positions. There are a number of famous whispering galleries. In the room beneath the great dome of the capitol at Washington there is an almost perfect whispering gallery. There are quite a number of points at which you can stand and hear whispers across the room a distance of more than 100 feet. These whispering galleries come accidentally of course. It would be difficult to construct a building in such a way as to produce a whispering gallery.—Exchange.

Eggs in the Diet

(Experimental Farm Note.)

From a bulletin published by the State Agricultural College, New Jersey, U. S. A., entitled "Milk and Eggs," we extract the following information re the value of eggs in the diet.

Composition of the hen's egg compared with moderately lean beef:

	Hen's egg. Per Cent.	Lean beef. Per Cent.
Water	73.7	[illegible]
Fat	10.5	8.5
Protein	14.8	20.0
Mineral matter	1.0	1.0

The protein in the egg is nearly pure albumen. The yolk of an egg is of greater nutritive value than the white. It is rich in the following mineral salts. Calcium, iron potassium and phosphorus, and contains them in such a form that they are readily absorbed and utilized by the body. The white of an egg is rich in sulphur.

Value as Food—By comparing the composition of the egg with that of lean meat, it will be noticed that eggs make a good substitute for meat. Nine average-sized eggs weigh one pound and contain about the same amount of nourishment as one pound of beef. As eggs contain no starch or sugar, they should be served with such foods as rice, bread, fruit, potatoes and other vegetables or made into desserts, with sugar, tapioca and similar materials.

Digestibility of Eggs—Raw eggs are very easily digested. The digestibility of cooked eggs depends upon the manner in which they are cooked. They should be cooked at low temperature. Egg albumen begins to coagulate at 130 degrees F., becomes jelly-like at 160 degrees F., and, when heated to the boiling point, 212 degrees F., becomes a tough, leathery mass and very indigestible.

An Object Lesson.

In the drawing-room a mixed company was discussing the always interesting topic of the difference between the masculine and feminine attitude toward life.

"You know," the unfledged sub[illegible] remarked, "it all comes down to this. [illegible] woman, even advanced woman, are vain."

Topping off the Fall Fashions

Your headwear for this fall and winter offers wide latitude for distinctive dressiness.

Soft felt hats have a decided call over the stiff derbies, though in very fashionable quarters and chiefly among middle-aged men, D'Orsay's and Homburg stiff shapes will be worn.

In the soft felt hats there are shown many new effects in mixtures and solid colors with a slight preference for the rough finished felts over the smooth.

Browns, greens and grays are the principal colors shown. The most popular models in these hats have moderately wide brims, 2 5-8 to 2 3-4 inches, or thereabouts, and medium height, slightly tapering crowns, creased Alpine fashion. The general appearance of these hats will not be so flat set as those models which prevailed last fall; their brims having somewhat more roll to the sides. These hats will come in rough finish, smooth finish, silk finish, cloth finish, scratch finish and pile finish in proportions of 5 3-4 by 2 2-8 and 2 1-2, and 5 1-2 by 2 5-8 and 2 3-4. Puggaree bands will continue their popularity this fall that they so strongly manifested the past summer. Welt edges are slightly more fashionable than the ribbon binding.

Velours, while being scarce and consequently high priced, are going to be extremely popular among the men who seek the exclusive.

Trooper styles through the military influence of the times will be quite freely worn.

Many novelty trimming effects will be shown on these, including taffeta and satin sash bands.

Caps for motorists, horsemen and golfers will have a fair reach in the peak, full crown, with plenty of room for the pull down in back. The standard derby will be largely along conventional lines of previous seasons. A marked style is of the shape of the London bowler which shows a 5 3-4 inch crown with a rather flat top, a marked roll to the brim on the sides, and a 2 3-4 inch reach fore and aft. The best colors in derbies for the season are black, dark brown and pearl grey.

In silk beaver hats for dress wear the shape is practically the same as last season. It has a very slight bell to the crown with a decided curl to the brim on the side and a good reach to this part of the hat fore and aft. This has a 2 1-2 or 3-inch cloth band.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

The Toronto Fair was quite the attraction for Ontario people, despite the war and the admonition not to do unnecessary spending.

Saugeen Council held its session Saturday night. The councillors are all owners of big farms, and used all the daylight hours for farm work, doing the business of the township in the evening.

It cost $3 500 for a commission to make it clear that Hon. Robert Rogers was not guilty of what Justice Galt had found him guilty.. Politicians are really the most expensive item Canada has on her hands at the present time.

Goderich Signal:—You don't see the Toronto papers, Tory or Grit, protesting against the use of the "gag" at Ottawa to put onto millionaires. The people of Ontario should realize that the Toronto papers are boosting Toronto, and the rest of the country may go hang.

"So distressfully ill fed are the common people of Austria that the children do not attend school, being too hungry to learn." A moment's thought concerning the above few lines will depict a condition most pitiful.

A Liberal member of the House asks the government to place potatoes on the tariff free list, claiming, there will be unmarketable quantities of potatoes in Canada this fall. Wheat and wheat products are now on the free list. Perhaps before the war has ended we shall have Reciprocity in all farm products.

Premier Borden promises that the first men to be drafted under the Military Service Act will be in khaki by Nov. 27. Having in view the fact that the Military Service Act has been talked of since May, the authorities will have to move rapidly to accomplish the task. The casualties among Canadians grow apace, and men are needed to fill the gaps.

A Toronto paper which does much preaching about democracy, reported that the Duke of Devonshire actually stopped a cow being led out of the Judging ring at Toronto fair, and looked her over. Dear, oh dear, it must be awful to be a Duke and have one's acts reported on every move made. We know a whole lot of dukes and duchesses in our townships who count it just an ordinary chore to look over cows twice a day.

The taking of the Russian port of Riga by the Germans had the affect of making many of our people feel rather gloomy. But there is no occasion for any doubt as to the final outcome. The taking of the port and the further hardships which will be inflicted on the Russian people by their conquerors will serve, in the end, to bring the Russian army to a realization that if Russia is to retain its name as a nation it must defend itself vigorously against the common enemy of the world.

Information from the government authorities make it clear that all men who are making themselves useful in agriculture will be exempted from compulsory service. This bit of information will be welcomed by young men who are actually engaged in farming, but it may also be taken advantage of by young men who don't want to fight, and will seek the farm at once. However, the exemption boards of the districts ought to be able to make it pretty uncomfortable for that sort of fellow.

Out near Neodesha, Kan., Mrs. Dora Long has a crop of 7000 bushels of June wheat worth $17,000. She was not expecting so large a yield, because the season had been backward at the start, and her problem is now one of storage. For the present, in addition to her barns, she is using her bedrooms, as well as other apartments of her home, as wheat bins. This, however, will amount only to a temporary inconvenience. A woman with $17,000 worth of June wheat on hand can afford to put up for awhile at the county seat hotel.

The past week or two have been very busy ones on the farms. The crops are extremely heavy, and much threshing has had to be done in order to provide room for the later crops. Added to this is the endeavor to do plowing for the next year's harvest. Truly the farmers, their wives and families have laid their strength willingly to the task of the past year, and the Empire has been assisted greatly through their efforts. A tractor or two has been working in some sections of Bruce, and if the Agricultural Representative could send one this way it would help mightily in the heavy work of plowing, and make sure of increased sowing for next year.

A Lincolnshire farmer was fined $27,500 for selling potatoes above the fixed price. The government fixed the price at $45 a ton, but Thompson sold a thousand tons of potatoes at $75 a ton, or $20 above the rate and clearing $20,000 more than he was entitled to. The fine looks heavy and is heavy, but does not look so badly when figured out. The extra $20,000, also an additional $7,500 will go to the public treasury. The food controller in England has made the road hard and dreary for those who violate his rules.

These are strenuous days for the newspapers. In the larger cities amalgamations help out those who find it difficult to meet the tremendous raises in the price of newsprint, while some smaller towns having two papers find a solution in doubling up, too. In the country places several of the weeklies have had to close shop. The latest amalgamation is that of the Vancouver News Advertiser, which has been taken over by the Sun, thus leaving but one morning paper in the terminal city.

The Hon. Arthur Meighen, in introducing the new Franchise act, remarked that he regretted that an election was necessary. This is quite a legitimate regret. Any man having a good paying "sit" like the Hon. Arthur might honestly regret having to seek re-election. Still it's always well for the people that the politicians have no life lease of their jobs.

The New Franchise Act

The new Franchise act introduced in the House by Secretary of State Meighen has created much discussion throughout Canada. The principle is laid down in the act that all those who are doing war time work shall vote. At least the attempt has been made to do so. Just how far this has been accomplished remains to be seen.

The chief point on which people are generally disposed to argue is that of women voters. According to the act the wives, mothers, daughters and sisters of soldiers will vote, while thousands of women who have proven themselves most active workers and cheerful givers for Red Cross and patriotic funds, who may not have husbands, sons or brothers at the front are disfranchised. Taking Port Elgin as a fair sample of the average town in Canada, one has only to think for a moment to understand just how the vote is added to many families by two or three ballots, while to many families who are not represented at the front for very legitimate reasons the vote is not given. There is little objection to giving votes to the soldiers' family, but just why thousands of very responsible women are deprived of the vote, it would be interesting to know.

Presentation to Rev. Mr. Roppel

About sixty persons of the Evangelical Assn. gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Roppel to spend a social evening and to honor their son before he resumed his studies at College.

Rev. Mr. Gishler was made chairman, and a short program was carried out consisting of addresses and songs. Afterwards Mr. Roppel was invited to stand while Mr. Milton Dammer read an address and Mr. Fred Schnitzker presented on behalf of the gathering, a beautiful set of books to Mr. Roppel.

Rev. Mr. Roppel has been in the past years a most ardent worker in all departments of church and Sunday school, and the affair was a slight token of appreciation. The address set forth the esteem in which both Mr. Roppel and his wife are held, pointing out the opportunity for service which the Christian ministry afforded. The Sunday school and Y. P. A. had received much benefit from their efforts in the past, and it was the hope of all the people that great blessing would attend the labors of Mr. and Mrs. Roppel. The address was signed by Messrs Schnitzker and Dammer.

Accident Proves Fatal

A couple of weeks ago, Mr. Alex Alexander, of Annan, while visiting his neice, Mrs James Reech, at North Bruce, met with a serious accident, which has proved fatal. Mr. Alexander, who is 85 years of age, was at the barn, when a heavy wind took a large door off its hinges, the door falling on Mr. Alexander. His collar bone was broken, and he was otherwise injured. Assistance was given at once, and medical aid summoned. For several days hopes were high that he would recover, but his advanced age was against him, and he passed away on Tuesday last.

Deceased was born in Keeblshire, Scotland, in 1832. He came to this country, settling in Sydenham township, in Grey county in 1855. He was a kindly man and loved by all. A faithful Christian, and an active member of the Presbyterian church. He is survived by two sons, William of Woodford, and James of Annan, also two daughters, Mrs Henry Kaleigh and Miss Margaret of Annan. Interment was made at Annan.

Enjoys Letters from Soldiers

Mrs R. M. Paterson, writing from Loseland, Sask., says:

"Find enclosed one dollar and fifty cents for The Times. I enjoy the old home paper, and read with very much interest the letters from the boys who are serving at the front. They are among the most interesting letters that I have read in any of our papers.

"The crop in this district, is much better than at one time expected. The farmers are busy cutting, the sample is good, with an average of about 20 bushels to the acre."

NORTH BRUCE

Mrs. (Dr.) Airth, Leslie and Elsie, of Chatsworth, attended the McDonald—McCulloch wedding.

Mr. A. Nicholson, Mrs. Glover, Mr. and Mrs. Mason and daughter motored up from Hamilton last week and visited with friends here.

Rev. W. D. McIntosh has so far recovered from the accident five weeks ago as to be able to get around with the aid of crutches.

Among those attending the Toronto exhibition were, Mr. Nuttal and Miss Sadie, Messrs Dan McCarrol and Roy Hodge.

Some Frost In The West

Mr. William Brown, of Bruce Tp. has returned from a month's vacation in Saskatchewan. He reports the crop as splendid, but that there was a severe frost on September 4th. Although it had very little effect on the wheat, it will be hard on the later oats and potatoes.

Mr. Brown helped to harvest crops in three provinces this year.

Mr. Brown has given up active farming and he and Mrs. Brown are moving to town this week, where they will live retired.

CLIP THIS AND PIN ON WIFE'S DRESSER

Cincinnati man tells how to shrivel up corns or calluses so they lift off with fingers.

Ouch ! ! ! ! ! ! This kind of rough talk will be heard less here in town if people troubled with corns will follow the simple advice of this Cincinnati authority, who claims that a few drops of a drug called freezone when applied to a tender, aching corn or hardened callus stops soreness at once, and soon the corn or callus dries up and lifts right off without pain.

He says freezone dries immediately and never inflames or even irritates the surrounding skin. A small bottle of freezone will cost very little at any drug store, but will positively remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet. Millions of American women will welcome this announcement since the inauguration of the high heels. If your druggist doesn't have freezone tell him to order a small bottle for you.

SOUTHAMPTON

On Thursday evening the members of the Baptist church had a social evening to recognize the splendid work of their pastor for the summer months, Rev. Mr. Mintz. Remarkable work has been done by this young man, in that the membership of the church has been increased by 35 members in three months.

There was a program of speech and song, after which refreshments were served and a social hour enjoyed. Those taking part were Miss Vida Knechtel, Malcolm McNeill, Emma Knechtel, Wm. Manley, Mrs. Winter, O. DeLong, Annie Schuler, Mrs. S. Knechtel, Mrs. DeLong, Mrs. Short. All the departments of the church work were represented, testifying to the great work of the pastor.

At the conclusion Rev. Mr. Mintz was presented by the new converts, 35 in number, with a handsome pair of military brushes, encased in leather, while the church presented him with a purse of gold. Mr. Mintz made a feeling reply.

On Sunday Mr. Mintz preached his farewell, the church being packed with friends eager to hear him. He leaves for Rochester to pursue his studies.

Prize Winners of Field Crops

The winners in the Field crop competition on the Saugeen Indian Reserve are:—

1st—H. Abraham, $15.00
2nd—Ben Jackson, $10.00
3rd—And. Ritchie, $5.00
4th—S. Mandowoob, $4.00
5th—Jas. Ritchie, $3.00

There were fourteen contestants, and five prizes were awarded. Along with the money prizes handsome ribbon badges were awarded.

In addition to these prizes a silver shield will be awarded to the first prize winner, who will retain it for the year, and it becomes the property of anyone winning it three times.

THE FAIR

The extremely busy summer has made it harder for the Fair Board to work up interest in its annual exhibition, which is to be held here Wednesday and Thursday of next week.

The harvest has been heavy, and it has been all that most of the farmers could do to keep up with their work.

This week however, has seen a big amount of work done, and while it keeps most people hustling, the show is the talk now, and a good crowd will be in attendance. The program promises an afternoon worth while, and the people in the district will be disposed to take a day off and attend the fair. It's our fair. Let's all go.

Five Large Phonographs Given as First District Prizes in Bread-Making Contests

At Rural School Fairs in Ontario

More than $2,000 worth of prizes for bread making will be offered at the Rural School Fairs this fall. Among the prizes are five large cabinet phonographs, fifteen Canuck bread mixers, and many attractive books. These splendid prizes will make the contest the most stirring ever held at rural school fairs. Every girl between the ages of 12 and 18 should read all about this fine opportunity, and should begin now to prepare for it. The prizes, under the conditions explained below, will be awarded for the best loaves baked with the hard wheat flour that is guaranteed for bread

—the flour that you will want to use always, once you have given it a good trial. We want you to know for yourself that it makes splendid big loaves of the lightest, most wholesome bread that good flour can bake. That is why we make it well worth your while to try it, by offering these attractive and costly prizes.

For this contest we have divided the Province into five districts, each with several counties. In each district we will give a large cabinet phonograph, a set of Dickens' Works and three bread mixers. These are called the District prizes and they are to be given in addition to the prizes offered at the local rural school fairs. (See list of districts below.) Be sure to compete at your local rural school fair. If you win first prize there, you will then automatically become a competitor for the phonograph and other district prizes.

The Prizes, remember, are offered for the best loaf of bread baked with Cream of the West Flour. No other flour will do. For local prizes we offer a number of valuable books. By local prizes we mean those given at the fair.

1st Local Prize.—"Girl's Own Annual," a great big beautifully bound, illustrated book with 800 pages of stories and articles about [illegible] fashions, sewing, crocheting—everything that particularly interests young girls, [illegible] This is a wonderful prize that you can treasure for years.

2nd Local Prize.—"Stories of Famous Men and Women," heavily cloth bound with gold titles, many beautiful pictures in colors, entrancing life stories of Florence Nightingale, Grace Darling, Flora MacDonald, Jenny Lind, the late Queen Victoria and others.

3rd Local Prize.—"Britain Overseas," a big handsomely bound book with many colored pictures, interesting stories and descriptions of the countries and the peoples of Britain's world-wide Empire.

4th Local Prize.—"The Queen's Gift Book," a book of stories, pictures and special articles by Britain's best writers; the proceeds from the sale of this book are for the benefit of disabled soldiers in England.

Note.—Unless the entries number six or more only first and second prizes will be awarded. Unless the entries number ten or more no fourth prize will be awarded.

The District Prizes.—The winner of the first prize at each local fair automatically becomes a competitor for the following District prizes. One-half of the first prize loaf will be sent to the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph, to compete in the District Contests. (See conditions below.)

1st District Prize.—The "Pathephone" is the name given to the fine big mahogany phonograph awarded as first prize. It will give you endless pleasure and entertainment for a lifetime. It has special reproducer attachments and needles, enabling you to play all kinds of flat disc records of no matter what make. The Pathephone reproduces band music, orchestra music, vocal and funny pieces perfectly; with it goes a dozen of the famous Pathe records. Total value, $150.00.

2nd District Prize.—Set of Dickens' Works, 15 splendidly bound volumes with many illustrations. Among the books in the set are "Oliver Twist" and "Old Curiosity Shop." These are two of the most entrancing stories ever written.

3rd, 4th and 5th Prizes.—"Canuck" Bread mixers. This simple, yet well-made, machine takes the hard work out of bread making. Instead of laborious kneading of the old method, you put in the ingredients, turn the handle and the dough is thoroughly and more evenly mixed.

FIRST PRIZE AT LOCAL RURAL SCHOOL FAIRS

CONDITIONS OF THE CONTEST

Every girl may compete at the rural school fair in her district, whether or not she attends school, providing that her 12th birthday occurs before November 1st, 1917, or her 19th birthday does not occur before Nov. 1, 1917. One loaf of bread must be submitted baked in pan about 7 x 4 inches and 3 inches deep, and divided into two halves so that they may be separated at the fair. The loaf must be baked with Cream of the West Flour. One-half will be judged at the fair. The other half of the prize loaf will be sent to Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, to compete in the District Contests. The judging will be done by Miss M. A. Purdy, of the Department of Breadmaking and Flour Testing. The bread contest at the fair will be conducted under the same rules as all the other regular contests at your fairs.

The Standard by which bread will be judged will be as follows:

1. Appearance of Loaf		15 marks
(a) Color	5 marks
(b) Texture of crust	5 marks
(c) Shape of loaf	5 marks
2. Texture of Crumb		40 marks
(a) Evenness	15 marks
(b) Silkiness	20 marks
(c) Color	5 marks
3. Flavor of Bread		45 marks
(a) Taste	25 marks
(b) Odor	20 marks

Important.—Each loaf must be accompanied by the part of the flour bag containing the face of the Old Miller, and an entry form must be signed by the girl and parent or guardian stating date of birth, P.O. address, and giving name of dealer from whom Cream of the West Flour was purchased. The form will state that the girl actually baked the loaf entered in the competition. The forms will be provided at the time of the fair. The decision of the judges is final. Not more than one entry may be made by each girl and not more than one local prize will be awarded to the same family.

Which District is yours? This list shows you which counties you compete in until you become a competitor for the District prizes:

District No. 1.—Counties of Glengarry, Stormont, Dundas, Grenville, Leeds, Frontenac, Lennox and Addington, Carleton, Lanark, Renfrew.

District No. 2.—Counties of Hastings, Prince Edward, Peterboro, Northumberland, Victoria, Durham.

District No. 3.—Counties of York, Ontario, Peel, Halton, Wentworth, Oxford, Brant, Waterloo.

District No. 4.—Counties of Welland, Haldimand, Norfolk, Elgin, Kent, Essex, Lambton, Middlesex.

District No. 5.—Counties of Bruce, Grey, Dufferin, Simcoe, Districts of Muskoka, Parry Sound, Timiskaming, Algoma, Sudbury, Manitoulin.

THE RESULTS of the contests at the fair will be made known in the usual way as in the case of all the other regular contests. The District results will be announced as soon as possible after the conclusion of the Rural School Fairs in the Province.

DO NOT MISS THIS GREAT OPPORTUNITY: Every girl between 12 and 18 years should compete. What a splendid way to stir up the local interest in breadmaking! Get a supply of Cream of the West Flour at your dealer's and practise using it as often as possible to increase the chances of winning. If your dealer cannot sell it to you, write to the Campbell Flour Mills Co., Ltd., Toronto, and we will promptly tell you the nearest place to get it.

NO COMPETITIONS IN COUNTIES NAMED BELOW: The competition is open to all parts of the Province where Rural School Fairs are held, except the Districts of Rainy River, Kenora and Thunder Bay. These districts are the only parts of the Province where school fairs are held by the Department of Agriculture in which this competition will not be a feature. There are no district representatives of the Department of Agriculture in the Counties of Huron, Perth, Wellington, Haliburton, Prescott, Russell or Lincoln, and no rural school fairs are held in these Counties by the Department of Agriculture. There are, however, a few local school fairs held in these seven counties, and we are opening the competition to these fairs. We will announce later the districts in which each of these Counties will be included.

ELSINORE

Allenford ball players met Port Elgin team in a return game at the Elsinore garden party. A good game of ball rewarded the large crowds present from Port Elgin, Southampton, Tara, Allenford, Park Head, and Chesley. In several of the innings no runs were made at all. The final score stood 8—3 in favor of Allenford.

Wm. McDonald M. P. P. of Chesley, delivered a most interesting address at the Methodist church grounds in the evening.

Others taking part in the program were Miss Maggie Strang, Mrs. Moffat Aiken, Harry Broadfoot, and the Allenford Male Quartette consisting of Messrs O. Baker, E. Brent, M. Aiken, and George Crawford.

WHY YOU ARE NERVOUS

The nervous system is the alarm system of the human body.

In perfect health we hardly realize that we have a network of nerves, but when health is ebbing, when strength is declining, the same nervous system gives the alarm in headaches, tiredness, dreamful sleep, irritability and unless corrected, leads straight to a breakdown.

To correct nervousness, Scott's Emulsion is exactly what you should take; its rich nutriment goes into the blood and rich blood feeds the tiny nerve cells while the whole system responds to its refreshing tonic force. Free from harmful drugs.

CUTICURA HEALS. ITCHY PIMPLES

On Face. Badly Disfigured. Used 2 Boxes Ointment and 3 Cakes Soap.

"I had a bad itchy lot of pimples on my face which made it badly disfigured. They were inflamed and came to a head, and I could tear my skin as soon as a little heat came near them. I could hardly sleep.

"When I saw Cuticura Soap and Ointment advertised I sent for a free sample which did so much good that I bought more, and I used two boxes of Cuticura Ointment and three cakes of Cuticura Soap when I was healed." (Signed) Miss Bertha Nilsson, Stockholm, Sask.

If you have a good complexion keep it so by using Cuticura Soap daily and Cuticura Ointment occasionally.

For Free Sample Each by Mail address post-card: "Cuticura, Dept. A, Boston, U. S. A." Sold everywhere.

A COLONY OF BEES.

Its Members, Their Product and the Heat of a Sting.

A colony of bees in summer consists of from 50,000 to 100,000 individuals. Each colony contains a queen, several hundred drones and the balance workers. The latter are neuter or undeveloped females, and they do all the work of the hive, gather their food from the flowers, which consists of honey and pollen. They also gather propolis, a resinous substance used to stop cracks and holes in the hive.

It is not generally known that honey is not thick and syrupy when first gathered. It is called nectar by beekeepers and looks like water. When first gathered it can be shaken from the combs easily.

Sometimes it is necessary to shake bees from a brood comb, and the bees as they fall are so deluged by the watery nectar that they look like the proverbial "drowned rats." This, however, does no harm, as they at once proceeded to clean each other, and when bees clean up they do a good job. I have put out a dish from the table that was daubed with honey, and in a very short time it was as clean as though washed.

Many persons are very much afraid of the business end of the bee, and those who are not used to bee sting poison suffer pain when stung. The sensation of a bee sting can be compared to the prick of a needle point in the flesh, and then try to imagine that while just under the skin the needle is heated white hot and held there for about five minutes. Beekeepers will agree that this statement is not overdrawn. Beekeepers working about the hives every day are seldom stung, as they know the habits of the bees and avoid their prods. In time one becomes more or less immune to the poison.—George Shiber in New York Sun.

THE DRUG MENACE.

Society Facing an Exceedingly Dangerous Human Element.

In rigorous effort to suppress the illegal sale and use of habit forming drugs the New York police are now arresting annually about 900 persons and securing 700 convictions. Of those fully 75 per cent. have had previous police records, which include every crime in the statutes. This is an official statement, one of sinister portent. It means that law abiding society is facing a human element new and exceedingly dangerous—so grave, in fact, that one of the most important duties of the police lies in stamping out this traffic.

The danger is by no means confined to large cities like New York; it is probably growing in towns and villages all over the country. Police investigations have revealed an appalling increase of drug addicts. More than one-half of those confined in the city prison, the Tombs, were victims. Men and women following virtually every business, trade and profession were included. Even school children became addicted to the habit of using these drugs.

It is with full knowledge of such occurrences that the police are doing everything possible to stop illegal traffic in drugs. Criminals of this class present a problem even more difficult than the old time bank robber and general crook. The police may arrest 1,000 offenders annually, but the problem will not be solved until boys and girls are taught the terrible results which follow upon the use of habit forming drugs. It is at this point that teachers of physiology and personal hygiene must lend powerful co-operation.—Century Magazine.

Peggy.

My Peggy is a young thing,
Just entered in her teens,
Fair as the day, and sweet as May,
Fair as the day, and always gay;
My Peggy is a young thing,
And I'm not very auld,
Yet well I like to meet her at
The wauking of the fauld.

My Peggy speaks sae sweetly,
Whene'er we meet alane,
I wish nae mair to lay my care,
I wish nae mair of a' that's rare;
My Peggy speaks sae sweetly,
To a' the lave I'm cauld,
But she gars a' my spirits glow
At wauking of the fauld.

My Peggy smiles sae kindly
Whene'er I whisper love
That I look down on a' the town,
That I look down upon a crown;
My Peggy smiles sae kindly
It makes me blyth and bauld,
And naething gives me sic delight,
As wauking of the fauld.

My Peggy sings sae saftly
When on my pipe I play,
By a' the rest it is confest,
By a' the rest, that she sings best;
My Peggy sings sae saftly,
And in her sangs are tauld
With innocence the wale of sense,
At wauking of the fauld.

FREQUENT HEADACHES

People with thin blood are much more subject to headaches than full-blooded persons, and the form of anaemia that afflicts growing girls is almost always accompanied by headaches, together with disturbances of the digestive organs.

Whenever you have constant or recurring headaches and pallor of the face, they show that the blood is thin and your efforts should be directed toward building up your blood. A fair treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will do this effectively, and the rich, red blood made by these pills will remove the headache.

More disturbances to the health are caused by their blood than most people have any idea of. When your blood is impoverished, the nerves suffer from lack of nourishment and you may be troubled with insomnia, neuritis, neuralgia or sciatica. Muscles subject to strain are under-nourished and you may have muscular rheumatism or lumbago. If your blood is thin and you begin to show symptoms of any of these disorders, try building up the blood with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and as the blood is restored to its normal condition every symptom of the trouble will disappear. There are more people who owe their present state of good health to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills than to any other medicine, and most of them do not hesitate to say so.

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

FLAGS OF IRELAND.

Prior to 1798 National Color Was Blue.

The universal belief concerning the flag of Ireland is that it has always been "the harp without the crown" imposed on a field of green, and that green has from time immemorial been Erin's color.

I venture to say that ninety out of every hundred persons will assert, in answer to a query, that the harp on a green background has constituted Ireland's national design these many centuries, this belief obtaining generally among the Irish themselves.

In opposition to this belief it will appear strange when the asseveration is made that Ireland's national color until something more than a century ago was blue.

It may, indeed, produce a bit of a shock to many who have been wedded to the notion that "the Emerald Isle," "the shamrock so green," "our green isle beyond the sea" and other similar expressions were indissolubly and forever connected with the country's national colors.

But, as a matter of fact, the green flag made its appearance in 1798, the year of the uprising, so that as flags go it is comparatively new. Green, you know, is a blend of the orange and the blue, and it is asserted that green was adopted in 1798 by the United Irishmen to typify the union of north and south, orange being the color affected in the northern part of Ireland and blue in the southern provinces.

In point of antiquity the real Irish flag is the "spear and serpent," which appears in the arms of the O'Sullivans. It is said to commemorate the incident of Gaodhal Glas, the ancestor of Milesius, who, tradition says, was cured of a snake bite by the rod of Moses.

Next to that comes the flag of Fionn MacCumhaill's militia, the golden sunset on a blue ground, and the weight of opinion among all Irish students of research seems to favor this as the true national flag. Indeed, blue was always Ireland's national color until 1798.

Quite a number of other flags have figured in Irish history, and each of them has its line of enthusiastic supporters. Not the least popular among these is the flag exhibiting three golden crowns imposed on a blue ground, which figures at the present day in the arms of the Province of Munster.

This flag was accepted after the Norman invasion in the year 1170 as the ensign of Ireland, the three crowns representing the kingdoms of Desmond, Ormond and Thomond. It was retained until 1647, when Henry VIII. abolished it and substituted the harp.

Coming down to more recent times, it is found that the Parliament of Ireland, of which Henry Grattan was the head, did not recognize green, although it did accept the harp. That parliament's flag was a golden harp on a blue ground.

At the time of the Union with England in 1801 a new flag was evolved apparently for the express purpose of incorporating it with what is now known as the union jack, but it does not seem to have caught the popular fancy any more than the act of union.

This was the red saltire on a white ground, which was christened St Patrick's cross. Apparently it was taken from the arms of Trinity College at Dublin though how Dublin came by it is a mystery.

The tricolor of green, white and orange—"The orange and green, with the stripe of peace between"—is the recognized flag of the Irish Nationalists, whose aim is complete independence.—James T. Doyle, in Baltimore American.

LATEST PLANES ARE MARVELOUS

Can Do With Ease What Was Impossible.

Powerful Motor, Small Wings, the Secret.

The race for improvements in fighting planes between the allies and the central powers has been nip and tuck all the way, writes Will Irwin in the Saturday Evening Post. Late in 1915 the Germans sprang the first well recognized type of what the British call a scout machine. It was the famous Fokker, an exact copy of the French Morane—a return to the monoplane principle, which had been abandoned early in the war. Being able to fire through a propeller, it had supremacy until the French perfected a similar device.

The French then answered with a biplane of greater speed and greater practical agility. That killed the monoplane idea—at least for the time being. The latest machines are all of the biplane type. The new models have come out so fast that a layman has difficulty in keeping up with them.

Even the fastest, most agile machines of a year ago will be out of date this summer. In July, 1916, in the Verdun sector, I watched a squadron of scout machines manoeuvering. They handled themselves like a flock of swallows. Yesterday, at an aviation base near the front, I watched two aviators, but lately sent up from school, go through their morning practice. Travelling across the sky at an incredible speed, they seemed to turn in their own length; they rolled over on their axis as a swimmer rolls over in the water; they flipped their noses downward and dived; they brought themselves to level with a sharp twist.

Compared with these swallow machines I watched last year they seemed like humming birds. For the constructors, in planning this new type of machine, made an accidental discovery; an airplane is a motor on wings. Increase the spread of its wings in proportion to the power of its motor, and, while you add to its stability at a low pace and to its lifting power, you take away from its speed. The art of constructing a fast machine consists largely in giving it the smallest practical wing spread. It is the motor kicking with unheard of power against the air, not the wings gliding along the air, which makes it fly.

And this kind of machine, meeting with but little obstruction from its own wings, turned out to have a marvelous agility, a miraculous power of assuming unusual positions and getting itself out of them. Looping the loop, that maneuver over which the pioneer airmen debated for so long a time they dared make the attempt, is possible in one of the big wide-spreading observation machines. It must be done with skill and caution, however, else the aviator may wrench off a wing; further, it must be done slowly. That is about the easiest thing to do with a scout machine of the new fast type; its flip is like the jump of a trout at a fly. You can fly it for several seconds upside down; and you can make it roll over and over, like a dog.

A Painter's Retort.

Shortly after Franz Lenbach had painted the portrait of Emperor William I. a privy councilor called on him to express the Emperor's satisfaction. There was only one criticism to make—would the professor be so kind as to paint more distinctly the buttons on the uniform, which were only indicated vaguely? Lenbach looked at him a moment over his glasses and said, "Look here, Mr. Councilor, I paint heads, not buttons (Ich mal' nur koepfe, aber keine knoepfe!) Tell his majesty that!" The Emperor when this answer was brought to him laughed heartily.

Monsieur:

For 15 days in the month of January I was suffering with pain of rheumatism in the foot. I tried all kinds of remedies, but nothing did me any good. One person told me about MINARD'S LINIMENT, as soon as I tried it the Saturday night, the next morning I was feeling very good; I tell you this remedy is very good; I could give you a good certificate any time that you would like to have one. If any time I come to hear about any person sick of rheumatism, I could tell them about this remedy.

Yours truly,

SOME EGG LORE.

How to Test, How to Beat, How to Boil.

Are the eggs for which you pay 40 cents better than those which cost 30? Test them to see.

Much handling makes eggs shiny.

Those direct from the farm are dull.

If an egg is stale some of the water of its composition has evaporated through the porous shell, air has entered, and the egg is light.

To test, put in a deep pan of water.

First—If bad it will float.

Second—If stale it will be light enough to slant away from the bottom of the pan or stand on end.

Third—If fresh its weight causes it to sink.

This test will make you wish eggs could always be bought by the pound, as in some places, instead of by the dozen.

Because the eggshell is porous and readily absorbs impurities from a dirty shell or the air eggs should always be washed before being put away.

Second test. Hold egg before a candle or gas jet behind which is a dark background.

Around the yolk of an egg is a thin tissue, which holds the yolk together. When decomposition occurs the yolk together. When decomposition occurs the yolk breaks this membrane and becomes mixed with the white. By holding the egg before a strong light the yolk can easily be seen as a large dark spot.

If bad, the yolk has broken its membrane and this dark spot cannot be noticed.

There is also a tissue around the white of an egg which, in beating the whites stiff, must be broken into infinitesimal pieces before the egg will become light and fluffy.

A few grains of salt dropped into the white before beating will at each turn of the beater help to cut this membrane.

The whites then "beat up" much sooner than if the salt had not been added.

Table for cooking eggs without keeping time or temperature:

One egg, one-half pint of boiling water. Two or three eggs, a pint of boiling water. Three to five eggs, one and one-half pints of boiling water. Five to eight eggs, a quart.

Put the eggs into the water while it is boiling and immediately set the dish away from the fire. Fifteen or twenty minutes will be required to cook the eggs. After that time the water will have reached 140 degrees and will do no more cooking, but will keep the eggs warm a long time.

CONTINENT OF MARVELS.

Some of South America's "Greatest in the World."

Bring on the superlatives! We write of South America, the continent where are the world's greatest mountain ranges, densest forests and largest rivers.

Just for instance, the Amazon river system has over 50,000 miles of navigable waterway, enough to tie two loops around our planet. It can be navigated for 2,300 miles by ocean steamers, a greater distance than from New York to Panama.

The Rio de la Plata is 120 miles wide at its mouth.

And notwithstanding all Colonel Roosevelt's discoveries South America still has the largest unexplored area of any continent.

Almost everybody knows that Brazil is larger than Europe or the continental United States, but the size of the "little" republics is not so well known. Texas could be lost twice in "little" Venezuela and still leave room for Kentucky and Tennessee.

Peru could comfortably swallow California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, Arizona, Utah and Idaho.

And it is over 2,600 miles from one end of Chile to the other—almost as far as from New York to Glasgow!

Gold is found in every state of South America, and from Potosi alone the famous "peak of silver" in Bolivia, more than $2,000,000,000 in silver has been mined in the last three centuries.—World Outlook.

Ironing Kills the Germs.

One need not worry about receiving infection in clothes sent to a laundry even though they be washed with those of other families in which there may be infectious diseases. Such, in substance, is a report just issued by the United States public health service after an investigation by M. C. Schroeder and S. G. Southerland of the New York department of health. For whatever disease germs are not killed in the washing will be killed in the ironing. In fact, the ironing kills more germs than the washing.

There is, however, danger in having clothes washed by a laundress at her own home, for, "owing to the close quarters in which the laundresses live, there is possibility of reinfection of the clean linen if communicable diseases are present among the members of the laundress family."

"Undertakers."

In England in 1614 undertakers were men of influence who undertook for a consideration to get such persons returned to Parliament as would prove submissive to the royal will of King James I. The three chief undertakers of 1614 were Lords Bacon, Somerset and Neville. Then there were undertakers in Ireland in 1608. They were English and Scotch colonists sent to North Ireland and were each allotted 2,000 acres of land. They were men of capital and undertook to pay a mark a year for every six acres and to admit no recusant for tenants; hence the name as applied to them. But neither the histories nor the dictionaries give any reason for calling the men who bury our dead undertakers.

THE STATELY ELK.

It is the Most Beautiful of Our Remaining Wild Animals.

Now that the buffalo survives only in a few preserves the elk is the most interesting as it is the most beautiful of our remaining wild animals. In this day of Americanism it would be a fine thing if this typical American animal should come to be known by his Indian name of wapiti. The wapiti is the largest of the red deer family and closely resembles his smaller brother, the European stag. The wapiti is not properly an elk, as the European elk is more closely allied to the American moose.

The wapiti is now numerous only in the states of Wyoming, Idaho and Montana, though nearly 4,000 head are thought to remain in Colorado, and considerable numbers are scattered through western Canada. The Campfire Club of America and other organizations and individuals are working for its preservation. The favorite home of the elk is the Yellowstone National park, where he has no rifle to fear and where cougars, coyotes and timber wolves are kept under control. In the park and its vicinity are probably 50,000 head, distributed in two main herds.

During the summer months the elk live high up in the mountains, generally at an elevation of 8,000 to 11,000 feet. The grassy plateaus offer an ideal summer range. Even on the wooded sides of the highest ravines there are parklike glades where the elk late in the afternoons come out to feed. It is difficult to imagine a more beautiful sight than is then afforded by these stately and graceful animals. Although their number in the park may sometimes reach as high as 60,000 head, it is rare for visitors to see a single specimen. Visitors are taken in stages around a regular route arranged for viewing the natural phenomena of that great outdoor museum.

The elk dislike to be pursued by tourists with cameras and keep away from the stage routes. If visitors would leave the highways of the park and seek out its byways, either on foot or by pack and saddle trips, they would have a marvelous opportunity to study the greatest exhibit which survives of our mountain wild life—not only the elk, but mountain sheep, deer, beaver and many other animals.

WESTERLY RUSS FORCES ARE HOLDING

Keeping in Touch With Riga Coast—Others Retreat Rapidly.

GERMAN LANDING

Said to Be Object of Bombardment of the Coast.

Petrograd Cable — The military organ of the Riga front is of the opinion that the Germans were able to cross the Dvina because they knew absolutely the positions of all the Russian battery emplacements, and thus were able to silence the guns.

Military circles say that it is impossible to foresee what line the retiring Russians will eventually take up; that everything depends upon arresting the panic in the rear of the army, where there is great disorder.

"At present time," says the paper, "the braver units alone are retaining the shock of the German attacks. The bombardment of the coast south of Pernau may be regarded as preparation for a German landing, with the railway junctions connecting Reval, [illegible] and Pskoff as the objective."

The Russians already have fallen back more than thirty miles to the northeast, retreating behind the Livonian River Aa, past which the Germans are following them. The more westerly Russian forces, however, are still keeping in touch with the coast, in the evident effort not to lose this protection for their flank.

The supplementary communication issued from German general headquarters to-night, reads:

"The northern wing and centre of the 12th Russian army are rapidly retreating."

DID NOT LOSE A MAN.

The Berlin Tageblatt's correspondent on the Riga front, describing the passage of the Dvina River, says that this was accomplished without the loss of a man, thanks to the effect of the German artillery and mine-throwers. The Germans had assembled a greater number of mine-throwers than ever before and brought them into action after the regular artillery had bombarded the first and second lines for several hours.

The effect of the mass bombardment was literally overwhelming. Houses were reduced to fine dust and the demoralized Russian survivors fled. Bridges were thrown across the Dvina, at this point 400 yards wide, by which storming parties crossed and assaulted the first line heights. Other bridges, in the meantime, were being constructed, and the whole army was soon crossing while the regimental bands played.

The whole operation was carried out at such little cost that three divisions which were in the thick of the fighting had total casualties amounting to only 150 dead or wounded.

RUSSIAN REPORT.

Petrograd Cable — Wednesday's official statement says:

"Western front: In the direction of Riga, our troops, having crossed the Livonian River Aa, are continuing further retirement along the coast of the Gulf of Riga in a northeasterly direction. In the region of the Pskov road and the River Aa the enemy, continuing his offensive, reached the crossings of the River Aa near Abrant and below Hintzenberg, fifty versts (about 33 miles) from Riga. Our troops operating in an easterly direction from Riga retired under enemy pressure to Segewold, Lemburg and [illegible].

"The enemy ships which shelled the Gulf of Riga proved to be submarines.

"In the direction of Dvinsk there was lively artillery fighting. There were fusillades on the remainder of the front.

"Roumanian front: In the direction of Czernowitz in the region of Slobodzia, the enemy continues his attacks. Having occupied two fortified heights, he was driven out by our counter-attacks and the position restored. We took more than 200 prisoners.

"Caucasian front: The situation is unchanged."

PRUSSIAN GUARD HAS HAD ENOUGH

Struggle With Canadians Broke Their Nerves.

Loss After Blunders a Hard Blow.

(By Stewart Lyon, Canadian Press Correspondent with the Canadian Forces.)

Canadian Headquarters in France, Cable.—The famous Prussian Guard formations are war-weary and despondent over their experiences during the last three weeks on this part of the front. A prisoner of a regiment attached to the Fourth Guard division, which holds the enemy line in the vicinity of Hill 70, says that the losses in his regiment have been very great. By our attack on the morning of Saturday the Third Battalion was so badly cut up that the First Battalion had to be called on to take over part of the line. The officers of this battalion were not aware that our men held a certain trench well to the south of our front line. By their orders the Germans advanced up the trench until they came under the concentrated machine-gun fire of the Canadians holding the trench. In a few minutes half of the company were wiped out. In another part of the trench a similar experience befell another company.

These misfortunes cut the nerve of the enemy, and the circumstances of the attack Tuesday morning added to their demoralization. That attack was preceded by the projection of gas. Some drums of gas were thrown into the German trenches beyond the point to which it was intended that our men should penetrate. Dugouts are traps when gas is projected into the trenches as it seeks the lowest level available and settles there until gradually absorbed into the atmosphere. Forsaking their dugouts when the gas alarms began to ring, the enemy rushed up into the front-line trench and put on their gas masks. At that moment our barrage came down upon the trench, preparatory to an assault. The enemy lost many men by our artillery fire, and when our infantry came up it was but a half-hearted resistance that the shaken enemy offered.

No serious attempt has been made to recover the lost ground, which was almost the last position north of Lens from which the enemy could observe movement within our lines. There has been abnormal bombing activity by the enemy and shelling of the back area of high-velocity guns. The British aviators also have been extremely busy since the return of clear weather.

In one case a direct hit was made with a heavy bomb on an enemy aerodrome. The explosion violently bumped the attacking aeroplane, but it quickly righted and the aviator swung round and crossed the aerodrome at a height of 700 feet to observe the result of his lucky hit. Great clouds of black smoke were rolling up, and it was evident that a large part of the plant had been destroyed.

The use of machine-guns upon trains, lorry convoys and similar enemy targets during these forays is now so common that it is not thought worth while reporting such incidents.

STILL PREPARE FOR NEW DRIVE

British Fliers Far Behind German Lines.

Take Record Number of Photographs.

London Cable — That a new thrust by the British is immediately imminent on the German lines in Flanders is shown by to-night's report from headquarters, which reads:

"Our aeroplanes have continued their bombing operations actively day and night. Yesterday great activity in the air prevailed on both sides. Our artillery machines and balloons worked all day in co-operation with our artillery, despite vigorous attacks from hostile aeroplanes. A record number of aerial photographs were taken, many of them at great distances behind the line.

"Though the enemy's aeroplanes showed themselves disinclined to meet our fighting machines unless well to the east of the line, five hostile machines were brought down in combat and nine others were driven down out of control. Seven of our machines are missing.

"A strong party of the enemy endeavored to raid one of our posts east of Klein Zillebeke during the night, but was driven back by our fire with loss before reaching our position. Artillery activity continues on both sides of the Ypres battle front.

"Last night enemy aeroplanes again dropped bombs on different places behind our lines. A few casualties were caused in one of our hospital areas, and there was some damage to property in the civilian zone. There was no damage of military importance. One of the enemy's raiding machines was brought down by our fire and destroyed."

FRENCH REPORT.

Paris Cable — The official communication issued by the War Office Wednesday night reads:

"This morning, after a violent bombardment, the Germans delivered against the Californie Plateau two attacks, which were repulsed. One officer remained in our hands. There were spirited reciprocal artillery actions on both banks of the Meuse."

SWEDEN CHANGING.

Turning From Germany Toward the U. S.

Stockholm, Sept. [illegible] — Hjalmar Lundbohm has been appointed to undertake a special mission to the United States. The appointment is regarded as significant of a change in Sweden's commercial policy. Before the war Sweden's iron ore was to a considerable extent exported to the U. S. and Lundbohm's mission, it is understood, will undertake to reopen this traffic, which will cause a decrease in the quantity of iron ore sent to Germany. Not only the general situation, the result of the commercial policy of the Entente nations toward Sweden, causes her to seek relief, but Germany is no longer able to export sufficient coal for Sweden's demands, and forces Sweden to try to compensate her iron ore against American coal. This step, it is believed, will add to her independence of commercial relations with Germany.

BRANTFORD UNION LEADERS.

Brantford, Report.—The Trades and Labor Council here to-night elected these officers as follows: President, George [illegible]; Vice-President, Harry James; Recording Secretary, H. [illegible]; Financial Secretary, A. G. Brown; Corresponding Secretary, George Keen; Auditors and Trustees will be appointed at the next meeting. The Government will be petitioned to allow the Trades and Labor Council to nominate one man to each of the tribunals upon military service in Brant County.

GERMANY'S WAR PLANS SCORED

U. S. Bar Asso. Denounces Her Course.

Welcomes Country's Entry Into War.

Saratoga Springs, N. Y. Report.—The American Bar Association at its session to-day denounced the war methods of Germany as illegal.

The indictment of Germany, which was embodied in the formal report of the committee on international law, aroused no discussion except the suggestion, which was afterward adopted, that the document be sent to the committee on public information for such use as it may desire. The report denounced these acts of Germany:

Sinking merchant ships without summons, proclamation of a barred zone, conspiracies against the domestic peace and trade of the United States, murder of civilians, and assaults on women, wanton devastation of localities abandoned, looting of occupied regions, murder of Capt. Fryatt and threats to treat other mariners as franc tireurs, deportation of women and young girls, and sinking hospital ships and supply ships sailing under safe conducts from the German authorities.

"We welcome," said the report, "the entry of the United States into the war in conjunction with the Entente Allies for the purpose of checking such lawless excesses and overthrowing those forms of autocracy which menace the peace, security and civilization of the whole world."

The proposal to seek by Congressional action, or constitutional amendment, if necessary, a change in the date of the inauguration from March to January, was favored by some of the members on the ground that "other nations are developing very efficient administrations with terrible powers for destructive aggression and the present long period between the election and inauguration of a President exposes us to the gravest risks and may cause the loss of our separate existence as a nation."

The proposal was referred to a special committee for investigation.

WOMEN BLAMED.

At the Bottom of the Romanoff Plot.

Petrograd Cable — The aim of the conspiracy in connection with which Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovitch and others were arrested was the restoration of the autocracy. The chief conspirators were Mlle. Margaret Hitrovo, of Tobolsk, and Mme. Liubov Hitrovo, of Yelaburg, members of a well known bureaucratic family, both of whom were arrested.

In the home of Grand Duke Paul, when he was arrested, was found a mistress of the court, Mme. E. A. Narychaine, confidant of the former Dowager Empress Alexandra Feodorovna. Mme. Narychaine was not arrested, but an immediate domiciliary search of her home in Petrograd was made and her correspondence seized. According to the Birzheviya a number of officers have been arrested, and other grand dukes have been taken into custody. The State's attorney refuses to divulge their names. It is assumed that one of the Grand Dukes arrested was the candidate of the conspirators for the throne.

BIG GUNS BUSY FOR ITALIANS

Heavy Artillery Duels On Julian Front.

Germany Sending Men and Guns There.

Rome Cable.—The Italian official announcement reads:

"From Stelvio to Monte [illegible] there were the usual patrol actions.

"On the Julian front there was [illegible] activity by our airplanes.

"Last night, under favorable atmospheric conditions, thirty of our airplanes flew to Pola and [illegible] military works at this [illegible] port and the enemy fleet at anchor in the harbor and in the Fasana Canal. Nine tons of bombs were dropped on the targets, causing destruction and great conflagration. Our machines, although attacked by seaplanes and shelled by anti-aircraft batteries, returned safely to their bases.

"On Saturday night enemy aircraft made a [illegible] raid on [illegible] localities in the plain between the Lower Isonzo and the Tagliamento, causing casualties among the civil population and soldiers in barracks."

SKODAS FOR GERMANY.

Geneva Cable — A dispatch from Innsbruck says that after several urgent appeals Field Marshal von Hindenburg has consented to send ten divisions of Bavarian troops from the Russian to the Isonzo front to strengthen the Austrian defence. The Skoda factory, the dispatch adds, is working twenty-four hours a day to supply heavy artillery in order to protect Hermada Heights, the key to Trieste.

The Austrian appeal for aid from Germany is considered significant here, especially since President Wilson's reply to the Pope's peace note has been made public.

RAID UPON RAID UPON HUN BASES

British Naval Fliers Pound Foe in Belgium.

Many Tons of Bombs—Good Work Done.

London Cable.—Many tons of bombs have been dropped in further raids on German military establishments in Belgium, causing large fires. The Admiralty to-day gave out the following account of these operations:

"At midnight on the third instant a bombing raid was carried out by naval aircraft on the Bruges docks, the Varssenaere airdrome, and the Ghistelles airdrome. Many tons of bombs were dropped with good results."

"A second raid on the Bruges docks was made at noon on Sept. 4. Direct hits were observed on special targets. Many sheds along the quayside were hit, and large fires which were caused were still seen to be burning when the machines recrossed the line. All our machines returned from both raids.

"On Monday afternoon, the third instant, an enemy aircraft spotting machine was engaged by one of our fighter patrols and shot down, completely out of control. An enemy kite balloon also was attacked, and the observer was forced to jump out. Owing to the anti-aircraft fire, the fate of the kite balloon was not observed."

CANADIANS WIN NEARER TO LENS

Penetrate Foe Trenches of Front of 600 Yards.

Western Troops Engaged in the Attack.

(By Stewart Lyon, Canadian Press Correspondent with the Canadian Forces.)

Canadian Army Headquarters, cable — North of Lens a most successful minor operation was carried out early this morning which resulted in the penetration of the enemy's line and communication trenches on a front of about six hundred yards, and the establishing of a new outpost line well in advance of these formerly occupied and killing and wounding many of the enemy. A number of prisoners were taken belonging to the Second Guard Reserve Regiment. The result of the operation, which was carried out by men of Manitoba and Alberta Battalions, with the loss, is that in the region due north of Lens, our outpost line has been advanced some 250 yards nearer the city than before and is in a more favorable position for observation.

While this operation was in progress, another party of our men advanced eastward for a considerable distance along the enemy's communication trenches on the north of Lens.

Heavy shelling by our artillery in the Lens sector has forced the Germans to abandon their first line defences and use shell holes instead. Several large explosions occurred in Lens last night and this morning.

IN BRILLIANT MOONLIGHT.

London Cable.—Telegraphing to-day from the front, Reuter's correspondent at British Army Headquarters says:

"About midnight the Canadians once again bit in upon the outer shell of Lens. In the brilliant moonlight a raiding party went over from our front, opposite Cite Sainte Elizabeth. Whilst the enemy was busy dealing with this incursion another party moved out farther south and along a front of about 600 yards. They succeeded in establishing posts from about 250 yards forward of their front lines. A few prisoners of the 2nd Prussian Guards Reserve Regiment were brought back. The raiders found the Germans chiefly in shell holes, into which they had been driven by our artillery fire."

RUSS RETREAT FROM RIGA IS STILL GOING ON

Burning Villages Behind Them to Check the Advancing Foe.

PETROGRAD SAFE

Weather Protects Capital, but Reval May be Captured

London Cable.—From Riga to the east of Uxkull the Russians continue in full retreat before the Germans, those from the evacuated port and arsenal making their way north-eastward along the coast of the Gulf of Riga and those from Uxkull and vicinity endeavoring to reach the Riga-Pskoff-Petrograd railway line.

Behind them the Russians left Riga partly aflame as the result of the German shells hurled into the town before they departed, while the smouldering ruins of small villages mark the path over which the other contingents have passed, having been set on fire during the retreat.

Along the eastern coast of the Gulf of Riga for a distance of about 60 miles north of the evacuated town German warships are shelling various towns, possibly with the intention of covering a landing of troops, whose object would be to cut off the retreat of the Riga army, or turn its flank, thereby entirely clearing the gulf shore region and giving Prince Leopold of Bavaria a base, possibly at Pernau, whence to operate overland, in conjunction with the naval forces, toward Reval, Russia's principal port on the Gulf of Finland, in an endeavor to seal up the Russian fleet inside the gulf.

While the Germans were knocking at the gates of Riga from the west and south-west, hurling shells of all calibres and loosing gas waves against the town, loyal Russian troops held them back long enough to blow up the fortifications at the mouth of the Dvina and raze the bridges over the waterway to the south where the defection in the ranks of the Russians apparently was greatest, the Germans, according to the Berlin official communication, took some thousands of prisoners and also captured more than 150 guns and large quantities of war material.

BOMBARDMENT OF THE CITY.

Reuter's Petrograd correspondent says the German attack on Riga had been anticipated for a considerable time, and that the evacuation of the principal establishments already had been proceeded with and provision had been made to abandon the town owing to the slight resistance expected from the troops on the northern front, who, as elsewhere, were largely contaminated by the international and Maximalist propaganda. At the time of the German advance in 1915 virtually all the factories in Riga were removed to Central Russia.

The offensive began Sept. 1. The artillery preparations commenced at 5 o'clock in the morning with asphyxiating shells and gas waves. The bombardment lasted six hours, being particularly intense in the region of Kull. At 11 o'clock in the morning, under cover of his artillery fire, the enemy threw his first pontoons across the Dvina. Two of his bridges were destroyed by Russian batteries. At 1 o'clock the Germans had succeeded in gaining a footing on the right bank of the river.

Throughout the afternoon bitter struggles took place, the loyal element among the Russian troops constantly counter-attacking and advancing against the enemy, their flags unfurled and singing the "Marseillaise." During the night, however, the Germans, having received reinforcements, compelled the Russians to retire to the north of the line of Kull Oger.

Col. Shumsky, military critic of the Petrograd Bourse Gazette, who is on a visit to England, writing concerning the evacuation of Riga, says the German offensive there cannot be carried to a point at which it will seriously threaten Petrograd.

An offensive movement of over 400 versts, Col. Shumsky says, would require not less than two months, and in the next two or three weeks the rainy season and bad roads will render impossible any movement on Petrograd this year. The routes leading to the capital are protected not only by the line of the Dvina, but also by strong positions, formed by the lake system in the Pskoff region, which are well fortified. It is incredible that the Germans can overcome these obstacles before the rainy season, the writer adds, even if they do not meet with serious resistance from the Russians.

Col. Shumsky says there are not sufficient German forces on the eastern front for a great expedition of the kind required to reach Petrograd, and he scouts the idea of the Germans landing a big army for an attack.

"The aim of the German blow," Col. Shumsky concludes, "is Riga, and perhaps Reval, which is scarcely possible, but no farther."

RETREAT CONTINUES.

The Russian official statement of the retreat from Riga reads:

"In the direction of Riga on Monday our troops evacuated the town of Riga and blew up behind them the fortifications at the mouth of the Dvina and bridges across the Dvina. The retirement is being continued along the coast in a northeasterly direction. The villages of Kahll about 27 miles south of Pernau (which lies 100 miles north of Riga), Mainashin, Koshaul and Pidze on the Gulf of Riga coast are being shelled by enemy ships.

"In the direction of Uxkull on Monday the Germans continued to develop their success in a northerly direction. Towards evening the enemy dislodged our troops in the Great Jaegel region penetrating our positions on a front of thirteen versts (about nine miles), in the region of Valenrode and occupying it. Our troops are retiring northward. Following the enemy's penetration measures were taken for the readjustment of our front. In the region of Mitden, Rybnik and Kramzein our troops, failing to withstand the pressure of the enemy, are retiring in a northeasterly direction."

TRIPLE SHIP OUTPUT.

France Has Big Plans for Coming Year.

Paris Cable — France expects to be able to construct three times as many vessels for the merchant marine during 1918 as during normal times before the war, according to an official announcement made today.

"A minute survey of the situation has just been completed by Anatole de Monzie, Under-Secretary of Merchant Marine," says the announcement, "which he conducted for the purpose of establishing precisely what supplies of metal and materials are available, what quays, docks and slips can be counted on, and what labor is at hand. His investigations convince him that he can triple the peace-time tonnage, and he has completed a programme accordingly, a programme which allows for added dockbuilding also, so that the ultimate tonnage can be increased to an even greater extent than planned for 1918."

BRITISH SHIP LOSS HEAVIER

Twenty Of Over 1,600 Tons Sunk Last Week,

And Three of Tonnage Less Than That.

London Cable — British merchant ships sunk by mine or submarine in the past week numbered twenty of more than 1,600 tons and three under 1,600 tons, according to the official announcement to-night.

British merchant vessels sunk the previous week by mine or submarine numbered eighteen over 1,600 tons and five under 1,600 tons.

The weekly summary: Arrivals, 2,[illegible]; sailings, 2,433.

British merchant vessels over 1,600 tons sunk, including two previously, twenty; under 1,600 tons, including one previously, three.

Fishing vessels sunk, none.

British merchant vessels unsuccessfully attacked, including five previously, nine.

ABANDONED.

Socialist Conference in Switzerland Fails.

Stockholm Cable — The plans for the Socialist conference at Zimmerwald, Switzerland, to be held ten days after the Socialist conference here, has been abandoned, because of the great difficulties the delegates who came here met through trouble in obtaining passports.

Some representatives from Russia are here, and other foreigners, mostly Germans, are expected to arrive within the next few days, to settle definitely whether the conference will be held without complete representations or be abandoned. The attitude of the Socialists to demand of the Governments of the Allies that they grant passports to delegates has been totally dropped, and it is impossible to get leading Socialists to make a statement on the prospects of the conference. In well-informed circles, however, it is considered that the recent British labor conference at Blackpool smashed any hope to get the Stockholm conference together. Pieter J. Troelstra, the Dutch Socialist leader, said that the Russian delegation to Blackpool could be expected at Stockholm within a week, and that then there would be time to decide, what to do.

Stockholm, Sept. 6.—The conference of women of belligerent and neutral countries has been postponed until the internal Socialistic conference has been held.

HOLLAND'S FOOD.

Special Mission in U. S. to Make Terms.

Washington Report — The special mission from Holland to the United States arrived at an Atlantic port today.

The special Dutch Mission comes to the United States bringing information as to the food situation in Holland and statistics covering Dutch exports and imports of the last three years requested by the American Government in a recent note handed to Minister van Rappard.

Negotiations looking to the shipment of foodstuffs to Holland will be taken up by the mission where broken off a week ago, when the exports administrative board declined to permit the sailing of nearly 100 Dutch ships loaded with food and cattle feed.

The situation in Holland has presented one of the hardest problems that has faced the exports board in its attempt to put into effect a rationing system for the northern European neutrals. The Dutch buy most of their grain from other countries and export large quantities of dairy and meat products to Germany. The American Government desires to stop this food exportation to the enemy and at the same time does not want to go so far as to impose any actual hardship on Holland.

ARGENTINE STRIKE.

Men On Leading Lines All Threatening.

Buenos Aires, Report — Employees of the Pacific Railroad last night formulated demands upon the company, while workmen of the Central and Cordoba companies are awaiting a reply to their demands, and workers for the Great Western Railway have presented demands, threatening to strike immediately. Thousands of workmen are now out in the general railroad strike.

The strikers at the plant of the German Electric Company refused the company's offer, and the men remaining at work joined the strikers. Naval forces are guarding the naval stokers in the power house of the German Electric Company. Officials of the Santa Fe Railroad have asked the provincial government for troops to guard the right of way, workmen of the company having threatened to re-strike after the settlement last week, which ended an extensive destruction of property.

ALBERTA WHEAT MOSTLY CUT.

Regina, Sask., Report.—Eighty per cent. of the wheat in the province is cut, according to the weekly crop report of the Department of Agriculture. About 25 per cent of the oats and barley is also cut. On the whole, the weather has been favorable, and the threshing will be general by the end of the present week. Labor throughout the province is fairly adequate, with the assistance given by business men in different places.

Gunner Angus McIntosh Who Gave His Life

A memorial service was held in the Elsinore Presbyterian church on Sunday afternoon, when the Rev. G. C. Campbell made special reference to the men who had laid down their lives for their country.

Gunner McIntosh, whose death was announced in The Times three weeks ago, was a member of the Elsinore church, and it was in this church of his early days where he gave himself to Christ, and where he had the desire to follow his Master in the gospel ministry.

Gunner McIntosh was just completing his course in theology when the call to serve his country came to him, and he enlisted in the artillery.

The church was packed with friends from all over the countryside, and the sermon was very impressive.

THE COAL SITUATION

Mr. G. McLaren spent last week in London and Buffalo in the hope of being able to secure coal for supplying his customers.

The Times, in conversation with Mr. McLaren, asked if coal was plentiful.

"No it is not," said he. "The daily papers, through their reports that there was plenty of coal, have created an entirely wrong impression."

"I spent nearly a week following up clues where coal could be purchased. The regular companies still promise, as they have for the past six months, that they will give us our orders, but the trouble is they are not doing it. That is why we went to those cities, and that is why we have purchased a quantity of dear coal from the broker.

"What do you mean by broker?"

"Well, it's this. Early in the season the orders for coal were 30 per cent greater than last year. The company we dealt with for nearly 40 years promised to give us our tonnage, but it has not been coming.

"In order to secure coal various companies sent buyers right to the mines, and as coal was mined by the trainload they bought it and paid for it before it was started away. As a result of this the mine owners have received more for their coal, and as they have been paid spot cash, they have desired to sell it that way. These men at the mines having purchased the coal have sold it through brokers, and they have received a recompense, too, thus again raising the price of coal if you want it right away and want it badly. The U. S. government ordered that the mine owner could not charge more than 75c extra at the mine, and the broker could only receive 30c. This raised coal at once $1.05 per ton higher than the regular line companies were selling for. But the thing is: You can buy the dear coal if you have the cash, while you must wait if you want the coal of the regular companies, which is coming over slowly."

"We therefore bought considerable of the dear coal and had to pay spot cash for it. We have bought this coal for safety. Our regular coal may come, but we are trying to solve this coal problem for our customers and believe it good business to put in some of the dearer coal.

The coal situation is serious, it will be worse as cold weather comes on, and people can make up their minds to that."

Life in the Gunroom

The one place in a warship where pleasure in life finds its most joyous expression is the bubbling, exuberant, devil-may-care gunroom.

Here live the sub-lieutenants, the midshipmen, the assistant paymasters (otherwise A.P.'s), and all the other junior and irrepressible officers. With such a tenantry one may easily guess that dull quietude never clouds the gunroom's day—and certainly not its nights.

For the most part those who have their habitat in it are mere boys in so far as years are concerned, though made capable by long training of taking on a man's job and doing it efficiently.

A midshipman in charge of a picket boat may be a model of smartness and restrained dignity. He will handle his little "command" with an air of more than greybeard confidence, rap out his orders in tones that have just the right amount of "bite" in them, and generally appear so staid and competent that one might think all the boyishness had been trained out of him, writes "Jackstaff" in The London Mail. But see that same midshipman a few hours later acting as a "dog of war" in the gunroom, and there will be nothing of the prematurely grown-up discernible about him.

Gunrooms themselves have changed with the ships. Instead of being dark, uncomfortable holes below the orlop deck, as in old times, they are now comfortable enough as a rule, though better in some vessels than in others. But gunroom law and gunroom ways have altered little.

The senior sub-lieutenant is ruler of the mess, and he wields a more autocratic power within his turbulent little domain than does any king, kaiser or sultan on earth. Being unquestionably the all-highest within his own particular sphere, whatever he says goes—and a bad time often happens to anyone who tries to stop it, for his subjects must yield him unquestioning obedience or suffer the consequences of their insubordination.

Like all absolute monarchs, the "senior sub" has myrmidons to enforce his will, the said myrmidons being a number of midshipmen who act as "dogs of war"—that is their time honored and official title. When the "senior sub" desires anyone removed from his presence he orders, "Dogs of war, out So-and-so," and the "dogs" gleefully obey his behest.

Promptly they fall upon "So-and-so"—an avalanche of lusty youth—and if he is as big as a church out he has to go, neck and crop, from the gunroom. Naturally this "outing" business does not go through without some commotion.

Whenever the marine sentry on the halfdeck outside hears the gun room furniture begin to fly around he knows that the "dogs of war" have been unloosed and that "dogs" and their quarry will soon come hurtling madly through the door. A man may be "outed" for breaking the rules, or just because the "senior sub" thinks he ought to be "outed." The "sub" has not to give any reasons for his decisions to anybody.

When after dinner the "sub" picks up a fork and strikes an overhead beam with it or sticks it into the table all the junior members of the gun-room must leave it helter-skelter. And they obey the signal in the quickest possible time, tumbling over each other in their eagerness to get out, for the last to leave will be grabbed by the "dogs of war," who in their own effective way teach him the desirability of being quicker in his movements next time. All this is the outcome of buoyant roystering animal spirit, which intends no harm and succeeds in accomplishing some good.

Every young officer has to "go through the hoop," and it does not hurt him, either. Rather is he all the better for the rough-and-ready disciplining he gets at the hands of his exuberant messmates of the gun room, who certainly possess this virtue, that they are no sycophants and will not tolerate any fellow "putting on side," whoever he may be. And there is no better way of teaching any person than by letting all the nonsense be knocked out of him by those of his own kind.

If a midshipman does anything for which the commander thinks he should be punished, the "bloke" does not treat the matter as seriously as he would if the offender were a senior. "All right," he says, "take Mr. Lanyard to the senior sub and tell him to give him half a dozen." And the senior sub sees that Mr. Lanyard gets "his dose" in full measure. A cane or a dirk scabbard—preferably the latter because it hurts most—is the gun room's favorite chastising weapon, and the "laying on" is done so lustily that, once experienced, it is never forgotten.

In favor of this custom it should be said that the offender gets what is due to him—and there is an end to the matter. The fault does not count against him permanently as it would if "logged." As to why he got "cobbed" it might be that Mr. Lanyard did not bring his boat alongside smartly enough or in some other way he showed slackness in carrying out his duties; nothing which deserved to be permanently recorded against him, but which for his own good and the good of the service could not be wholly ignored.

The navy, you see, does not allow its young officers to start the wrong way, and for putting them in the right way gunroom discipline is the most effective and convenient method.

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper.

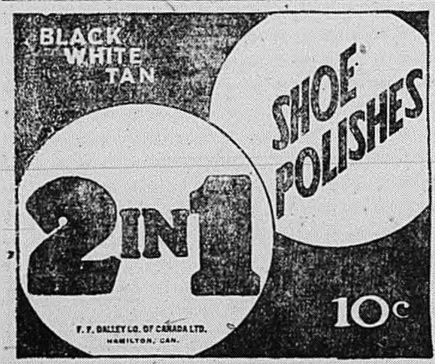
Just a Suggestion.

Before a man is hired to work at certain munitions plants he is required to give a complete account of himself and to answer a series of printed questions on a regular form.

The most important question of all appears at the head of each pedigree form. It is printed in bold faced type—it inquires, "Where shall we ship your remains?"

Many a prospective workman gets "cold feet" when this significant inquiry greets his eyes.—New York Sun.

Debt is the prolific mother of folly and crime.—Beaconsfield.



NO MAN'S LAND.

Out there is a place, where horrors grow apace,
And grim, game humor laughs at the stricken sky—
Whose only natural grace, is a dead man's ghastly face,
And shattered forms of heroes who laid them down to die.

Nameless land of shot, of reek and deathly rot,
Between two muddy ditches coming like a line,
To show each side in truth what it can do sans ruth,
Where no tears, but blood makes the earth so salt and brine.

Your sand or solid rock, the trend of many a shock,
Is stain'd red o'er and o'er in many a place;
For when a charge is made, and men are blade to blade,
And the hate-blood in their veins begins to race.

They struggle in your pits, shell-scarred from many fights,
And leave their sick'ning trail of red behind;
The changes, the retreats, as each faction fiercely meets,
They leave with you their toll of War's Eternal Grind.

All alone, with no-man's claim, not even in a name,
Yet, fought for as a precious, gloried prize;
"No-man's" suits you well, for what man would own a hell,
Where ghosts of armies dead shall ever whitely arise.

And, coldly pointing on, the dead, to the ghastly road ahead,
That shimmers in its ghastly, shining light,
"Everyman's" the name it bears, everyman its burdens share,
From "No-man's" and the centre of the fight.

Spanking Doesn't Cure!
Don't think children can be cured of bed-wetting by spanking them. The trouble is constitutional, the child cannot help it. I will send to any mother my successful home treatment, with full instructions. If your children trouble you in this way, send no money, but write me to-day. My treatment is highly recommended to adults troubled with urine difficulties by day or night. Address.

Making a Garden.

Agriculture is nearly as old as man, and since it began it is probable that farmers have been studying out balanced rations for domestic animals, but even yet few housekeepers have any real scientific ideas on feeding the family. Your state agricultural college or the department of agriculture, Washington, can help you out in this, and you should take the matter into consideration in making your garden and see to it that your vegetables include the most nutritious and health-giving properties. Every farmer knows that when a horse works all day he should receive certain feed, and when he is idle—in rainy weather, for instance—he gets different rations. How about a man or a child? Do you know how to set your table to get the maximum results and keep perfect health? Do you serve the same food to the men working in the heat of the harvest field, to the boy going to school and to the babies? Your garden should contribute to the health and happiness of each.—Reclamation Record.

Now She Hates Her.

Now she hates one of her oldest friends. Yesterday she was downtown with this friend, and just before noon she said to the other lady, "Well, I am going over here and catch my car." Then the other said to her: "Well, I am going home, too; I'll go over on Main and catch mine. I am awfully glad I ran across you, and I want you to come to see me real soon." Martha said she would, and the two parted. A few minutes later Martha went into a place to get a bite of something to eat, and what do you think? Yes, there she was eating lunch. "I didn't want her to ask me to go to lunch with her," Martha explained to us after she returned from town, "but I don't see why she wanted to slip away. I don't see why she wanted to pretend that she was going home. I am sure I am able to buy my own lunch, but I want her to return those patterns she borrowed, and I never expect to set foot in her house again."—Claude Callan in Fort Worth Star-Telegraph.

A Marvellous Medicine For Little Ones
Mrs. Delvina Pelletier, Ste. Perpetue, Que., writes: "I have much pleasure in stating that Baby's Own Tablets have been a marvellous medicine in the case of my baby. I have been using the Tablets for four years and don't think there is anything to equal them." In using the Tablets the mother has the guarantee of a Government analyst that they do not contain one particle of opiates or other harmful drugs—they cannot possibly do harm—they always do good. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Cleaning Shiny Serge.

If anybody could invent a process to remove the shine from a worn suit his or her fortune would be assured. The shine cannot be permanently removed from any material, but it can be so treated that it will keep its shiny face in the background for a little while. First of all brush the garment well. Then purchase a lump of ammonia from a drug store and dissolve it in one pint of boiling water. With an old stocking—this is better than any other cloth—dipped in ammonia solution rub the shiny part backward and forward. Wash off the ammonia with a brush and clean hot water. Hang the suit up to dry in the shade. When pressing the garment wet it with hot (not boiling water) instead of cold. Lay the cloth on the suit and press with a hot iron until dry. Then wet the cloth again and iron lightly, but not enough to dry the cloth. It is this latter treatment that gives the material the dull new finish to take the place of the old shine.

Summer Over Oysters Ripe

Now comes the welcome oyster, after a short summer breathing spell, to relieve the variety of the fruits of the soil with the finest fruit of the sea.

The oyster men who have examined their beds say the oysters are in the pink of condition. They are so fine that there is talk of putting up the price lest the oysters blush when put on the table alongside of high-priced steaks and roasts. Carloads of the first September oysters will be eaten raw as soon as they are out of the shell. But there are hundreds of palatable ways of preparing them. Here follows some good recipes:

FRIED OYSTERS.

For frying, large oysters should be selected. Parboil them just enough to plump them, but not enough to curl the edges much. Drain carefully, and lay the oysters in the folds of a towel to absorb all moisture. Season each oyster with salt and white pepper, dip in fine breadcrumbs, then in egg beaten with one tablespoonful water, and again in crumbs, being careful to coat every portion of each oyster thoroughly. Fry in deep hot fat, and drain on unglazed paper.

OYSTER COCKTAIL.

For each cocktail into each glass put one and one-half tablespoonfuls tomato catsup, one teaspoonful Worcestershire sauce, one teaspoonful lemon juice, three drops of tobasco sauce, and five small oysters. Serve very cold. To serve them at their best, oyster cocktails must be prepared individually. Serve in glass sherbet cups if the cocktail glasses are not at hand.

OYSTER FRITTERS.

Drain and chop a pint of oysters. Mix with them the strained oyster liquid, adding enough water to make two scant cupfuls. Mix to a batter with two cupfuls of flour and a teaspoonful salt. When it is smooth, stir in a tablespoonful of olive oil and two eggs well beaten. Drop a spoonful into hot fat and fry a delicate brown. Drain a moment on unglazed paper and serve hot.

OYSTER PIE.

Drain the liquor form a quart of oysters; scald, strain and add two level tablespoonfuls butter, salt and pepper to taste, half a cupful rich milk and bread crumbs to make slightly thick. Boil a few minutes, then put in the oysters and cook until the edges begin to curl. Remove from the fire, and when slightly cool add the beaten yolks of three eggs. Line a buttered baking dish with rich paste, fill it with uncooked rice to support the top cover of paste. Put on the top paste and bake in a good oven until nicely browned. Then carefully lift off the top, remove the rice and fill with the oyster mixture. Put on the top, let get very hot in the oven and serve at once.

PHILADELPHIA BROILED OYSTERS.

Pick over and drain one pint of oysters, tip each in melted butter, then into fine cracker crumbs seasoned with salt and pepper. Butter an oyster broiler and lay the oysters in; broil until the juice flows, then serve on hot buttered toast. Pour a brown sauce over the oysters.

BROWN SAUCE.

Melt a rounding tablespoonful of butter, and when it begins to color stir in one rounding tablespoonful of flour and cook until frothy, then turn in one cup of oyster liquid and cook three or four minutes. Season with salt and pepper.

HAVE YOU A BAD SORE?
If so, remember these facts—Zam-Buk is by far the most widely used balm in Canada! Why has it become so popular? Because it heals sores, cures skin diseases, and does what is claimed for it. Why not let it heal your sore?
Remember that Zam-Buk is altogether different to the ordinary ointments. Most of these consist of animal fats. Zam-Buk contains no trace of any animal fat, or any mineral matter. It is absolutely herbal.
Remember that Zam-Buk is at the same time healing, soothing, and antiseptic. Kills poison instantly, and all harmful germs. It is suitable alike for recent injuries and diseases, and for chronic sores, ulcers, etc. Test how different and superior Zam-Buk really is. All druggists and stores at 50c. box. Use also Zam-Buk Soap. Relieves sunburn and prevents freckles. Best for baby's bath. 25c. tablet.

Mother and Son.

She had presented white feathers to consumptive young men in civilian clothes; she had bothered wounded soldiers with her effervescent amiability; she had suspected every soldier's wife she met of secret drinking; she had pried into the private affairs of munition workers; and now she was busy teaching young mothers how to bring up their children.

One morning she saw a small boy standing at a street corner, looking very disconsolate and not very well nourished.

"Haven't you any home, little boy?"

"Yessum!"

"Father and mother?"

"'Course I have!"

"Do your parents look after you properly."

"Dad does."

"Well, look here, little man, you bring your mother along to the Central Hall to-morrow to hear my lecture on the upbringing of children, will you? By the way, what is your name?"

"Oh, stop talking nonsense, mother!" exclaimed the boy. "Surely you know your own child!"—Pittsburgh Chronicle.

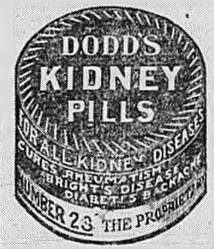
NETTING U-BOATS.

How the Work is Done by Britain's Trawlers.

A submarine net is made of wire rope, about as thick as a lead pencil, and the meshes are of great size—about 10 or 15 feet square. The net has floats on top that keep bobbing up and down like a float on a fish line and on the bottom are weights that keep the whole thing in a perpendicular position. The submarine cannot submerge to very great depths on account of the pressure—200 feet being about the limiting depth. It sails innocently along, therefore, until it pushes its nose into these meshes. The net now trails along on both sides of the submarine, its progress revealing the fact that something below is supplying the motive power. Perhaps the net suddenly stops; that means that the hidden submarine has stopped, its navigators having made the horrible discovery that they are trapped—or perhaps the net has become twisted in the propeller. Under these conditions the wise submarine rises to the surface. It surrenders, becomes the property of the enemy, and its crew are made prisoners. If it does not take such action, one of two things will happen. The enemy will wait upon the surface until the submersible comes up, or if it starts moving the enemy will follow until the inevitable uprising. But perhaps the surface commander gets impatient. In such a case he can let a bomb down in the water, which will explode when it touches the roof of the submarine. Of course, the submerged Germans know that this bomb is likely to drop at any minute; the "psychology" of such a situation tends to persuade the imprisoned crew to surrender.—World's Work.



MOUNTAIN CLIMBING.

Care Should Be Taken to Minimize the Danger of Accidents.

At least three-fourths of the accidents that occur in mountaineering are the results of foolhardiness.

More than half of the entire number of accidents happen to persons climbing without guides, some to climbers attempting a dangerous or impossible route with guides, and there are still other forms of folly. One may carelessly engage an incompetent guide or an overbold one, who will undertake an ascent under unfavorable conditions.

Eliminating these contingencies there remain certain risks which must be taken by every climber who ascends difficult mountains.

However fine the weather, there is the possibility that a sudden storm may render the descent perilous, though even then the chances are ten to one that a skillful climber with first-class guides will return in safety. Furthermore, on certain mountains there are places where a party is exposed to danger from avalanches or falling stones.

The risk may often be reduced to the minimum by waiting for the best of weather or by making a very early start.—All Outdoors.

Trouble On the 'Phone.

A new use for the trouble department of a telephone office has been discovered. The family had not had their telephone very long, and every one took a deep and abiding interest in it. On the outside of the directory they had noted the words, "Trouble, call No. 4217."

It had been a hard morning, and everything had gone wrong. Finally the lady of the house, in desperation, turned to her trusty telephone and called 4217.

"This is the trouble department," answered the operator sweetly.

"Is this where you report your troubles?" asked the lady.

"Yes, ma'am."

"Well, I only wanted to report that our cat got drowned in the cistern this morning; the baby is cutting a new tooth; the cook left without warning; we are out of sugar and starch; the stovepipe fell down; the milkman left only a pint instead of a quart to-day; the bread won't raise; my oldest child is sickening with the measles; the plumbing in the cellar leaks; we have only enough coal to last through until to-morrow; the paint gave out when I got only half over the dining-room floor; the mainspring of the clock is broken; my three sisters-in-law are coming to visit to-morrow; the dustman has not called for two weeks; our dog has the mange; the looking-glass fell off the wall a little while ago and broke to pieces; and I think that my husband is taking considerable notice of a widow lady that lives next door. That's all to-day, but if anything happens later I'll call you up and tell you about it."

SEW IN THE STREET.

Women Who Mend Clothes Right There While You Wait.

In many towns of China one may have his garments mended on the street and "while he waits." Native sewing women are to be seen on low stools, perhaps on the sidewalks, mending articles of masculine attire.

The accomplishments of these street seamstresses are somewhat limited, their efforts with the needle being for the most part confined to "running." Other branches of needlework are practically unknown to them. As a consequence, their efforts are better appreciated by native workmen than by foreign travelers.

They are never short of patrons among the former, for these are often natives of other districts and, having come to the city to engage in business, have no one to mend for them at home, they are glad to avail themselves of the services of the street needlewoman. For this class of customers the itinerant sewing woman answers every purpose.

Generally speaking, these women are wives of boatmen and laborers who live in the houseboats which line the creeks of many Chinese cities and towns, and their services are a great help toward the solution of the problem of maintenance in a crowded city or town.

The Clever Brahman.

Speaking of the great power the Brahmans in India possess in localizing thought, a prominent Brahman once said: "We would consider a game of chess as played in this country mere child's play. An ordinary Brahman chess player would carry on three or four games at a time without inconvenience. The usual game played by the Brahmans consists in checkmating with one pawn designated when the play begins. I have seen a man perform a long problem in multiplication and division, at the same time noting the various sounds and discussions going on about him in the room. I have seen a man compose a triple acrostic in Sanskrit in a given metre, at the same time having three well versed men trying to overthrow him in his arguments on religion."

GIVES LLOYD GEORGE CREDIT FOR BRITAIN'S BIG WAR WORK

Lord French Says He Did What Kitchener Said Would Take Eight Years.

New York Despatch—The Tribune this morning publishes the following dispatch from its correspondent in London, under yesterday's date:

"The text of Lord French's interview in the Paris Journal on the anniversary of the Battle of the Marne, in which he astonished Britain by praising Lloyd George as the man who accomplished in a few months what Lord French says Kitchener declared it would take eight years to do, was received here to-day. The frankness with which the former commander-in-chief discussed the mistakes of Great Britain in the early days of the war has produced a lively controversy."

The interview as received from Paris, reads:

We had only one idea—Joffre, myself and all our commanders — and that was to save Paris and avoid also any doubtful engagement which might have turned into irreparable failure. We passed then through days of uncertainty and grave anxiety. Nothing seemed natured. The manoeuvres on which we counted were going wrong. The positions we hoped to hold had to be abandoned. We wondered when we would be able to stop.

One day Joffre informed me he was going to cease the retreating movement and defend Paris on the line of the Marne. I spent the day personally reconnoitering the positions in the neighborhood of Lagny, Laforte and Sous-Jouarre.

On the following day, changing his opinion under the pressure of events, Joffre decided he should fall back still further down the line to the Seine, and there take the offensive. I agreed.

Then, about Sept. 3 and 4, came the extraordinary manoeuvre of von Kluck, who, instead of descending upon us directly, moved obliquely toward the southeast. He was actually engaged in this manoeuvre when he learned of the presence of the British army, which was still standing firm, and of the existence of the sixth French army, formed to protect the capital. He was then menaced on the flank, and even before the troops of General Maunoury crossed the Ourcq he had begun a precipitate retreat.

Von Kluck saved his army, but it was astonishing to me that he did not continue straightforward in an attempt to force a passage of the river. We were then able, by a converging movement, to contribute usefully to the success of the great battle, the full honor for which belongs to Joffre.

Asked to what he attributed the relative stagnation to which his army was reduced for long after the victory, Lord French replied:

"Regarding the operation I directed, it was attributable to an insufficiency of effectives and material. France expected from us at the most six divisions, which were to have helped her wait the moment when Russia was absolutely ready. We paid there the price for not having consented to conscription in peace times.

"Later, when the Germans were practically beaten, I was forced, for want of some divisions sent elsewhere, to relinquish the plan of advancing, as I had a right to hope, as far as Lille.

"Now, the men are there, and more material than I ever dreamt of having. During 1914 and 1915 I made continual representations to obtain guns and munitions without which it was impossible to gain victory. I remember in connection with this point that Kitchener, after having gone over with experts, my programme, which has since been realized, declared it would take eight years to manufacture what was asked for.

"Fortunately, we found Lloyd George, who has accomplished the work which will remain to his eternal honor.

"I have not the slightest doubt that we will emerge victorious from the conflict, and if we were threatened with the terrible catastrophe of a German victory, wouldn't it be better to die to the last man."

ON THE CREST OF MT. GABRIELE

Teutons Tried Furiously to Drive Italians Off.

Failed After Battling From Dawn to Noon.

Rome Cable—The Austrians yesterday made an extremely desperate effort to drive the Italians from the positions they occupy along the crest of Monte San Gabriele, northeast of Gorizia. The battle lasted from dawn until nearly noon, when the Austrians, defeated in the struggle, gave up the effort, the War Office announced to-day. The statement reads:

"The enemy yesterday made various attacks, which were at once repulsed, against our lines on the Bainsizza Plateau, afterwards carrying out his greatest efforts northeast of Gorizia.

"After having kept under the most violent fire for several hours, the positions occupied by us along the crest of Monte San Gabriele and on the western slopes of the mountain descending towards Belcano, he attacked them from the east and the south. The bitter struggle, which began at dawn, became more pronounced around the western edge of the tableland of St. Caterina. Finally, towards mid-day, the enemy, beaten and repulsed, gave up his fruitless attempts."

WINTER APPLES TO BE SCARCE

Ontario Yield Much Below the Average.

Roots Look Good—Fall Seeding Late.

Toronto Despatch—According to weekly reports submitted to the Ontario Department of Agriculture, weather conditions during the week have retarded the completion of grain harvesting; but, although oats are yet out in the shock, the fields generally have been pretty well cleaned up of all Spring grains.

Fall wheat seeding is later than usual owing to the delayed harvest, but next week promises to be very busy in this regard, and it is expected that a large acreage will ultimately be got in soon enough for a fair catch. More than usual of the new fall wheat this season is being sown on stubble land, as not so much sod as usual has been turned under owing to the late harvest.

Corn has made considerable growth of late, although not doing very well on heavy soils. The ensilage varieties are not cobbing so well as usual.

Recent rains are bringing potatoes along well, and they are much freer from disease than was expected.

Roots are growing vigorously, and large yields are confidently expected.

The second cutting of clover promises a good yield. A large return of seed is also expected from this crop.

Apples are scarce, and the situation is commanding much attention. In Prince Edward and Dundas Counties prices for all varieties of the Duchess type, No. 1's and 2's, f.o.b. nearest shipping point, are quoted at [illegible] a barrel, while No. 3's bring [illegible]. Winter apples will be very difficult to obtain.

Owing to the excellent pastures live-stock are in fine condition. Market prices are firm for all classes of animals, but there is comparatively little doing in the way of sales. The demand for poultry is increasing.

Pastures were never better for time of year, and the milk flow is relatively good. However, with the high price of grain, millfeeds, etc., dairymen are not satisfied with the prevailing price of cheese at the factories.

Fodder supplies will be fuller than usual, except in the case of corn.

Although some farmers are still asking for temporary assistance, and most of the urban help has gone home, the agricultural crisis in this province has been met and passed satisfactorily. However, threshing, plowing for and seeding Fall wheat, drain tiling, and taking up roots will keep the remaining days of the outdoor season very busy on most farms. Tractors and larger horse-teams are looked to as the chief agencies to help out in the big Fall plowing campaign now in progress.

R.N.A.S. FLIERS RAIDING AGAIN

More Big Bombing Assaults in Belgium,

London Cable—Further extensive bombing raids have been carried out by the British Naval Air Service on various objectives, chiefly in Belgium, in the course of which successful engagements were fought with hostile machines. The official announcement of these operations reads:

"In the last twenty-four hours many flight patrols have been carried out by the Naval Air Service. One of these patrols engaged two enemy spotting machines, one being shot down, and the machine crashing into the sea, and the other landing almost intact in our lines. The pilot and observer of the latter machine were made prisoners. Two other enemy machines were attacked and driven down during the sweep by our machines. In conjunction with a bombing raid nine enemy machines were encountered, five of which are believed to have been driven down out of control.

"Bombing raids were made last night on the St. Denis Westrem airdrome, the Gontrode airdrome, the Bruges docks, the Thourout railway junction, and on railway objectives near Ghent. Several tons of explosives were dropped.

"During yesterday forenoon a bombing raid was made on Sparapelhoek, the Thourout airdrome and the Engel ammunition dump. At Sparapelhoek bombs were observed to explode amongst the hangars, causing much smoke, and at Thourout a direct hit was observed on a hangar. At Engel ammunition dump a large fire was caused. The bombing formation was attacked by enemy machines and one of the latter was shot down smoking and out of control. Many tons of explosives were dropped.

"From all these operations all the machines and pilots returned safely."

COMPLETE TRIBUNALS SEPT. 25.

Ottawa, Report.—Members of the selective board for each province have been ordered to have the local tribunals to pass on those called under the Military Service Act completed by September 25th. On the day previous to this day the selective board will meet in the capital. Mr. Justice Duff has been appointed central appeal judge under the Military Service Act.

STEADY DETERIORATION OF GERMAN FORCES ADMITTED

Berlin Journalist Tells Shocking Story of Conditions Now

One-Armed Men and Men Over Age Called---Youth Against Kaiser.

Geneva Cable—A despatch from Innsbruck says that the Austrian Empress has written a long personal memorandum to the German Emperor dealing with the coming fourth winter of the campaign. The Empress exposes many facts which have been hidden so far by Vienna statesmen and diplomats, and the memorandum is reported to have been a striking document.

London Cable—The following article from the pen of a German journalist who recently left Germany was sent to the London Times for publication. The article was written in German and has been translated.

"It is clear to all who know the internal conditions of Germany that the fourth war winter will bring deterioration in the German military position. The first symptoms are even now to be discovered.

"Three causes lie at the root of this deterioration.

"First—There is the increasing deficiency of raw materials in the munitions industry, which, with sharper control of imports by neutral countries, will lead to a catastrophe in which the growing traffic crisis in Germany will play not an inconsiderable part.

"Secondly—There is the fiasco, becoming steadily more evident, of the submarine war, the results of which in the less favorable conditions of autumn and winter will largely decrease and convey the joyous hopes of the overthrow of England into melancholy resignation. For the domestic condition of Germany, however, nothing is more dangerous than military depression. It is well known that a sharp battle was fought between the Kaiser and Hindenburg in order to obtain retirement without fighting of the German troops to the Siegfried position.

"The third cause, the one which appears the most important, is the deterioration in the quality of the reserves. In spite of a large proportion of recoveries among the wounded, in spite of the fact that not long ago at Dusseldorf, one-armed men were called and in spite of the summoning of the trained Landsturm men of over 45, which has already taken place everywhere, in spite of the replacing of frontier guards by civilians, the military quality cannot be maintained up to standard, because the young classes embodied have brought into the army a political infection which it will not be able to withstand.

POLITICAL MURDER OF YOUTH.

"The way in which the police and military have endeavored to restrain the political development of the youth of the country, whose progress during the war has been intense, is interesting. In order to render the economic independence of the youthful political organizations impossible, in order to get reserves of money for war loans, compulsory saving, which really deprives the young of their means, was introduced. An order to suppress by equally summary methods the whole political development by compulsory military preparation of young people was demanded from Chauvinistic quarters, which had the zealous support of the Radical party. This was a well-considered plan for the political and intellectual murder of the entire youth of the country.

"The Clerical centre party, which saw the existence of its brilliant organizations for the young imperilled, opposed with extraordinary vehemence this political dragooning of the young. A Centre party deputy said that such a bill would provoke the very greatest unrest among the people. The Government then set aside the introduction of the bill and recourse was had to the time-approved means of German policy, force. By executive order individual general commands in Germany, which are subordinated to no law and against which no legal appeal is possible, ordered compulsory militarization of the young. They had, however, reckoned without their host.

"The boys themselves in a large measure opposed the carrying out of the order. Heavy penalties and imprisonment were inflicted, and finally 17-year-old lads who had just become liable to Landstrum duty were called to military service at once. The whole of public opinion, the judgment, indeed, of non-commissioned officers, is opposed to this shocking method, and they openly say they cannot begin to do anything with 'such children,' and it is a crime to place these youths, who are still without any idea what life really is, under drastic military law.

"The boys acted logically in the extremities to which they were reduced by the call to army service. They carried on a propaganda of open refusal to serve and desertion. The number of desertions increase rapidly, and many organizations are assisting and providing refuge for the deserters, who are being hunted down.

"The distrust of the army authorities for the young reserves is already boundless. The oldest are mixed with the youngest classes in garrisons. This is done for exclusively political reasons. The degree of fitness required has been reduced to the minimum, yet it has often happened that young reserves have to pass in their cloaks before the staff doctor at the medical examination, and the doctor, acting entirely on his own discretion, fixes the degree of fitness, while as a matter of fact nothing in the nature of a proper medical examination has been made. Such conditions obtain in a most incredible manner in the district command at Berlin, where most of the cases for decision do not depend on the doctor, but on the major with him.

FOUR WEEKS' TRAINING.

"The training period at the garrisons is reduced to a minimum in order to as quickly as possible withdraw the young reserves from politically infected soil at home to the country. In most cases the training time of the infantry is four weeks and the artillery at the utmost six weeks. Then these units are sent into the fighting region in order that they may be employed as occasion requires in endangered positions. Countless old soldiers who have taken part in the war repeatedly assert that the mental and physical condition of these youthful troops is indescribably deplorable and their employment not to be regarded as warfare, but murder.

"The majority of those who go over to the enemy are young soldiers, who even in the trenches and in spite of the iron glory beckoning them, have not forgotten the political servitude at home. They go over to the enemy, since in reality he is their ideal friend, for the political youth of Germany has learned to acclaim the ideal, which ever has been taboo in the Prussian Deutschland.

"Thus the militarist colossus in the Central States, whose whole existence is based on the continuance of its 'blood and iron' traditions, is confronted with the capitulation of the new generation of Germany. This new generation has nothing in common with war. It is certain with her surviving remnant of deluded veterans, Germany will never win the war."

WESTERN CROPS.

1917 Estimate of Free Press Expert.

Winnipeg Despatch—The Free Press estimate of the crop of 1917 is as follows: Wheat, 214,250,528 bushels; oats, 187,028,065; barley, 38,781,060; flax, 6,611,462 bushels.

This estimate is based on an inspection, embracing the three prairie provinces, made by the commercial editor, and the reports of over 200 local correspondents. The yield of wheat is placed at 15 bushels for Manitoba, 14 for Saskatchewan, and 25 for Alberta. Oats at 25, barley at 20, and flax at 9 for the three provinces.

The value of the crops is placed roughly at $355,000,000, as against $502,000,000 for the famous crop of 1915; $225,000,000 for the crop of 1913, the year prior to the war, and $126,000,000 for the crop of 1916.

The values are based on $1.55 for wheat; 60 cents for oats, $1 for barley, and $3 for flax. The Free Press feels that the wheat estimate is conservative, and will not be surprised if the final returns show a substantial increase. The reports of local correspondents indicate that threshing is very general all over the west, while in Manitoba it is about 40 per cent completed.

BIG SLUMP IN U-BOATS' TOLL

Only 12 Vessels Over 1,600 Tons and 6 Under.

Lightest Week Since Campaign Started.

London Cable—A very marked decrease in the destruction of British merchant vessels by mines or submarines is contained in the weekly Admiralty statement, issued this evening. Twelve vessels of more than 1,600 tons and six of less than 1,600 tons were sent to the bottom, as compared with twenty in the larger and three in the small category sunk the previous week.

To-night's statement shows that four fishing vessels also were lost.

The above Admiralty statement shows the smallest number of large British vessels sunk by mines or submarines since Germany last February began her intensified submarine campaign. The previous low record was for the week of March 11th, when thirteen vessels of over 1,600 tons were lost.

The summary—Arrivals, 2,741; sailings, 2,868. British merchant vessels sunk by mine or submarine of over 1,600 tons, including one previously, twelve; under 1,600 tons, including one previously, six.

British merchant vessels attacked unsuccessfully, including three previously, twelve.

British fishing vessels sunk, four.

Paris, Sept. 12.—The statement of the Ministry of Marine issued to-night shows that for the week ending September 9th one French vessel of more than 1,600 tons and five vessels under 1,600 tons were sunk by mines or submarines. Two fighting craft also were sent to the bottom.

Unsuccessful attacks were made by hostile craft on three vessels.

SAYS RUSSIA WILL COME BACK; MILITARY DICTATOR NEEDED

Country Tired of War, but Dead Against Any Separate Peace.

London Cable — Leslie Urquhart, one of the most prominent mining and oil engineers in Russia, who has just arrived in London, in an interview in the Daily Mail to-day says:

"I have faith in Russia. I have known the country more than twenty years, and she will pull through. Whether General Korniloff will prove the savior of society I cannot tell, but of this I am sure—a military dictatorship has got to come."

After paying a tribute to General Korniloff as "at least a man of action," Mr. Urquhart asserts there are immense risks and few compensating gains for the Germans in a further advance on Petrograd, even if the time of the year and the character of the country permitted.

Russia, he says, is tired of the war, just like all the other belligerent peoples, but it is not tired enough to make a separate peace. He added:

"I can say with absolute confidence that the whole Russian people would be dead against a separate peace and would make short work of any one who attempted to negotiate it."

Mr. Urquhart characterized Premier Kerensky as "an honest visionary." At the bottom he is a talker and nothing else. Premier Kerensky is afraid of the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates, which is a self-constituted organization of idealists, theorists, anarchists and syndicalists, with hardly any workingmen or soldiers among them. Some of them are known to be in German pay. Their ideas of discipline not only have ruined the army, but all Russian industrialism."

SWEDEN MUST EXPLAIN HER EVIL COURSE

Britain Demands Explanation of the Argentina Episode.

ANTI-HUN RIOTS

Buenos Aires Scene of Serious Rows, With Heavy Damage Done.

Buenos Aires Despatch—The downtown section of the city was the scene of the wildest disorders to-night in connection with great anti-German demonstrations, in which thousands of Argentina took part. Many of those in the riots carried firebrands, and as a result scores of buildings were set on fire. Several blocks of German business houses in Calle 25 de Mayo were destroyed.

Among the structures attacked were the German Club, one of the finest edifices in the city, and the building of a German daily, La Union. As fast as the fires in those buildings were extinguished, they were started again. Mounted patrols and the entire fire department kept rushing from one part of the city to another, in an attempt to quell the riots and put down the flames. In several instances police who were attempting to shoot at those wielding torches were set upon by the crowds and disarmed.

Extraordinary precautions have been taken by the authorities to protect Count Luxburg, the German Minister, when he arrives here to-morrow morning to receive his passports.

ARGENTINA MAY BREAK.

Buenos Aires Despatch—It was officially announced here to-day that if Germany failed to disapprove of Count von Luxburg's action Argentina would recall her Minister at Berlin. If the Berlin Government disapproved of his course the status quo would be maintained.

The decision to hand Count von Luxburg his passports was reached by President Irigoyen after a conference with the Foreign Secretary this morning, the President taking the step without consulting the Cabinet, which had been called to meet this evening and receive Ambassador Naon's despatches from Washington. The President maintained that the matter was grave enough and pressing enough to warrant his immediate decision without reference to the Cabinet.

It is believed to be unlikely that any action will be taken towards Sweden, yesterday's explanation by the Swedish Legation, made before a demand for it had been sent to the Legation, apparently satisfying the Government that Baron Lowen acted in good faith in forwarding the telegrams, the contents of which were unknown to him.

MUST EXPLAIN.

London Cable—The British Government is understood to have already taken steps to ask Sweden for an explanation of the extraordinary action in forwarding German cipher messages from Argentine. It is understood the British Minister at Stockholm has called at the Swedish Foreign Office and expressed the amazement of the British Government at the statements made public by Mr. Lansing in Washington, especially in view of the assurances given it previously by Sweden when the question of the transmission of German messages through America was under discussion in 1915. The British Minister also said his Government was surprised Sweden had not yet made any explanation through regular diplomatic channels of such an important matter. No reply to these representations has yet been received here. In this connection it may be stated the British Government is not likely to accept without challenge that portion of the Swedish communique of Tuesday in which it was held that an understanding between the two Governments in 1915 concerning German messages through North America had been reached. It is understood that when the Swedish Minister called at the British Foreign Office the conversation covered all the German messages, and that no doubt could have been left in his mind that the British Government objected.

The incident has revived memories of the mysterious trunk belonging to the Swedish Minister at Washington brought over by Count Bernstorff and detained here. Officials still decline to discuss how the incident ended, but it has been pointed out it has special interest now as showing the intimacy of relations between German and Swedish diplomatic officials at Washington. Little doubt is expressed here that Sweden will see the necessity of acknowledging the error of her ways, particularly in view of the effect the revelations are likely to have in strengthening the Swedish Liberal-Socialist parties in the elections. America, with her control of food supplies and shipping, has the whip-hand of all neutrals. It is impossible to believe the Swedish Ministry can refuse explanations and apologies in view of her economic position.

TEUTON DRIVE TO CHECK CADORNA

Heavy Concentration Northeast of Gorizia.

Hindenburg Orders to Hold at Any Cost.

Washington Despatch—Information reached the Italian Embassy to-day in messages from Rome that the Austrian Command on the Isonzo front is preparing a new offensive, and is indulging in a heavy concentration of Austrian forces northeast of Gorizia. According to the message, the Austrians have decided to make any sacrifice to wipe out the menace involved in the success of the occupation by the Italians of important Austrian positions.

While the despatch does not so assert, it is suspected here that the hand of von Hindenburg, who has never hesitated to sacrifice men for victories, is responsible for the Austrian concentration of forces.

"On the Carso front there is relative calm," said the message to the Embassy. "The Austrian counter-offensive has utterly failed, and the Italians are maintaining all their gains along the line Castagnavizza-Korite and Korite-Selo. On the Isonzo front the action is limited to violent artillery duels. There are signs that the enemy is preparing a new offensive in order to regain his lost positions. The present Italian line on this front presents such a serious menace to the Austrians that the Austrian Command is decided to make any sacrifices in order to recover what is known as the 'K' line. Northeast of Gorizia the battle is still raging furiously, the Austrians defending themselves with extreme violence.

"General Koevess, who has taken the place of General Boroevic, is directing the Austrian defence, with at least twenty-eight battalions at his disposal. This concentration of forces is simply amazing, considering the limited sector in which they are employed. Captured Austrian officers say that the Austrian command considers the conservation of the present line as essential to the salvation of the Austrian army operating in a southeasterly direction. According to the same officers some of the Austrian battalions have already been practically annihilated in their endeavor to stem the slow but sure Italian advance. They say also that these enormous losses have been due chiefly to the impossibility of getting food and ammunition during the battle on account of the Italian fire. That this has been the case is proved by the capture of half a battalion which surrendered in a state of complete exhaustion."

GUNNERS ARE BUSY

Rome Cable — There was little activity, aside from artillery engagements along the Austro-Italian front yesterday, to-day's War Office statement reports. Some infantry fighting occurred in the Trentino, in which the Italians held their own. The text of the statement reads:

"On the front as a whole the activity was confined mainly to artillery.

"West of Lake Garda, the enemy, after intense artillery preparation, attacked our advanced posts between the Concei Valley and Lake Ledro. He succeeded in gaining a foothold in one of them, but was at once driven out.

"At the mouth of the Timavo, storming parties, which, with the support of the infantry waves, moved against our position on the extreme right wing, were stopped and put to flight with severe losses by our efficacious barrage fire.

"In Albania yesterday our parties, supporting French troops in operations in the Devoli Valley, carried an enemy trench on the Miplosum, southeast of Berat, and captured prisoners."

EDITORIAL COMMENT

While the property owner and business man must meet this year a higher tax rate, the young man's poll tax remains the same, $1. Port Elgin council might fairly have asked for a little more from those who are legally entitled to pay poll tax. Town expenses come a little higher this year, and The Times believes they would have been quite willing to have paid their portion.

Dr. Neely a Saskatchewan Liberal, from the town of Humboldt, while attending a convention of Liberals in Kent county, created quite a sensation by declaring that Sir Clifford Sifton had been playing a double game on the conscription issue, having recently as June last approached him and asked him not to vote against Laurier in this matter. Sir Clifford, would appear, is like most politicians, and some others, all things to all men.

Well, well, well! The Duke of Devonshire and the Lieutenant Governor actually drank tea out of the stout cups, used by one of the tea-rooms for the "common herd," at the Toronto Fair, and The Globe puts a big heading on it so that people will grasp the awful horror of a real live Duke drinking out of a thick cup and eating bread and butter off a plate of the same stout build. Really, The Globe should be more careful and see that His Royal Highness is provided with gold cups and jewel-studded plates. He's so different from the rest of us, don'tcherknow.—Thamesville Herald.

This first year of partial prohibition in Ontario has proved a success. Officials of the license department report that there is much less liquor consumed in homes also. The example set of being sober by those who tippled over the bar has had a wholesome effect on the more refined drinker in his home. But another source of information that the "dry" year has proven a great benefit, is the fact that many store-keepers and merchants declare that their business has been good, and that there are fewer charged accounts, and much less bad debts. Added to this, is also the fact that the abstainers are better men than they were, and take more interest in there families, the education of their children, and the general welfare of the community. What great good could be accomplished if Canada went the whole way, and cut loose from whiskey altogether!

"My policy, as Fuel Controller," said Mr. Magrath to the Globe, "has been to interfere as little as possible with the business of the coal dealers, beyond encouraging them to in every possible way get in a sufficient quantity of coal to meet the needs of their localities." Hear, hear, and it costs the people of Canada $25,000 a year for this man's assistant alone. We have an idea that these thousands of dollars are spent more to give certain men positions, than to give the people service.

The United States has stopped the manufacture of whiskey, and nothing stronger than wine and beer is legal in that big country now. The Food Controller can consistently call upon the women of the United States to save wheat for the army by conserving the white bread, with a great deal more content than can the Food Controller of Canada, who persistently calls upon the people to save wheat, but still allows it to be used for the manufacture of whisky. When consistency is practiced by those who have charge of affairs in this particular crisis, their requests will have a great deal more weight with the people. Sincerity is the thing needed these days.

The Fair

To morrow Port Elgin annual fair takes place. It should be the concern of every citizen in the town, and the country also, to take the time necessary to attend in order that it might have the success it deserves.

It is true that the country fairs are not as attractive as the city ones, but if we are to keep our place in the minds and hearts of the boys and girls, and the young people generally, we should not hesitate to give all the assistance we can to make of our fair an event which will be looked forward to by both old and young.

On second thought, it takes so little of real effort to do this, too. The fall fair is the farmers' concern, it's the town man's concern, it's everybody's concern in this whole district. Try to spare to-morrow to help make the show a record one for attendance. The directors will then have a mandate to go on and increase the prize list and the attractions on a larger scale for next year.

It's our fair. Let's all go,

Publicity Needed

The Conscription law is now in full force and effect. Publication of a proclamation of the first draft will soon be given, and then all those aged 20 to 34 inclusive must respond. There is not very much time for argument now. The law is very strict in the matter. Extreme penalties are to be meted out to those failing to respond. Those young men actually tilling farms will likely be given exemption, but they must apply for that exemption, and give their grounds. No man should assume that he is exempt because he imagines he is operating, or interested in, what he believes to be, necessary business. The exemption boards are the places to demonstrate the justice of any occupation during war time. And further, the public should know every man who has been exempted, and the reason why.

Exemption boards should be instructed to give publicity to every one who gains exemption, through whatever means. Publicity of every working of the new law, through the district newspapers is what is required.

The Walkerton Telescope says it has ascertained that there are 60 naturalized Canadian citizens living in Bruce County who will be deprived of right to vote in the coming Dominion Elections by Sir Robert Borden's Wartime Election Act. These 60 names form the list of naturalized aliens who were born in enemy countries and were not naturalized before the year 1902. There are 36 other citizens whose application for citizenship have been filed at the County Court House since the beginning of the war. Then there are quite a number of Bruce residents who have not applied for citizenship papers owing to the Court's Order holding up the enfranchisement of aliens. It is probably a safe estimate that two hundred people in Bruce will be deprived of their votes.

Vision Your Sons, Mothers of Canada!

Vision them at early morning when through the rising mists, there bursts a hurricane of fire---

See your valiant boys---calm, grim, but cheerful, "stand-to-arms" until the Hun's "morning hate" dies away.

Picture them at breakfast, the meal that must bring them the bodily sustenance to carry them through the strain of another day.

Then think what might happen if, one morning, there was no breakfast ---no food, and word went down the lines that Canada had failed them.

Vision all these things, and then--- as Women of Canada---Mothers of Men---Answer this Call to Service.

Canada must send to Her Own, and to the Allies Fighting Forces, more wheat, more beef, more bacon, and more of such other foods as are non-perishable and easily exported.

Canada can do this without depriving her own population of a fair share of any of these foods if You Women will but help.

All we ask of you is, that instead of buying so much white flour (if you do your own baking) you vary your baking by using one-third oatmeal, corn, barley or rye flour. Or, if you buy your bread, that you order a certain proportion of brown bread each day.

Second, instead of using as much beef and bacon as formerly, you vary your family's diet, by substituting for beef and bacon such equally nutritious foods as fish, peas, lentils, potatoes, nuts, bananas, etc.

Third, and this is most important, ---positively prevent the waste of a single ounce of food in your household.

They Must Be Fed

Statistics show that, everyday, in Canada, sufficient food is thrown into garbage cans to feed the entire Canadian Overseas Army.

Travellers have often remarked that many a European family would live well upon the quantity and quality of food wasted in some Canadian homes.

Such waste is shameful at any time; but in these times it is criminal.

Our only hope is that with these truths before you, and in view of the vital issues at stake, we may count upon your earnest co-operation in stopping this appalling waste; and in substituting other foods for the wheat, beef and bacon that must be sent overseas.

Next week a Food Service Pledge and Window Card will be delivered to you. It is your Dedication to War Service. The Window Card is your Emblem of Honour.

Woman's Auxiliary, Organization of Resources Committee, in Co-operation with The Hon. W. J. Hanna, Food Controller.

WONDERFUL STUFF!
LIFT OUT YOUR CORNS

Apply a few drops then lift corns or calluses off with fingers—no pain.

No humbug! Any corn, whether hard, soft or between the toes, will loosen right up and lift out, without a particle of pain or soreness.

This drug is called freezone and is a compound of ether discovered by a Cincinnati man.

Ask at any drug store for a small bottle of freezone, which will cost but a trifle, but is sufficient to rid one's feet of every corn or callus.

Put a few drops directly upon any tender, aching corn or callus. Instantly the soreness disappears and shortly the corn or callus will loosen and can be lifted off with the fingers.

This drug freezone doesn't eat out the corns or calluses but shrivels them without even irritating the surrounding skin.

Just think! No pain at all; no soreness or smarting when applying it or afterwards. If your druggist don't have freezone have him order it for you.

OBITUARY

The late Mrs. David Esplen, whose death and burial were recorded in a previous issue, was 71 years of age. Her husband predeceased her seven years ago, and since that time she has resided with her daughter, Mrs. W. B. Nelson, who is now living in Calgary. It will be remembered that a note in The Times a couple of months ago, told how the aged lady while visiting at Banff had met with a very bad fall breaking her hip. She never recovered from the severe accident, and death resulted, after all that loving care of a kind and loving daughter and skilled physicians could do. The remains were accompanied here by her son-in-law, Mr. W. B. Nelson, and deceased lady was laid tenderly away in Burgoyne cemetery, where her husband and many of her old friends await the resurrection morn. Deceased is survived by her son William on the homestead at Burgoyne and four daughters, Mrs. R. Crawford, Arran Tp., Mrs Alex Dalgleish Calgary, Mrs. Albert McKee, Marquette, Mich, and Mrs. Wm. B Nelson of Calgary.

John McPhee, died at Southampton last week. He was [illegible] years of age, and suffered greatly from cancer the past two years. When quite young he came with his parents from Quebec, and settled first in Arran Tp., and later moved to Saugeen, and resided also for some years in Bruce Tp. He lived with his sister in Southampton for twenty years or more. Those surviving are Neil and Malcolm in Manitoulin, Andrew, Daniel and Bella in the West, and Janet in Southampton. Interment was made at Burgoyne cemetery. The pall bearers were old friends, Messrs. Malcolm McNeill, Neil McDonald, T. Baker, John McAulay, A. Boddy and W. Steinhoff.

John Blohm Loses his Vote

John Blohm, the moving picture magnate of Bruce County, who, it will be remembered by many in this district, operated a show in Port Elgin for some time, loses his vote, through the new Franchise act.

The Chesley Enterprise, in explaining John's predicament, says:

"One of our citizens, John Blohm, manager of the Bijou picture show, and proprietor of the store and restaurant next to it, was an angry man when he read in last Friday's papers that he had been disfranchised by the provisions of the Bill introduced into the House of Commons by which those of alien enemy origin who had become naturalized within 15 years are not to be given a vote at the next Dominion elections unless they are the grandfather or father of a soldier and John is too young to be either. He has been out from Germany 18 years and became naturalized 10 years ago. He took another look at his naturalization certificate with the nice red seal on it which had guaranteed him Canadian citizenship ten years ago and exclaimed "Why, this is only a scrap of paper now." He has been voting for the party for ten years that now takes away his vote. John considers this is legislation of the worst kind and says it is just like something the Kaiser would do, and Von Bethman-Hollweg who regarded a sacred treaty as a scrap of paper, but he didn't expect such a raw deal in a British country that guaranteed him the full rights of a citizen and then took them away from him. Of course this is only a war time measure, but John vows that when he does get a vote again, it will not be cast for the party that disfranchised him even for one election."

"SIMPLY BEAUTIFUL"

One of the expressions heard from the ladies of our showing of beautiful waists. Never has there been shown in Port Elgin such an exquisite range of ladies' waists. Colors are Flesh, Pink, Cream, White, Gold, Yellow, Brown and Black.

Prices range from $5.00 to $8.00

Ladies' Collars

Ladies' collars, in all shapes and fashionable materials.

Prices from 50c to $1.00

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON XIII. Sept. 23, 1917.

Daniel in the Lions' Den—Daniel 6: 1-28.

COMMENTARY.—I. A cruel plot (vs. 1-9). To hold a high and honorable position is to be exposed to the shafts of envy and calumny. David found himself beset by those who would be glad to destroy him. The place of Darius in this history is not clearly understood, but it is supposed that he was a ruler under Cyrus. Daniel's ability and integrity won for him a position of trust and honor. He was made the chief of the three presidents who were in charge of the one hundred and twenty princes, or satraps, of as many provinces. Not only this, but the king had it in mind to place him over the entire realm, that he himself might be the further relieved of the duties of government. This preference shown to Daniel aroused the envy of the other officers of the king to such an extent that they determined to have him removed. They confessed his excellence in their inability to accuse him of remissness in his personal or official acts. It is very probable that he was valuable to the king because of his careful oversight of the royal revenues, thus preventing and other officers from enriching themselves at the king's expense. There was but one ground upon which they could bring an accusation against Daniel, and that was concerning his religion. This was complimentary to him.

II. Daniel cast to the lions (vs. 10-17). 10. Daniel knew that the writing was signed—He knew what the king's decree was and that according to the custom of the nation it could not be changed. He knew that death was the penalty for violating the decree. Windows—We must bear in mind that windows, such as we have, were then unknown. Those of that time were ply openings in the walls, either with permanent bars as a protection, or with lattice-work doors that could be opened or closed. Chamber—This was an apartment built upon the flat roof of the Oriental house, usually at one corner. Being thus elevated, there would be free circulation of air through the windows. Toward Jerusalem—Solomon in his prayer at the dedication of the temple had asked the Lord to hear the prayers of his people when in captivity or in strange lands, if they should pray with their faces towards Jerusalem. The Jew was accustomed to pray with his face toward the temple. Kneeled—An attitude indicating humility and earnestness. Three times a day—At nine, twelve and three o'clock.

The first and last were the hours of the daily sacrifices. Gave thanks—There were faith, courage and submission in Daniel's heart as a basis for thankfulness under such circumstances. As he did aforetime—He made no display of his piety. He did exactly as he had done constantly. To have ceased to pray or to have hidden himself in prayer would show disloyalty to God. 11. These men assembled—They flocked together tumultuously, as the word signifies. They knew Daniel's hours of prayer, and eagerly came together to discover him in the act forbidden by the king's decree. 12. Spake before the king—Daniel's enemies wished to secure the king's confirmation of the decree before they brought their charge against his highly respected officer. According to the law.... which altereth not—The theory was that the king could make no mistake, and hence his decrees could not consistently be changed. 13. Regardeth not thee....nor the decree—For thirty days, according to the decree, the king, who was looked upon as a god, was to be the only one of whom any petition should be made. Daniel in making "his petition three times a day" was disregarding both the king and his decree. He acknowledged a higher law than that of man. He served the true God, and hence to refrain from praying to Him, as the decree provided, would be to violate his conscience. 14. Sore displeased with himself—He discovered too late the trap that was set for him. He had foolishly allowed his vanity to assert itself in his consenting to be the only object of worship for a month. Set his heart on Daniel to deliver him—However much Darius may have desired to save Daniel from being thrown to the lions, he saw no way to do it without altering his decree. He might have asserted himself and set himself right when he saw the unwise and wicked step he had taken; or he might have adopted a plan similar to that formed by Ahasuerus under conditions somewhat like these (Esther 8. 11). 15. Know, O king—There was a strong determination that the king should not fail to carry out the edict. 16. The king commanded—A strong exhibition of the authority of a king and a god. While King Darius was being worshiped as a god he was at the mercy of conscienceless subjects, and compelled to do their bidding. Cast him into the den of lions—It is probable that the lions were kept for the purpose of executing criminals.

III. A great deliverance (vs. 18-28). 18. Fasting—Darius had no desire for food, for his grief was great. Musick—Under these conditions none of his customary pleasures appealed to him. He spent a sleepless night. 19. Went in haste—The king had some hope that his beloved Daniel was still alive. 20. With a lamentable voice—Darius showed his distress of mind in the tone of his voice. He hoped Daniel would hear him, but feared he would not. Servant of the living God—The heathen king recognized the God of Daniel. Is thy God...able—In v. 16 is the king's statement that Daniel's God would deliver him from the lions, but here he expresses a doubt as to the outcome. 21. O king, live for ever—The common salutation in addressing a king. Daniel might have spoken in reproof to the king, but did not. His sole thought was that God's glory had been set forth in his deliverance. 22. Sent His angel—Daniel had company in the den of lions. There was no music nor gladness in the palace, but celestial joy in the intercourse between Daniel and the angel in the den.—Taylor. 23. Exceeding glad—Because the purpose of the decree had been thwarted.

Questions.—What king followed Nebuchadnezzar in Babylon? Of what nation was Darius king? What office did Daniel hold? Who plotted against Daniel's life? What decree did they persuade the king to make? What was Daniel's custom as to prayer? Why did he pray with his windows open toward Jerusalem? What effect did Daniel's sentence and punishment have upon the king? What faith did the king have? Describe Daniel's deliverance. What new decree did the king make?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Daniel's loyalty to God.

I. An occasion for murderous envy.
II. A model for study and imitation.

I. An occasion for murderous envy. Darius found in Daniel the best and most competent man in Babylon to serve him as his prime minister. The favor shown to him, a foreigner and a Jew, soon excited an envious spirit among the other courtiers. The more convinced those men were of Daniel's unimpeachableness, the more desperate they became in their determination to destroy him. There was an underhanded, jealous and envious hostility that could not bear to see virtue rewarded. Daniel's conduct bore the scrutiny of his enemies. In his integrity, sincerity, simplicity and faith he shamed them all. They sought in vain for any fault in his character or administration. To get rid of him required skill. His enemies knew him well enough to be assured that on no consideration would he forsake or neglect his religion. They planned to frame a law that his conscience would not permit him to obey. They were convinced that Daniel so valued his prayers and devotions, that he would endure any loss or punishment rather than discontinue them, even for a time. They calculated on his obedience to God. They could make his frequent prayers to God a sure basis of calculation in forming their scheme for his overthrow. They entirely concealed from the king their designs against Daniel. They gave him no time to deliberate, no opportunity of consulting with Daniel. Theirs was a scheme of cold-blooded murder to destroy the greatest, best and purest man in the kingdom, to put out of the world the king's most faithful friend.

II. A model for study and imitation. Faithful as Daniel was to the king and attentive as he was to his interests, there was a point at which obedience stopped. He would not even seem to be obedient to a wicked law which robbed the God of heaven of the worship due to him. He acted the part of a loyal subject of the Most High. He set at naught the imperious mandate and punctually performed his accustomed devotions with fearlessness. He could risk the peril of the lion's den, but he could not forego conversing with God. That was the secret of his strength, his habit of daily earnest prayer. He furnishes an example of well-principled and well-regulated devotion. The wise and diplomatic statesman, the far-sighted Daniel calmly continued his religious habits precisely as "aforetime." There was no balancing of consequences, no thought of compromise. Daniel's deepest purpose was that of loyalty to God, expressed in separation from the corrupting influences of his position. His public life was upright and beautiful because his inner life was devout and prayerful. His princely spirit shone in his captivity. He was not hardened by his captivity nor exalted by his honor. From early youth, through manifold perils, Daniel had trusted in his God. His religion was a part of his life. The secret of his faithfulness was that piety through which his foes sought to assail and take his life. Daniel did not go out of his way to show his determination to honor his God before his King. He served his God without ostentation or concealment. While he did not omit anything from fear of danger, he added nothing by way of insult to his persecutors, nor defiance toward his sovereign. He honored God at a time when the world-power was denying and deriding him. A life of devotion was not to be abandoned by any proclamation from men. He appears from first to last to have kept innocent and to have done what was right before God. Piety wrought in Daniel an integrity of life and character on which the most envious tongues could lay no hold. He was a man of purpose, perception, prayer and power. He prayed with a sense of personal limitation, with a profound conviction of divine sufficiency. He never distrusted his Lord's purposes, plans or power. His thanksgivings were not interrupted by any of the calamities he met. Though he was persecuted for righteousness' sake, he was delivered from the hands of his persecutors and upheld in his tribulation. His deliverance was as complete and glorious as his obedience and faith. His integrity and uprightness gave him supremacy.

When Airmen Fly High.

Aviators have a cold time of it when they mount high in the air. On the hottest day in summer a flying man may be in the arctic regions in ten minutes by mounting to a height of 10,000 feet, just as the climber may pass through all the zones of climate by climbing Kilimanjaro, that giant peak which rises above the snow line from the equator. He commences with the tropical jungle and ends amid eternal snow. The temperature is invariably low at 10,000 feet and over, whether at the tropics or the poles, and it is quite likely to be lowest at the equator. In fact, there is little variation of temperature in these upper reaches of the atmosphere. It is much the same in summer as winter, except for the difference which a high wind makes. Even in the depth of hot summer the airman will encounter 40 degrees of frost at 10,000 feet, and at twice that altitude 100 degrees of frost; the temperature of the south pole is usual enough.

Prehistoric Pauline—I heard your elopement was very formal. Antediluvian Annette—Oh, yes; quite so. He insisted on dragging me off by the hair, and I chewed off one of his ears. —Cartoons Magazine.

Gahey, D. C. M.

(Patrick Macgill in Chicago Tribune)

Somewhere in France

The Ole Sweats, they never die; they only fade away,
And others are comin' to take their place, but on the doin's they.
And drillin' they are from dawn to dusk, at it from dusk to dawn,
But they'll need it, and more, to fill the boots of blokes who now are gone.
The Ole Sweats!
Devils for fun were the Ole
Sweats—
In love or a scrap, sure, they always went nap,
And 'twas always "Thumbs up!" with the Ole Sweats.
—From "Soldier Songs."

Gahey, D.C.M., was an Old Sweat, one of the worthy Contemptibles who saw war in the autumn of 1914. Gahey was a soldier by profession and instinct, a kindly hearted, loose limbed man, with shoulders broad as a door, ready to bear any burden, and less willing to the last pace of the most gruelling march. Gahey was an Irishman and a soldier second to none.

Once one of his mates was asked: "What kind of fellow is this Gahey?"

"Ole Gahey!" he replied. "He's one of the best pals a man could have. He could give you the very sugar from his tea!"

"What kind of fighter is he?" was the next question.

"Fighter! God, you should see him!" was the answer, and the man's tone and the expression on his face spoke volumes. Gahey was indeed a great fighter, a handy man with bayonet and bomb. No raid in which his battalion took part was perfect without him. To see him standing on the parapet of the enemy trench, his bayonet glinting as a falling star shell lit up the scene of conflict, and to hear his loud laugh and louder voice echoing through the night, were a tonic to his mates and a terror to his foes. His ringing tone as he shouted, "Clear thim out o' it, my buckos, clear thim out o' it!" before throwing a bomb into a dugout, was something to be remembered.

And little Charlie Sader (comedian on the London stage before he took up realistic work on the more serious stage where war's tragedy has a long season) remembered Gahey's words when giving a performance in a concert behind the lines. Charlie impersonated Gahey flinging a bomb on a German dugout and shouted out in a brogue that could be cut with a blunt bayonet: "Clear thim out o' it, my buckos; clear thim out o' it." All the audience yelled with delight, and the man who yelled loudest was Gahey, D.C.M.

One night, a week later, found Gahey again on a German parapet. When with his accustomed exhortation he had flung a bomb on the German dugout he turned around to his mates.

"Is Charlie Sader here?" he asked.

"I'm here, Gahey," came the answer.

"Well, I hope ye've made a note iv what I've said," Gahey remarked. "There's money in it after the war, and you and me'll go half and half in the profits."

The other day, near Lens, the Germans launched an attack against a trench in which Gahey's battalion was stationed. The Britishers went out to give battle in the open. Gahey had a hard fifteen minutes with his favorite weapon, the bayonet, and he gloried in the job. Suddenly he came to a dead stop, when a young German, a boy of 17 or 18, rushed at him and tried to run him through. Gahey waited until the steel almost touched his khaki, then he stepped quickly aside, reached out with a long arm, caught the German by the coat collar, and gave him a gentle slap over the hindermost parts, after the manner of an irate mother reprimanding her child.

"Away back with ye behind our lines, ye little vagabond," said Gahey. "Away back, and be made prisoner! Sendin' you out to fight! Your mother should have more sense. Now be a good little boy, and do as I tell ye. Go back and be made a prisoner!"

The boy did not understand Gahey's remarks, which was hardly to be wondered at, seeing that Gahey's mates were often at a loss to understand his brogue. But one thing the German did understand, and that was the strong grip of Gahey's hand on his collar. A man with a grip like that was not to be trifled with. The young fellow dropped his bayonet and put his hands over his head. He was taken prisoner.

Gahey carried a little black clay pipe, "the best he ever saw in Ireland or out of it," as he often said. When going out on his nightly prowls he left the pipe with a mate, telling him to treat it tenderly until he came back. He loved his pipe more than his life.

He is still alive, for, like the proverbial cat, he is in possession of nine lives. He fears nothing and nobody. Gahey, D. C. M., a hero of Mons, is a worldly soul.

FARM AND GARDEN

FARM NEWS AND VIEWS.

The horse at hard work needs to be well-fed. The animal husbandry man at the North Dakota Agricultural College says that good oats is the best grain, but that the ration can often be cheapened by replacing one-fourth to one-third of the oats with corn, barley or bran. A 1,400-pound horse will usually do well on 17 to 21 pounds of grain a day, and an equal amount of hay. As the horse is larger or smaller, feed more or less. Timothy hay is recognized as one of the best roughages for the work-horse, but a good quality of upland prairie hay, red top, clover or alfalfa, can be substituted. The Dakota man advises dividing the feeds as follows: Grain feed—Morning, 8 pounds; noon, 8 pounds; evening, 5 pounds. Hay—Morning, 5 pounds; noon, 5 pounds; evening, 11 pounds. On Sundays, or days when the horse is idle, cut down the feed one-fourth.

Alsike clover is the wet land hay and forage crop. It is richer in protein than red clover and can be seeded on wet, sour land, when red clover and alfalfa will not grow.

A man who has had much experience says it is a good plan to seed alsike clover with timothy, with orchard grass or with red top. When seeded alone the stems of the clover lie on the ground and make a mat that is difficult to cut. The grass serves to hold the clover up, and thus makes cutting easier. The mixture is also more readily cured.

A good mixture for hay is alsike clover, five pounds, and timothy, four pounds, per acre; or alsike clover, five pounds, and orchard grass ten pounds. Such mixtures will give most alsike clover with enough grass to hold it up. If more grass is wanted increase the seeding of grass.

Buckwheat is about the easiest crop to succeed with. One item in its favor is that it can be sown at almost any time during the growing season for a cover crop, and can be sown throughout a long season for the grain it produces. Fruit growers keep on hand a supply of seed buckwheat.

Orchards may be renewed by cultivation, but deep plowing in orchards is disastrous, owing to the disturbance of many fine feeding roots that may not be noticeable to the plowman. Then scrape the trees and spray them.

Sheep-keeping should be encouraged. No other animal can thrive on such short pasturage as the sheep. Sheep manure is the most valuable of all. On almost every farm there is a brushy field on which sheep could browse eight months of the year.

The presence of many weeds, especially sorrel and horsetail rush, indicates sourness. When the soil is made sweet with lime, weeds thriving in acid soil give much trouble.

Care should be taken to handle alfalfa hay so as not to lose leaves, as these contain considerably more than 50 per cent of the feeding value of the hay.

It is the quiet, satisfied hog that brings the most money to the owner.

Laxative feeds and exercise are the secrets of successful feeding. Should ensilage or roots be short, molasses make a very good supplement when fed at from two to four pounds per head per day.

Cut feed means less waste and greater palatability. Cut straw mixed with the ensilage, or hay that would otherwise be wasted, cut and mixed with the ensilage and roots, is a great saving to the feeder, yet a mixture is very acceptable to the stock.

Good rations for any class of live stock must be well balanced as to variety and palatability, succulence and nutrition. No two animals respond the same to any one food stuff; a study of the feeding of individuals is most essential and most remunerative.

In-foal mares should be exercised daily. Overfat, unexercised mares usually show 60 per cent. greater mortality and less ruggedness in their foals.

The heavy winter milker is usually the best and most persistent cow; give her an opportunity to make greatest profits.

Quality in dairy products is the secret of success of individuals or companies.

Why lose money in rearing three or four old steers when baby beeves and well-finished two-year-olds are commanding the top prices? Finish beef early and thoroughly.

SUNDAY AT HOME

LOST BELIEFS.

One after one they left us;
The sweet birds out of our breasts
Went flying away in the morning;
Will they come again to their nests?

Will they come again at nightfall
With God's breath in their song?
Noon is fierce with the heats of summer,
And summer days are long.

O, my life, with the upward liftings,
Thy downward striking roots,
Ripening out of the tender blossoms
But hard and bitter fruits!

In thy boughs there is no shelter
For the birds to seek again,
The desolate nest is broken
And torn with storms and rain!
—William Dean Howells.

CHRIST'S EXAMPLE.

Even the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister.—Whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all.

Jesus of Nazareth . . . went about doing good.—Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ.

The meekness and gentleness of Christ.—In lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves.

Father, forgive them: for they know not what they do.—Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you.

He that saith he abideth in him, ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked. Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith: who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God.

THE PRIVATEER.

The steps of my first pulpit rested on the keelson of a ship. She was called the Valiant, an old Dutch privateer, a splendid specimen of Maine architecture. She was purchased by a Bethel Committee and transformed into a place of worship. The cabin formed the vestry, and though there were steps to the pulpit you went down into the pulpit instead of up.

It is well for the world that we have done with privateering, and letters of marque will no more be issued. A privateer was an armed vessel, fitted out by private individuals, and carrying a commission from a belligerent Government to cruise against the commerce of its enemy in time of war. Many of our slave-traders were of this order, and the wooden walls of my old church first heard the groaning of the prisoners and the clanking of the slave chain, before they heard the songs of the Redeemer and the prayers of the saints. A change of Masters, truly. Did it ever occur to my readers that were are destined to serve? Whatever our rank, or station of wealth, we are here to serve. We are forbidden to be masters. "Be not many masters." One is your Master, even Christ. If you want to insult a Quaker, just say in your letter, Mr. Joseph Jones. Mister means master, and they do not recognize man as a master; that is why they do not uncover the head in the presence of others. My floating church first carried slaves to the West Indies; then she was transformed into a meeting place for God and the souls of men.

The way some men carry themselves, you would think that they carried letters of marque from a constituted authority, to swing around and look big and make reprisals, but when they are boarded by a superior authority, and an iron is put in the fire, and the broad arrow is branded in the main mast, you capitulate at discretion, you hand back your sword, and your ship is confiscated.

Do you see the point? Christ calls you His own, by conquest, by gift, by purchase, and you are really His by voluntary surrender and consecration. Men are held in possession by the God of this world, who issues letters of marque boldly enough, but when a stronger than the strong man comes in sight, then the old rebel flag is hauled down and the flag of loyalty and freedom is hoisted up. What kind of flag flies at your masthead?

IRISH SPANIARDS.

America Did Not Get All Emigrants of the Emerald Isle.

"You are, perhaps, too much inclined to think," said a Spaniard recently, "that America is the only foreign country where Irish emigrants land. But there is an Irish element in Spain, though less numerous, also important. It is probable that the special conditions of this old country, its Catholic faith, its monarchical spirit, and noble traditions, particularly attracted the more distinguished Irish families in search of a new home, while the middle and poorer classes preferred to sail to more democratic and English-speaking lands.

"This would explain why most of the Irish Spaniards belong to the army. The Spanish army lists abounds with names like O'Shea, O'Connor, MacKenna, O'Neil, earl of Tyrone, became a Spanish field marshal and in the Carlist wars won the title of Marquis del Norte. His son, though an officer in the Spanish infantry, was better known as a poet. Another poet of Irish descent died recently in Madrid, Fernandez Shaw. And the name of General O'Donnell is as famous in Spain as that of Wellington in England. General O'Donnell was in command of the Spanish troops which invaded Morocco in the last years of Queen Isabella's reign, and his triumphant march was only checked by the diplomatic opposition of England.

"Most of these Irish-Spaniards emigrated during the first half of the nineteenth century. They were quickly absorbed by Spain—a country which quickly stamps her character on newcomers—and hardly any of their present representatives speak English, or have any knowledge of England and Irish life. But they carry everywhere their family tales of a dark past and their names as witnesses of their family romance, and their influence is no doubt overwhelming on the general opinion which Spain, ignorant of the progress of later years, still entertains on the 'oppressed sister island.'

"Another important link between Ireland and Spain is the Irish seminary for Roman Catholic priests still existing in Salamanca. It creates a continuous channel of communication for the clergy of the two countries. It must be added that the very numerous wealthy families who wish to give their daughters an English education generally place them in English-speaking convents, either in Spain or in England. These convents are generally Irish."—Exchange.

Death of a Pearl.

Pearls are almost the only precious gems which are subject to decay, and this happens very rarely. When disease attacks a pearl it turns color and after a time crumbles away. The most valuable pearl ever known is supposed to have become diseased. It belonged to a Russian millionaire who kept it carefully locked in a casket and refused to show it even to his most intimate friends. One day some jewel experts prevailed upon him to let them see the precious gem. When he opened the casket he was dismayed to find the pearl had been attacked by disease and was already changing color. Soon afterward a heap of white powder was all that was left of the jewel.

"I couldn't attend your luncheon, dear, because it rained." "Why, it stopped raining an hour before the time." "Yes; but by that time I had made up my mind not to go."—Boston Transcript.

Our Humorists.

All we can say is that we hope any given humorist of ours will live out the greatest length of days and not stop joking before he dies. We need every moment of his threescore years and ten to keep us sane and kind, and we cannot be satisfied with a stinted measure of time for him. When he begins unsurpassably to delight the world our national pride as well as our human need is bound up in his continuance. Possibly we are going from bad to worse, as we have always been, but we think we have been kept from the worst by the humorist's smile, not by the satirist's frown. Other races, other lands abound in songs and sermons, but we have sent our laughter over the world to save it alive more than anything else could.—W. D. Howells in Harper's Magazine.

The Man Who Thinks.

A man with dirty face and blouse, shirt soaked with perspiration, stopped, laid down his dinner basket, rolled a broken knuckle out of the pathway between the tracks, [illegible] the ends of the ties, where no one could stumble over it, picked up his dinner basket, and plodded home.

More than fifty other employees had preceded this man, each one carefully picking his way around the obstruction.

I asked this man why he took the trouble to roll the knuckle out of the pathway. He seemed surprised at such a question and said, "Why, some of the boys might get a bad fall if that knuckle was there after dark." I said, "All the other men passed it by," and he replied: "Oh, they're all good boys. They'd done the same thing if they'd thought about it."

He said something, didn't he?

"If they'd thought about it." Ah, yes, "If they'd thought about it."—Erie Railroad Magazine.

Irregularities of Time.

It is perhaps as well that we do not take the sun as our guide in the matter of time, for really it has no idea of punctuality. Only on four days a year does it come up to time, arriving at the meridian exactly at 12, and it can be as much as eighteen minutes late. Before astronomers decided to take no notice of its little [illegible], it was necessary to watch the sun every day to regulate your clock. The consequence was that the public clocks were hopelessly at variance, and Delambre says he heard the public clock strike the same hour one after another for thirty minutes. That had at least one advantage—the unpunctual man could always keep his appointments by choosing his clock carefully.—London Chronicle.

Through Many Trials

"Quite so. I understand perfectly," the viscount says, deliberately, and smiling, though he is livid with suppressed wrath and excitement. "I can read between the lines of your petty ruse with perfect ease. 'Only' the 'kind word,' only the plausible 'pity' talk to melt the old man's heart—a few little artful phrases to remind him of the past—a few little meaningless promises for the future; one can promise anything to an old man nearly in his dotage. He will forget everything else in his pleasure at having to kill the fatted calf for the prodigal. It is even worth while to eat humble pie when one is sure of a speedy reward for so doing!"

It is not the elder man now, but the younger, who is haughtiness personified, or, to speak more correctly, who is the image of stern rebuke—of just indignation.

"Sir," he says, with a set, pale face and firm lips, and eyes that burn like fires in the shadow of his dark lashes, "you ought to forgive me everything I have ever done to offend you, in atonement for the wrong you have done me in that cruel speech."

He picks up his hat, bows silently, and quits the room instantly, with a long, swift, striding step—quits the house, and walks away down the darkly-shaded avenue, at the same steady, unfaltering gait.

The great gates of Heneage Court close behind him with a resounding clang, which seems to ring in his ears half-way down the village street—now radiant in the full sunshine of the summer morning! The great metal gates have shut behind him for evermore—living or dead, he will never pass through them again; never again will he enter the precincts of Heneage Court, never, although the place goes with the title which he will inherit by and by—the barren, empty title, with an income not sufficient to pay the wages of the servants of the household. He will not reach out his little finger to touch such a Dead Sea apple as that. Let his cousin have the place, as he has the name, the wealth, the prestige necessary to maintain all in equal order and according to their dues. Let the empty, useless title remain in abeyance until such time as death gives it legally into his cousin's hands—hands stretched out waiting for it. Dick cannot but remember—remembering that letter he had answered so lengthily and diffusively a few days ago; that letter which he regretted writing ere the ink was dry, which he regrets at this moment more bitterly than ever, and wishes it undone, unwritten, or blotted out forever.

Oh, those terrible letters we have all, at one time or the other, written, which we would give years of life to erase from existence and memory, if we only could! Those terrible letters, which remain legible and well preserved generations after the hand that wrote them had crumbled into dust!

Not that Dick Dumaresq is ashamed or afraid of what he has written, even if it were brought up in judgment against him on the morrow, only—it is so vain, so useless, so hopeless, now. It is the wildest, maddest dream of the impossible now; and worse fear, worse regret of all, is that it might—that foolish, glad, hopeful, half-mysterious letter—it might mean trouble, or embarrassment, or the compromising in some way of sweet Imogene's spotless name. Better he had cut off his right hand ere he wrote those words having reference to her. And yet, of what can he be afraid? That letter was written—those wild, fond, vain hopes were told to his cousin Richard—his adopted brother, the Fidus Achates of a lifetime. If he could not trust Richard—whom, then, could he trust? And, then, as this moment his burdened thoughts went to the mystery of the false telegraphic message, and the probabilities or possibilities attached to his discovery of the sender.

And the mystery mingles itself up in a feverish confusion with his recollection of that letter he had so unfortunately written to his cousin, until he had begun to wonder, dazedly, if the two events can have any connection, and, if so, where can the connection be, and, if so, who can have been the sender of that telegram.

And at this point of the distressing tangle of his thoughts, Dick absently notices some railway trucks standing close beside him, and arousing himself with an effort from his reverie, he sees that he has walked past the village inn, oblivious, and has walked beyond the village bounds half a mile or so, along the narrow road beside the line of railway. There is nothing for it now but to go back the whole way to the inn. Dick cannot afford to be oblivious of his new Gladstone hand-bag, as he was of the Heneage Arms, and, with a very ill grace, seeing that there is not much time to spare before the next train passes through, he walks back at the top of his speed—it is impossible for him to do anything calmly or leisurely this morning—as far as the station; but the fact of his being hot and breathless under the blazing sun, and the sight of a railway porter lounging luxuriously in the shade of some grapevines, makes Dick Dumaresq resolve to send the porter to the Heneage Arms in his stead.

But the lounging porter lounges off on his errand so deliberately, and the minutes of his absence grow so alarmingly prolonged, that Dick Dumaresq, in a very frenzy of nervous irritation and alarm, lest he may lose the next train, strides off after the missing bag and missing porter to boot.

He makes a reckless short cut across the kitchen garden of the Heneage Arms, and is making straight for the inn porch, when he notices simultaneously that the lazy porter, with the bag in his hand, is just issuing from the stableyard, and going toward the station at a gentle pace, and that a groom in the Heneage livery is just entering the house before him.

He avoids the path to the front door at once, but makes a detour, in spite of haste, and because of it, and the heat of the sultry July morning, together, to the side entrance to the little bar, where the host's pretty, slovenly daughter serves him with a glass of beer.

And while he is drinking it he hears the landlord and the Heneage Court groom in conversation.

"If you'd ha' come not five minnits ago," he says, regretfully—"not five minnits;" and the groom responding carelessly, in the intervals of drinking.

"Never mind—it don't matter, Mr. Burcher, in the least. I was to find him if I could—and—if I couldn't, it didn't matter a rap. Contrarywaye, I should say myself," he adds, with a short, meaning laugh, but adds no explanation of his enigmatical words; and Dick, having heard him go out, pays for his own beer and goes out also, trespassing on the kitchen garden ground in his haste to reach the lane leading to the station, and at the moment he leaps down the hedge into the lane, he nearly leaps on the groom, sauntering along in the shade, with his hat in his hand for coolness. Naturally startled and provoked at the contretemps, Dick turns sharply off, but not before he notices a startled look of recognition in the man's face—confusion and some alarm—which he tries to cover by a violent assumption of airy indifference, as he whistles and picks off some bells of fox-glove, walking on at an accelerated pace in an opposite direction.

And yet, at the moment Dick Dumaresq has the railway carriage door locked on him by the guard, and looks out for his last glimpse of the old home, he is positive that the groom in the Heneage livery is standing in the shadow of the clustering vines by the platform, watching his departure.

CHAPTER XV.

It is about the hottest hour of the hot, glaring afternoon when Dick Dumaresq reaches London, and wearied out with twenty-four hours of continuous travelling, he intends, as soon as he has had some slight refreshment of food, to lie down to sleep for a few hours and then go back to Cornwall by a late train, so that he may be able to reach Portdreath early on the following day.

And yet, in spite of the excessive fatigue of body and weariness of spirit—or perhaps because of it—a feverish restlessness possesses him respecting some doubts or imaginings which have crept into his mind; and so, as soon as he has eaten his dinner, or rather a few morsels of the same, he feels more inclined to go out and walk about the streets than to go to sleep.

A trifle—as we count things trifles—decides him. As he sits at the window of the hotel, a watering-cart passes along, leaving the whole of the narrow street cool and damp in its rear—a slight breeze even springs up from the current of cool air.

The perfume of the dusty mignonette in the window-boxes grows fresher, there is a faint, fragrant smell of the fruit wafted from the green grocer's at a distant corner.

"I think I shall go and buy myself a pottle of strawberries, and eat them; I feel as if I could not eat anything else," Dumaresq says, suddenly, taking his hat and sallying out forthwith to buy the strawberries.

But after buying a small basketful and eating them in the green grocer's shady, herb-scented emporium, he feels no inclination to return to the solitary gloom of his room at the hotel, and so walks on and on, through freshly-watered streets for ten minutes or so, getting deeper and deeper into the painful tangle of doubts and surmises which have tormented him all day, until at last he pauses suddenly, and utters his decision half aloud.

"By Jove! I will go and see Richard!" he says, and calls a hansom ere he can change his mind, and is soon being whirled away to the fashionable quarter, where his cousin's chambers are situated. He cannot tell, even to himself, why it is he wants so earnestly to meet Richard Heneage, as he is accustomed to call his cousin, or used to do so, in the days when they were social equals. But since that letter, he has had a feeling regarding Capt. Dumaresq which he refuses to admit within his own heart; but it lingers outside at every portal of his thoughts. Richard will surely be glad to see him, so much of the old companionship remains between those two who were sworn brothers once. He will not intrude on him if he has any of his fashionable friends present—they have the old code of signals arranged by himself. His card sent in, on which is written, in a peculiar and not easily-read hand, "R. Quesdarm," a transposition of his name, and the card returned, with an invitation from the servant that his master is engaged, means, "I cannot possibly see you; call again and fix your own time." He has one of the written cards in his hands as he ascends the steps.

"Captain Dumaresq is not at home, sir," the man announces, instantly, as he scrutinizes the card, and, as Dumaresq perceives, convinced himself concerning the name.

"Do you know my name?" he asks, and the servant hesitates as if uncertain what to answer.

"I can't say—I'm not sure, sir," he says, a little confusedly, "but my master is from home."

"When do you expect him?" Dumaresq persists; "I wish to see him particularly."

"I can't say at all, sir," the man answers, readily and suavely; "it might be in a day or two, it might be in a week. He is in Paris, sir."

"Indeed?" Dumaresq says, blankly—"in Paris! When did he go? I want to know particularly"—this, emphasized by half a crown slipped into the smooth, greedy fingers, which close over it; it disappears instantly—"as I had a letter from him a day or two since," Dumaresq adds, carelessly, rather wondering at the puzzled look which deepens on the man's face.

"He went the day before yesterday, sir," he says, demurely, "and I rather think he will not return this week, sir; your card will be given him with the others left him in his absence," he added, politely, and Dumaresq has nothing for it but to turn away and go back to the hotel.

He goes back, and from sheer despondency sits down in an easy-chair by the open window, revolving wearily in his thoughts whether he will decide to wait another day in town to see his cousin, or whether he will drive straight to the railway-station, and take the first train, express or parliamentary. It does not matter which, which goes to the southwest.

"I can sleep in the railway carriage. I shall be glad to be going south to Portdreath," he thinks, dreamily, with a mingled thrill of pleasure and sadness.

His hopes are all vanished like a breath of a summer morning mist; he could almost laugh in bitter contempt of his own fatuous fancies that could dream of reconcilement, forgiveness, and restoration to the old home of which stern Francis Dumaresq is master, his hopes—those blissful secret, unutterably sweet hopes—are all gone; even their remotest possibility has gone with them. But yet gray old Portdreath will open its doors to him for years to come, in return for humble and faithful services, and—he shall be beneath the same roof with Imogene Trefusis.

And, thinking of her with an aching heart, yearning and dreading to meet her again, Dumaresq falls asleep in the silence of the sultry evening in the quiet street, and for hours he sleeps the heavy sleep of exhaustion, until the troubled brain begins to stir in troubled, weary thoughts.

The daylight is fading, and the gas lamps are lighted in the streets, when Dumaresq suddenly awakes with a violent start, and struggles to his feet, gazing wildly about him, his heart beating like the blows of a sledge-hammer, his hair clinging to his forehead with the sweat of terror from a horrible dream.

And, as with dreams, which are surely portents, it is not so much the incidents as the sensation which is agonizing—the grief, alarm, regret, or fear, which pervades every fibre of the suffering spirit.

Dumaresq's dream has been of this order—a vague, disconnected, wearisome dream of hearing and knowing something which eludes all waking recollections—the hearing and the knowing of some bitter trouble—the feeling of burning wrath, of wild vengeance, in which some one is mixed up inextricably. Then fragmentary visions or glimpses, as it were, of Evelyn Trefusis—haughty, cold, beautiful, cruel Evelyn Trefusis—who has done something with Imogene; and one lurid, vivid memory of Imogene herself—fair, sad Imogene, with her loosened hair, and her white, young face piteously disfigured with childish grief or terror—rushing to him for protection; her little, cold hands are even striving to cling to his, which have no power to hold them fast; her eyes are wild with terror as she cries to him with a shrill cry of despair, as she cried the day he saved her from the dark, cold water:

"Save me—oh, save me!"

She is slipping down at his knees, for a horrible powerlessness prevents him from raising a finger to help her, and, as the pale young face is gradually upturned, he sees there is across it the hideous blur of a great bruise or brand, and, as she sinks lower and lower, he is conscious that she is prostrate on the ground, and her fair head lies in the dust at his feet.

"There is something wrong!" he pants, laboring under the terror and trouble of his evil dream. "Something is happened—something is going to happen to Imogene!"

But as Dumaresq gradually wakes, and his heart beats itself into quietness, one feeling, strong as an intuition, enters into his disturbed mind, and takes up there a firm abiding place.

That his cousin, Richard Heneage, is acting toward him with duplicity, that that selfish, excitedly written letter has sounded the keynote of some different theme in his present or future conduct, which he, Dick, must take cognizance of—must understand; and, if it be as he fears, that Richard's always latent selfishness is becoming now, in his manhood days, too strong for their boyish affection, well, they must shake hands and go different ways for evermore.

More than this—worse than this, he does not dimly suspect. Richard quite determined, he says, resolutely, wrong him, any more than he would wrong Richard, or—cut off his right hand.

"But I will see Richard before I leave London. I will see him; I am quite determined," he says, resolutely, and then, finding it impossible to stay in the house any longer, he goes out restlessly into the streets once more.

The theatres are open, and after he has aimlessly wandered about for half an hour, he enters one, and pays for a seat in the dress-circle; not without a dubious glance at his dress, for it is a fashionable theatre, with a fashionable audience—not overcrowded by any means, for it is a hot night in the last month of the season.

The drama is a deeply interesting one, and Dumaresq has forgotten everything else for the moment in the interest of the situation, when an electric shock seems to tingle through him at the sound of a few words spoken in the box adjoining his seat.

"The poor child is quite buried in Portdreath," a false, bland voice says, suavely. "I am determined she shall have next season in town."

There is some reply made in lower tones by some other occupant of the box, and Dumaresq almost persuades himself the name "Portdreath" is but a trick of his excited fancy, when after some interval of conversation, inaudible through the strains from the orchestra, a younger voice—a sweet, languid, trainante voice, says mockingly:

"Yes—quite so. I am afraid auntie will have the usual thanks which zealous reformers receive. And I know poor Imogene objects strongly to being reformed into a fashionable young lady. Liberty has great charms for her."

Then a male voice chimes in something in low, gallant tones about "fetters one yearns to wear," and there is a sarcastic soft laugh in the low, sweet laugh, and Dumaresq, pale and dizzy, leaning forward on the cushion of the front row; finds himself within a yard of the box wherein is seated Lady Althea de Burgh, handsome as usual, more elegant than usual, in black lace, red roses and diamonds; and she is in chaperonage to two young girls; one plain, dull, soulless, with heavy features and thick, white skin, who, even though splendidly dressed in two shades of heliotrope satin, is a perfect foil to the brilliant arch, piquant loveliness, the exquisite bloom and faultless contour of beautiful Evelyn Trefusis in a classic gown of ivory-white, with a gold zone and armlets, and her rich, dark hair rippling softly away from her temples, drooping on her forehead, and then waving away to the classic, knot behind; lovely and aluring as "a daughter of the gods," as in all truth she is.

Point of the Cape of Good Hope.

Cape point, which terminates the mighty headland known as the Cape of Good Hope, consists of a towering promontory of sandstone, which rises from the sea to an altitude of 840 feet. At the base of this stands a big solitary column which is known as Vasco da Gama's pillar. The lighthouse which here illuminates the meeting place on the Atlantic and Indian Oceans is one of the most important and most useful of its kind. It is visible from a distance of thirty-six miles. The cliff scenery is wild and sublime, and rocks are magnificent, and the far-reaching sea, with the fierce surf beating on the iron-bound coast, is impressive. In the water directly beneath the cliff sharks are abundant.

THE BUSINESS WOMAN

To-day, more than ever before, is woman's opportunity. Many new occupations are now opened to her, which, before the war, she was deemed unfitted to fill. And truth to tell, she has risen to the opportunity, and now shares many business responsibilities in former times confined to men. But, as women are subject to more frequent fluctuations of health than men, many will be handicapped early, if they regard their health requirements too lightly.

The nervous strain, long hours and prolonged mental or physical fatigue thin the blood and weaken the nerves. Such conditions as women are now called upon to undergo can only be endured by a full-blooded constitution. This is as true for men as for women, only weaker women suffer soonest. The woman worker, in any line, requires her blood replenished frequently. She needs new, rich, blood to keep her health under the trying conditions of business life, and to fortify her system against the effects of overwork. This applies also to the woman in the home, who, perhaps, has more worries and anxieties than usual. So let all girls and women take heed and renew their blood promptly at the first approach of pallor, lack of appetite, headache, or backache. This can be best and most effectively accomplished by taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills which make new, rich blood and thus help womankind so perfectly. No woman need fear failure of health if they take these pills occasionally to keep them well, or give them a fair trial if they find themselves run down.

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Nothing Better in Sight.

In an Irish court house an old man was called into the witness box, and being infirm and just a little near sighted, he went too far in more than one sense. Instead of going up the stairs that led to the box he mounted those that led to the bench. The judge, good humoredly, said:

"Is it a judge you want to be, my good man?"

"Ah, sure, yer honor," was the reply; "I'm an old man now, an' mebbe it's all I'm fit for."—London Globe.

IS NOW PRESIDENT OF GRAND TRUNK SYSTEM

PRESIDENT HOWARD G. KELLEY.

Mr. Howard G. Kelley, who has just been appointed President of the Grand Trunk and Grand Trunk Pacific Railways, joined the Grand Trunk Railway System ten years ago as Chief Engineer, after wide experience in the railway field. Since 1911 he has occupied the position of Vice President in charge of the operating, maintenance and construction departments of the System. The news of his appointment to the Presidency of the Grand Trunk has been received with satisfaction in the railway and general business world.

In a ripping war time speech at the patriotic social on Mr. Julius Holm's lawn in Brant on Friday last, John Rowland, Walkerton's warmweather orator, gave the bowlers a passing slam when he said that while he was pleased to say that there was a bunch of men in Walkerton that had gone out to help the farmers get in the grain, yet he was sorry also to say that there were between 250 and 260 able-bodied men rolling polished wooden balls up and down the green night and day in town that week, and to show what an enthusiastic bowler he was, the speaker said he was thinking how nice it would be if an aeroplane could have happened along and dropped a bomb that would have scattered them off to the harvest field.—Walkerton Herald.

Necessary Farm Equipment

MORE and more the Ford car is looked upon by progressive farmers as necessary farm equipment, the same as the plow, the hay-rake, the drill, the mower, the harrow and other labor and time-saving machinery.

A farmer with a Ford car can dispense with one or two of his horses and make the trips to town, railway station, creamery, or to the neighbours in one-third the time. In fact there is no farm machine made that will save the busy farmer and his busy wife so much valuable time as a Ford. And it's so easy to take care of—far easier than a horse. No bed to make, or hay and oats to get, no harnessing and unharnessing, and no stables to clean. The Ford practically takes care of itself.

Ask any farmer who owns a Ford if he would ever again try to get along without it. His answer will hasten your decision to own one.

BURGOYNE AND DISTRICT

At the memorial service Sunday morning the church was filled, many flags and beautiful white floral arrangements decorated the arch, pulpit and surrounding platform. The address by Rev. C. C. Strachan touched on the cause of the war—autocratic rule, which means national slavery. The objects to be maintained by the defence, democratic rule, national and individual freedom. For this the two young men, Robert Gowanlock and Wilber Lynas had nobly given up their lives. Thousands of others were fighting and dying for the cause, our Dominion was full of suffering but out of it all would come a new Canada. The dross consumed by the present afflicting elements and enforced self sacrifice, men and women were rising to higher things than ever before. The address carried wonderful power and the attention of the hearers was held captive throughout.

Mr. W. McTaggart is renting his farm for grazing purposes and will have a sale of stock and implements shortly. He and his sister purpose going west for a few years.

Port Elgin Fair

Great weather brought out the best crowd Port Elgin fair has seen for some time. The entries were larger than usual, and the showing of cattle, sheep and horses the best in many years.

At noon it did not look much like a Fair day in town, but by 1.30 the crowd began to pour in. The automobile has changed the movement of crowds, and it only took an hour or so to bring a thousand or more people. The auto as quickly moves them away, too, and by 7 o'clock the streets were about the same as an ordinary day. But the autos bring the crowds, and the officers and directors are satisfied that the interest in the local fair has not fallen by any means, in fact it is growing. Secretary Elliott announces the largest membership the show has ever had, and along with the bumper receipts of the concert the financial end of the day is a big success.

The only departure from the regular agricultural show was a horse race put on by a local committee, but the fact that there were few horses to be got made the race feature rather uninteresting. After the first heat, there was little interest. There was lots of distance between each of the horses, in each of the heats, the ponies scoring Helen Bell 1st, Dora McKinley 2nd, and Eel Dillard 3rd. Of course the committee is not to blame. With Kincardine races a day after, horses racing here could hardly be expected to go 25 miles and race next day.

There were no other features except the interest in the judging of the live stock, and an inspection of the displays in the main building, all of which proved interesting.

The marked increase in the exhibit of cattle was most satisfactory, while in the horses, there was never a better showing in the carriage and road classes. Apparently the autos have not taken the place of the love for fancy drivers, and several auto owners showed nice ones. The carriage horses were especially fine. The heavy teams also attracted much attention from the spectators. Increased exhibits were noted in sheep, and also in poultry. The number of geese shown should make us sure of lots of good birds for Christmas.

In the hall the ladies excelled themselves this year. The fancy work was about double of that shown in previous years. There were a number of new exhibitors, and as a result a great display of newer designs in the nice things for the home.

Mrs Spence, who judged the ladies' department, declared that the handiwork was of a very high order, even the coarser work of knitting being done with extra neatness. Upstairs, and next to the fancy work, was a showing of mounted insects. Of course these were made by scholars, but there was a display made by Master Milton Miller that was really remarkable, and all who went the rounds were attracted by the numerous bugs and things he had gathered.

The fruit, of course, was a failure, and roots were a trifle off this year. Flowers, however made a great showing, and there were scores of beautiful bouquets.

Vegetables were good, and grain was fair. There was only one display for the school garden prize, and it was taken by Marie Gowanlock. She had carrots, lettuce, flowers, tomatoes, beets, corn, beans, parsnips, and they were all good, too.

It takes specially good prizes to make the people bring in the goods, and this was noted in butter. The showing of delicious butter was immense, and the judges had some time in deciding the the winners for the various specials offered.

Home-made baking was another department that was bigger than previous years. President Henderson's special for collection baking made the interest keen, but there was a good showing also for the general prizes, and for the prizes offered by the flour dealers.

One of the places where you met everybody at some time was the booth conducted by the Red Cross ladies. Here was sold good tea, coffee, sandwiches, and ice cream. The ladies also conducted the tea rooms up town. They were kept busy afternoon and evening, and they made a goodly sum.

In the hall Mr. Pattison had an exhibit of sewing machines and grafonolas, while on the grounds Dr. Power exhibited several new autos.

In the evening the town hall was packed to enjoy the concert put on by the fair board. President Henderson occupied the chair, and in a brief address thanked the gathering for their attendance, and for their co-operation in making the fair a success. Secretary Elliott also thanked those who assisted in the program, and was pleased with the way in which the people from town and country had helped.

Jim Fax, of Toronto, was the chief feature of the program. He gave funny amusing selections. His chief entertainment was his uniforms, and the particular feature of dress was the Scotch thistle. A goodly part of the program was given by local talent, which was equally entertaining, and was given by Mrs. D. Lamont, Miss Laura Ebert, Miss Martin, Miss MacDonald, Miss Hazel Webb, Mr. James Scott, Mr. R. E. O. Smith. The Burgoyne orchestra also contributed well rendered selections. Those in the orchestra were Mr. and Mrs. M. Black, Miss McIvor, Miss McAndrew, I. Grieve, G. Zeigler, Mrs. W. J. Pierson.

Every seat was reserved, and the hall was well planned and looked after by J. J. George and his young lady assistants, Misses, Wells, Eby, George and Cassidy, and Mr. H. Blindauer.

NOTES

It was the 61st annual exhibition, and Mrs. D. McTavish was at the first fair 60 years ago. It will be noted that Mrs. McTavish is among the chief winners in the domestic class, for knitting, etc., this year.

The grass cut and the track sprinkled would have pleased the spectators. Thanks for the suggestion. We won't forget that next year.

President Henderson

who headed the Fair Board this year, and who helped greatly in increasing the interest.

There were not many special prizes this year. A few specials by some of our prominent farmers concerning the farm would have been welcomed by the directors, and the public, too.

The loss of Port Elgin band is being felt. It did seem tame without a band on the grounds.

The fair would be a good place for merchants to make an exhibit of their wares. A chance to talk to a couple of thousand people is a real opportunity.

Many people missed the presence of Mr. John Howe. This is the first year he has missed in a long time. Illness prevented him from being in the horse ring.

Lawrence McVittie Killed in Motor Accident

Last night at 11.30 Lawrence McVittie eldest son of Mr. John McVittie, Southampton, was instantly killed by the overturning of the car he was driving.

The accident happened exactly in front of Mr. John Henderson's residence on Goderich street, south, when Lorne with three friends, D. McHaney, W. Laughlin, and another lad whose name was not ascertained, were motoring south.

Just at this point, on turning out to pass a rig, the boys say the car swerved to one side and struck the telephone post, overturning the car. It swayed at first, and the boys stooped low, fearing a turnover, and apparently for this reason when the car did go over the others were not hurt.

Lawrence being the driver, received the injuries, and he was hit with such force that his skull was smashed in, and split clear through the bone running from the front to back on the right side.

Another car from Southampton, which was following at the time, stopped, and the unfortunate lad was conveyed to Dr Chambers, but there was no hope, death being instantaneous.

Coroner Chambers at once called the father at Southampton, and Undertaker Pattison was given charge of the remains, which were removed to Southampton to day.

Lawrence, was the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. John McVittie, all the family being very well known in this town, and in fact, throughout the district. He was a bright young fellow of about 17 years of age. He enlisted in the flying corps a few months ago, but he was pronounced too young. He was a clerk in the Bank of Hamilton.

To the parents and family the deepest sympathy is felt in the terrible grief, which has so suddenly overwhelmed them.

At the hour of going to press funeral arrangements had not been completed.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Read and Mr. Alex Merchant and daughter of Egremont, and Rev. Lovegrove, of Holstein, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Hampton.

If you are in need of a new stove this fall. Call and see Thede and Brill.

TIVERTON

The Tiverton Branch of the Red Cross Society gratefully acknowledge the following donations :—1 pair of pillows and 2 pairs of pillow cases from Mrs. James McKay; $1 from Miss Mary Clark; $25 from the Kincardine Tp Council. The ladies of the Society served lunch at the cottage of Mrs. (Capt.) K. McKenzie, at the Lake, on two occasions, from which the sum of $65 was realized.

Mrs. Eastwood Clayton, after a three months' visit at Hamilton and Montreal, returned to her home, 2nd. of Bruce, last Thursday very much improved in health.

On Friday afternoon the 14th inst., at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Slade Kincardine, Miss Florence McDonald, formerly of Tiverton, was united in marriage to Mr. W. Ross Cameron, of Toronto. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. O. Robinson, pastor of the Presbyterian church, Tiverton.

The young people of Tiverton and vicinity gave a shower to Miss Florence McDonald at the home of her brother, Mr. Wm. McDonald, on Wednesday the 12th inst.

NEWS OF THE WEEK

Pte. Deakins of Wiarton, is wounded.

October 1st the rabbit season begins.

Saugeen Rural school fair takes place here on Friday afternoon.

Pte. D. J. Bain, Paisley, is reported wounded.

Mrs. Geo. S. Bell reports ripe strawberries in her garden.

J. W. Pattison has workmen engaged in putting a new ceiling in his furniture store.

Potatoes are dropping in price. They sold at $1.25 a bag on Owen Sound market last week.

W. Davey, hostler at the Queen's hotel, Tara, was fined $20 and costs for being drunk.

The market quotations this week are wheat, $2.10: oats, 55 to 60c: butter, 40c: eggs, 38c: hogs, $17.

BORN—On Sept. 11th at Vancouver, to Mr. and Mrs. "Tory" MacKenzie, (nee Frank Chapman) a son.

The Rural School Fair for Bruce Tp. is being held at S. S. No. 9 to-morrow (Thursday).

The Soldiers' Friend Club will conduct the "Tea Room" Saturday Sept. 29th.

On October 1st the Electric Light Co. adopts the meter system here. The service will on that date be a 24 hour one, the street lights having been placed on separate wires.

Extra advertising has crowded out some local news, which will appear next week. Our readers will be interested in the advt. on page 5, to provide food for our soldiers.

Property changes reported by D. C. Cavin are Neil Steadman's house to Mrs. Allan McKinnon for [illegible] Mr. Steadman will remove to his farm in Saugeen. Robt. Begg's property on Mill street, east, to John Guyer, for $700.

Mr. J. D. Edgar, field secretary for the Resources Committee, was in town Friday, and conferred with the president of the Women's Institute regarding the securing of signatures for the food pledges. It is understood the secretary of the local institute has the pledges, and it is likely a canvass will be made of the town and country to get signatures to assist in eliminating all waste in the kitchen.

You can't complain of high prices after you've seen the big bargains at Barber's store.

Mr. Davis, Mrs. Bolton and son motored from Kirkton to visit Mrs. Bolton's mother, Mrs. J. Johnston and sister, Mrs. Holloway, over the week end.

Rev. Dr. Scanlan has received word that his son Reginald, who was wounded at Lens, has been transferred from the base hospital in France to the hospital in England. The wound was a serious gunshot wound in the lower right abdomen, the missile going through and coming out at the back of the hip. He has been operated on for gas poisoning, is doing well and expects to come through without any permanent disability.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson XIV. September 30, 1917.

The Goodness and Severity of God—Review.—Daniel 9: 3-16.

Summary.—Lesson I. Topic: Preparation for service. Place: Jerusalem. Isaiah had a vision of God in the temple and was impressed with the divine glory and his own uncleanness. In answer to his despairing cry an angel touched his lips with a live coal from the altar and he was made clean.

II. Topic: An idolatrous career. Place: Jerusalem. Ahaz was the son of the pious Jotham, but he departed grievously from his father's example. He was one of the most idolatrous kings the nation of Judah ever had.

III. Topic: Reunion and worship. Place: Jerusalem. Hezekiah, the son of Ahaz, was an excellent ruler of Judah. He undertook extensive reforms, putting away idolatry, and undoing, as far as he could, the evil work of his father.

IV. Topic: A crisis in Judah. Place: Land of Judah. During the reign of Hezekiah over Judah, Sennacherib, king of Assyria, invaded his kingdom and threatened to capture Jerusalem. He spoke most blasphemously against Jehovah.

V. Topic: Spiritual transformation. Place: Jerusalem. During the dark periods of Judah's history the Lord still dealt mercifully with his people. He sent the prophet Isaiah to them with a message of salvation and comfort.

VI. Topic: Retrogression. Place: Jerusalem; Babylon. Manasseh was the son of the godly Hezekiah, but he did not follow the Lord as did his father. In the early part of his reign he went into idolatry and the Lord punished him by permitting him to be led to Babylon as a captive.

VII. Topic: Reformation in Judah. Places: Judah; parts of Israel. Josiah, the grandson of Manasseh, commenced to reign when he was eight years old. He earnestly sought the Lord and gave evidence of his sincerity in the removal of idolatry from his land.

VIII. Topic: The law of God. Place: Jerusalem. During the repairs of the temple which King Josiah instituted, the book of the law was found. When the king heard it read, he was deeply moved. He sent to Huldah, the prophetess, for a message from the Lord.

IX. Topic: Disciplinary judgment. Places: Jerusalem; Riblah; Babylon. The good reign of Josiah was followed by a succession of disastrous ones. While Jehoiakim was king, many noble persons of Jerusalem were taken captive by Nebuchadnezzar and carried to Babylon.

X. Topic: A lost nation restored. Place: Tel abib, in Babylonia. Ezekiel was carried from Jerusalem as a captive of Babylon in B. C. 597. He was a prophet of the captivity. He approved Israel's false shepherds and declared that God was the nation's true Shepherd, who faithfully cared for his flock.

XI. Topic: Freedom in captivity. Place: Babylon. Daniel, Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego were Jewish captives in Babylon who were chosen to be trained for royal service. They refused to eat food from the king's table and to drink wine. They prospered on the simple food which they asked might be given them.

XII. Topic: Heroic piety. Place: Dura near Babylon. King Nebuchadnezzar caused a great image to be set up in the plain of Dura, and required all his subjects to fall down and worship it at a given signal. Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego refused to worship.

XIII. Topic: Daniel's loyalty to God. Place: Babylon. Daniel's loyalty to God. Place: Babylon. Daniel had been highly honored in Babylon and incurred the envy and hatred of other officials. They laid a plot against him and tried to have him slain. The Lord preserved him.

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—A decadent nation.

I. Its weakness through idolatry.
II. Its warnings through prophecy.
III. Its piety through individuals.

I. Its weakness through idolatroy. A survey of the history of Judah, as it has been studied during the quarter, presents a most abject record of a people's sin. As God's chosen people to keep his worship sacred as a testimony to the world, they proved how deplorable a state they had reached by unfaithfulness to divine instruction. That sacred institution of the Passover, which marked the beginning of their history as a nation, had never been kept as a national celebration since the division of the twelve tribes. With every departure from their God-ordained forms of worship, some form of idolatry was set up until the land was never free from traces of idolatry. For a nation whose history had been so filled with the marvelous dealings of God in behalf of his people, their persistent bent toward idolatry was beyond excuse. That God was merciful and constant in His pleadings for their return to righteousness and that some spiritual life remained, were seen in the efforts of a few godly kings whose reigns were notable for their earnest zeal in the putting away of idol-worship and the reestablishment of divine worship and the regular service of the temple. That the reforms were in a great degree external, leaving the people unchanged at heart, was evident in their ready return to idolatry when there was a change of kings and the restraint was lifted. The mad desire to multiply idolatrous practises reached beyond all limitations so that Judah gathered from other nations every possible addition to idol-worship and heathen practises. The result was that the temple was neglected and desecrated and robbed. The law of the Lord was lost until its sacred contents were forgotten and its warnings and directions had no place in their lives. Captivity was the only chastisement that would effect any real repentance. God in mercy let that stroke fall upon them.

II. Its warnings through prophecy. In the midst of most deplorable conditions, God was revealed to the youthful Isaiah, whose whole life was changed into one long service as a prophet through whom God spoke messages of warning to the ever-declining nation. To Isaiah was given a vision of the days of the Messiah when the plan of redemption would be unfolded alike to all nations. The awful sins of the "shepherds of Israel" and the consequent judgments which followed were faithfully declared by the prophet Ezekiel. He also looked beyond Judah's restoration from captivity to the days of the Messiah and the final triumph of God's faithful people. To the most rebellious and idolatrous kings God sent warning before chastisement. The door of mercy was ever open to any who were quickened and repentent. The account of Manasseh's repentance and restoration proves that none need continue in sin though much time has been spent in wrong-doing and in causing others to do wrong.

III. Its piety through individuals. Not until the cup of Judah's iniquity was full did the Lord permit a heathen conqueror to invade the sacred city to destroy it. As though mercy struggled with justice to spare the last branch of Israel from captivity, there were three distinct efforts made before Nebuchadnezzar completed the destruction of Jerusalem and the deportation of the people into Babylon. The absolute humility came in the treatment of Zedekiah, the last of Judah's kings, who went childless and blind into captivity. That God will not leave himself without true witnesses in the earth is plain from the marvellous way in which his truth shone forth through the young men first selected by the Babylonian conqueror to serve his ends in a heathen court. The vitality of faith and obedience in Daniel and his companions proved sufficient throughout the seventy years of captivity to secure to the Jewish captives distinct recognition and favor, so that their hope was not cut off. The God of Israel was admitted to be supreme in his power to deliver his servants from the snares which their enemies set for their destruction. Four faithful souls were God's "remnant" through whom he kept the light of revelation burning while his chastening hand prepared his people for better days.

SUNDAY AT HOME

LET THE OLD THINGS GO.

"Let the old things go,
Old thoughts, old pains old hates,
Old prejudice grim and blind—
Let us close the dead past's gates
On these; let us leave behind
The empty and outworn things.
Let us turn our eyes ahead
To the morrow and what it brings,
For what is dead is dead.
And yesterday is flown. Heigho!
Let the old things go."

HE CALLETH HIS OWN SHEEP.

The foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, the Lord knoweth them that are his; and, let every one that nameth the name of Christ, depart from iniquity.—Many will say to me on that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity.—The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous; but the way of the ungodly shall perish.

Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me.—Set me as a seal upon thine heart, as a seal upon thine arm.—The Lord is good, a strong hold in the day of trouble; and he knoweth them that trust in him.

I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.

THE ARMORY.

(By the late Rev. H. T. Miller.)

"Arm yourselves with the same mind." One of the most dignified utterances ever printed for man. The mind of Christ is the truest, all sufficient armory. Let us look away from the explosives and hundred-ton guns; let us look away from the sloth of these military stores; they rot, they rust; they brew microbes of ruin; what is so consuming, as an army in time of peace? Let it alone, it will fall by its own weight.

Look at the implements of war which are furnished by Christ; they are never obsolete, never superceded, never idle. Look into the mind of Christ, you will never be arrested as a spy. You are invited; the door is open. His mind is well regulated. Here is supreme dignity, the dignity of earthly leaders largely consists of gold lace, buttons and feathers in the mind of Christ there is calmness, strength, perspicacity.

In the mind of Christ there is sustained purpose. You learn this in the Bible, in the ocean. It is the burden of every prophet; the song of every Deborah. "His name shall endure forever." Oh, the never-dying courage, the close-fitting faithfulness! In the mind of Christ is vision. Every mountain peak is a Pisgah—all lands, all peoples, all climes, all plots, all times. "Why do the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing."

"Wide as the world is Thy command, Vast as eternity Thy love."

In the mind of Christ there is no horizon, no vanishing point, no haze. Telegraphy without wires, telepathy without presence. The laws of the body govern not His range. Time, space, numbers, dimensions, are nothing to Him. He sweeps round the world. He goes through the universe, conquering and to conquer—for who hath resisted His will? Nay! we may compress still farther, and gather all under three little words: Poverty, Purity and Power, and our survey is complete. The greatest amazement of all is that we may have this mind. As He was, so are we or ought to be—and we are when we are in health. Mind is ever active, free, ever growing; never lasting, never resting; the mind knows no weariness; it is only the body. James Martineau argues that if Divine Providence ordained that we should remain on the earth for twenty centuries: at the end we would not complain that we needed a new soul! Are we not open to His inspection, subject to His control, all things serve His might, His smile is heaven; His frown is hell.

"Purer yet and purer,
I would be in mind,
Dearer yet and dearer
Every duty find.
Hoping still and trusting,
God without a fear;
Patiently believing,
He will make all clear.
Oft these earnest longings,
Swell within my breast;
Yet their inner meaning
Ne'er can be expressed."

IF.

If none were sick and none were sad,
What service could we render?
I think if we were always glad
We scarcely could be tender.
Did our beloved never need
Our patient ministration,
Earth would grow cold, and miss, indeed,
Its sweetest consolation.
If sorrow never claimed our heart,
And every wish were granted,
Patience would die, and hope depart—
Life would be disenchanted.

THY WILL BE DONE.

Bless the Lord, ye his angels, that excel in strength, that do his commandments, hearkening unto the voice of his word. Bless ye the Lord, all ye his hosts; ye ministers of his that do his pleasure.

I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me.—I delight to do thy will, O my God; yea, thy law is within my heart.—O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done.

Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.—Not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified.—If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them.—To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin.

Be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind.

THE MOVABLE SIDEWALK.

This wonderful novelty of locomotion, has become exhibited on several occasions, to the wonder of the beholder. It was seen that the usual plan was reversed. Instead of the man walking and the sidewalk remaining stationary—the man remained standing or sitting and the sidewalk moved. After all, as the poet says, there is nothing new under the sun—this plan of locomotion is as old as the days of Noah. For what is the law of Maine navigation? Is it not that the passenger sits in his chair and the ship moves on. This reversal of the plan of progress may strike the reader with all the force of novelty, let us be patient. Dear Samuel Rutherford, whose name is sweet today, says: "Forefancy the day of your death, and make all needful preparation for the end of the journey." This is in accordance with the old notion of life—a journey terminating in death. This is illustrated in the peerless beauty of the "Pilgrims Progress," and yet John Bunyan was ill equipped to be a teacher of Christian liberty. For long years he was bound in the chains of a legal bondage as his work in "Grace Abounding" fully proves, and the proof is this: You can find thousands of Christians to-day who are strangers to the Slough of Despond, Giants' Castle, The Iron Cage and Dismal Despair. Let us cease from man—even if it be the immortal John Bunyan.

The movable sidewalk is here to-day in full force. The Blessed Master stands in the gangway and says, "Come"! And when I come on board I am assured of a welcome, pardon, easy employment and an abundant entrance at the end of the voyage—what more can I have? I am safe, and happy and hopeful. Where the ship goes I go, and if infinite intelligence and power walk the Quarter Deck, am I not safe? The cry is never heard "all hands to the pumps!" There are no pumps! Wonder of wonders. I did not build the ship. I did not make the sails. I do not form the wind. I am not one of the crew. (Angels are there). The power of successful navigation is not mine. And yet if the ship arrives I arrive! A sublime conclusion to the argument. At the end of the voyage there is welcome, acclaim, victory, banners, floods of joy. Open the gates of the mighty port, and let the ship, commanded by Jesus Christ enter in, to the everlasting joy.

The movable sidewalk lands its passengers in safety and honor and not one is lost.

Russian Folk Songs.

Concerning the folk songs of Russia, Cesar Cui wrote in his "La Musique en Russie": "Russian folk songs are usually written within a very restricted compass and only rarely move beyond the interval of a fifth or a sixth. The older the song the narrower is the range of its compass. The theme always is short, sometimes extending no farther than two measures, but these two are repeated as often as the exigencies of the text demand. The folk songs are sung either by a single voice or by a chorus. In the latter case a single voice leads off with the subject and then the chorus takes it up."

APPLE RECIPES

There is such a variety of apples, and the fruit lends itself so easily to various methods of preservation that in some form or another it is an all-the-year table visitant. At this time, when bread and meat and vegetables and fruits have attained such high prices, it is well worth while to make the fullest use of the apple crop as a measure of precaution and saving. This page could easily be filled with recipes into which the apple enters as the chief constituent. A few are subjoined for early reference:

OPEN APPLE PUDDING.

Peel and slice two pounds of apples, and boil until a pulp; while still hot add to it three ounces of castor sugar, three ounces of butter, the juice of an orange and one lemon. When cold, stir in the yolks of four eggs, line a dish with short paste, fill with apple mixture and bake. Whisk the whites of the eggs until a stiff froth, add a tablespoonful of icing sugar, put pieces on top of the pudding, return to a hot oven for about ten minutes and serve either hot or cold.

YORKSHIRE APPLE PIE.

Line a Yorkshire pudding tin with a nice stiff paste, slice up some good cooking apples and cover it thickly, sprinkle in about one dozen cloves, a dust of powdered cinnamon, and the merest suggestion of chopped lemon peel. Sift a good layer of sugar on top, cover with pastry, mark with a knife into squares. Bake in a quick oven; when done, brush quickly with the white of an egg beaten to a froth, sprinkle with castor sugar, return to the oven for two or three minutes, turn out of the tin while hot, and serve hot or cold.

BAKED APPLE CHARLOTTE.

Peel and cut into slices two pounds of cooking apples, boil them to a pulp, with sugar to taste and a piece of lemon rind. Then line a cake tin with bread coated both sides with butter, making the bread overlap around the edge; fill the tin with the apple puree, and grate a little nutmeg over. Cut a piece of bread to the top of tin, and butter this also. Bake in a moderate oven until the bread is crisp, taking care not to burn the top. Turn out on a dish and serve hot.

APPLE SYLLABUB.

Pare some sharp apples, core and slice them into a stewpan, cook with a little water until they are froth; whisk them when cool with sufficient castor sugar to well sweeten them, and add a small teacupful of thick cream. Drop a spoonful of bright jelly at the bottom of some custard glasses, fill up with the apple froth and serve sweet biscuits with them.

APPLE TRIFLE.

Stew four or five apples to pulp, then rub through a sieve; sweeten to taste. Make a custard with two yolks and one white of egg, and two teacupfuls of milk. Heat the milk, pour it over the eggs; strain into a jug, set the jug in a pan of boiling water and stir with a wooden spoon until the custard thickens and coats the spoon. Pour into a bowl and flavor to taste. When cold pour over the apples and cover with whipped cream.

APPLE SNOW.

Take a dozen large apples, half a pound of castor sugar, a little of the thin rind of a lemon (grated), and six whites of eggs. Boil the apples till tender, then pass them through a sieve, and beat them well. When they are cold, add to them the sugar, etc., and the whites of the eggs whisked very stiffly; beat thoroughly together and serve with cream or custard.

APPLE AND SAGO PUDDING.

Pare and core five or six apples, filling in the centre with Demerara sugar, and a dot of butter on each. Put a teacupful of sago in a pudding dish with one tablespoonful of sugar, place in the apples, fill up with water in a moderate oven for about two hours, covering the top with greased paper, if necessary.

FARM AND GARDEN

OLD MEADOWS—THEIR SUMMER CULTIVATION.

(Experimental Farm Note.)

Two years, on the average farm, is quite long enough to leave modern meadows down for the best results and greatest profits. They should then be broken up and cultivated for other crops.

The present is an excellent time to commence this operation. During haying and before grain harvests there are many days, after showers, when the teams can be profitably put at plowing the old meadow.

Deep plowing is not necessary, nor need the furrows be set up with a narrow plow. Rapid work at this time of year is essential. A two-furrow plow, with three horses, will turn over a large piece of land in a day. At the close of each day the area plowed that day should be rolled. This breaks the lumps, presses down the furrows, re-establishes connection between the surface soil and the subsoil, bringing up the moisture from the latter to aid in rotting the sod.

After rolling, discing and harrowing should not be delayed. With such cultivation one retains a surface mulch, opens, aerates and fines the soil and destroys many bad types of noxious weeds, and with the co-operation of the summer sun this work is most effective. With the present scarcity of labor, this is the cheapest and most practical method of weed destruction and soil preparation for grain and even for hoed crops.

After the sod is decayed, a rigid or spring-tooth cultivator with wide points should be kept going at intervals until autumn. Then the land should be [illegible] as the humus or plant food in the soil will allow. On the Dominion illustration stations some results have been obtained in comparing the summer cultivation of sod land with fall plowing the same, which indicate very clearly the benefit derived from summer cultivation as outlined above. In addition to the greater yield obtained, it should be remembered that the land is thereby put into much cleaner condition for subsequent crops.

Two fields of four acres each were taken; the first field was plowed after harvest, was cultivated occasionally during the summer and autumn, and plowed in the autumn; the other field of four acres was left in sod and also plowed in the autumn. The oats from the summer-cultivated field gave a yield of 15 bushels more per acre than the field plowed in the autumn. This difference of 60 bushels on the four acre field at 50 cents a bushel shows a total gain of $30. Counting the cost of summer cultivating at $4 per acre, a total cost of $16 for the four acres, an increase in net profit of $14, or $3.50 per acre, was obtained. The soil on the cultivated field being in a much finer condition and almost free from weeds, the difference in the profits from the two fields, if worked alike, should be almost as great the following season.

Roots.—Twenty-eight rows of sugar beets grown on summer-cultivated land produced 10¼ tons, while 36 rows of the same length grown on land simply spring plowed only produced 9 tons, a difference of 3,733 pounds. The price paid at the factory being $5.63 per ton, a gain of $16.03 per acre was shown in favor of the after-harvest cultivation.

SAVING SEED POTATOES.

In saving seed potatoes, select seed from hills where the plants were strong and robust and the yield large. Potatoes from hills containing few potatoes will give a poor yield.

Select clean, healthy potatoes from the size of a hen's egg down to those the size of an English walnut. This will permit all potatoes large enough for use or for sale to be disposed of. Avoid all tubers that look diseased.

As the seed are selected lay them on the soil for a couple of days to harden the skin; turn them over and leave for two or three days longer. Gather up the seed when the tubers are dry and store them in racks or shallow boxes, spreading the potatoes carefully over the bottoms only one tier deep.

The boxes can be piled up one on another, first placing a slat across each end of the lower box to raise the upper one sufficiently to admit free circulation of air. The bottom box should be raised so there may be circulation of air under it.

A cool, dry cellar is the best place to keep them. Where the temperature is too warm or the cellar too damp the seed will not keep well. Where they are too warm growth will start before planting time.

NOTIES.

The true theory of training is the careful and progressive development of the colt's powers by exercising them until he has reached the perfection of physical vigor, and has at the same time acquired the mental balance necessary to putting forth his greatest powers, as well as the courage and resolution to keep him up to his best in a continued effort.

Under most circumstances it is better to wean colts a little young than to put it off so late in the fall that there is no grass or green food to give them. Colts that are not used to eating hay or dry feed of any kind will not take to them readily and will not thrive as well upon this kind of a ration as upon grass. So far as can be done, colts should be fairly well accustomed to eating dry grain before being weaned.

The cheapest road to soil fertility is the humus road. Any kind of vegetable matter plowed under and allowed to decay adds humus to the soil. This does not only preserve the moisture in the soil, but adds to the fertility of the land.

Salt and charcoal should be provided to furnish hogs with mineral matter. Salt should be available at all times, preferably in an open shed, where it can be protected from the weather. Charcoal is best fed from the hopper or self feeder, so as to prevent waste. It is a common practice to burn cobs until the cob is well charred, and then the fire is smothered and the hogs are given access to this. Some people char their cobs in a pit, and when the fire has gained good headway the top of the pit is covered with a piece of sheet metal and then covered with dirt to keep out the air. The charcoal can then be used as it is needed. It is advisable to add salt to the charcoal, as it makes it more palatable, and is also especially good for the hogs.

A Gargle for a Sore Throat.

The kind of sore throat which annoys one when the weather is unpleasant and the air feels raw and damp, is not difficult to treat, and a speedy cure is always possible. The red appearance of the throat indicates a mild degree of congestion, which may be relieved by gargling the throat with hot (as hot as can be borne without burning) soda water. Dissolve a teaspoonful of sodium bicarbonate in a tumblerful of hot water. Use this strength and gargle thoroughly every three hours. Also take a saline laxative—such as Rochelle salts, a heaping teaspoonful in a tumblerful of cold water—at bedtime, and another dose upon rising in the morning. It is always advisable to remain indoors for 24 or more hours when having a mild attack of sore throat.

July Ocktail.

Half a peach,
Half an orange,
One thick slice of pineapple,
All diced nicely, to be sure.
A half-dozen berries or a cherry,
Sugared scantily to leave a tartness,
And you have a cool first course for dinner.

It takes three generations to make a gentleman, but sometimes they are [illegible]

Fogs Bewilder Birds.

It is a curious thing that, though human beings are utterly bewildered in a dense fog, most animals find their way through it without much difficulty. A horse will trot along in the right direction as though the air were perfectly clear, and not only that, but will take the right turning at the right moment if it is at all accustomed to the road. A human being would take any turning but the right one. Birds, on the other hand, are utterly bewildered by fog. Pigeons, for instance, will remain motionless all day long, half asleep, huddled up in their pigeon houses. Chickens and poultry of all kinds won't stir all the time a heavy fog is about. Birds of all kinds, as a matter of fact, seem helpless during foggy weather.—Pearson's.

The Pulse Beat.

The readiest and roughest estimate of time is the pulse beat. It is sad to know that the human pulse beat is not exactly sixty to the minute. That is one of the faulty arrangements of life. But it comes pretty close. And the rough and ready calculator of the time between the flash of lightning and the thunder depends on his pulse when he cannot see his watch. To the ordinary man a second is a pulse beat. —London Chronicle.

Through Many Trials

But it is not in her face—though her dark eyes are gazing at him with a look of amazement and recognition, that Dumaresq's regard is riveted, so that he cannot for a moment withdraw his eyes—but on the face of her attendant cavalier, the young man by her side in faultless evening dress, with a spray of pale pink heath in his buttonhole—his cousin, Richard Heneage Dumaresq!

The magnetic attraction of Dick Dumaresq's fierce gaze draws his eyes from the fair face whereon they are dwelling with such unmistakable devotion, and he sees—he cannot but see—his cousin watching him, with rigid, set lips and blazing eyes, across the half-drawn curtain of the box, and for two or three moments he betrays his consciousness of Dick's presence in the spasmodic change that passes over his features, and an involuntary motion of the small, tight-gloved hands that are toying with the fan and opera glass belonging to Miss Trefusis.

But the next moment he has compelled the smile back to his lips, and the tender adoration glows in his eyes, as his glance meets Evelyn's, and he offers her the lorgnets after carefully adjusting the focus, as if he had neither sight nor thoughts for any one on earth besides herself. But beautiful Miss Trefusis is as largely endowed with astute perception as she is with loveliness; she has seen all that has passed and divined much more. She has recognized Dick Dumaresq and—she knows more about Dick Dumaresq than any one, including himself, imagines.

Least of all does her lover think among what pitfalls he is walking when he strives to parry her pretty, persistent questioning.

"Who was that?" she demands, leaning forward, disregarding his effort to attract her attention, "that man who looked at us so earnestly? I have seen him before."

"Where was he?" asks Captain Dumaresq, pretending to gaze around the house.

"There—within six feet of you," laughs Evelyn, softly, her ripe red lips curling; "he stared at you in an extraordinary manner."

"As long as he was not near enough to touch me on the shoulder I don't care," Captain Dumaresq says, languidly, with a careless smile; "one meets duns in all sorts of places—unfortunately."

"He didn't look in the least like a dun," Evelyn retorts; "he was a dark complexioned at least, sun-browned, you know—soldierly, good looking—" Then with a sudden emphasis which sends her words home with a thrill of alarm, and a sweet, coquettish smile which divests it of any significance on her part, she adds, in a whisper: "He was very like you."

"Then I hope he was not a dun," Captain Dumaresq says, gayly; "and I am sure I have seen him before somewhere," and she looks around the curtain again, as if to verify the resemblance, and Captain Dumaresq, setting his teeth hard, and nerving himself for anything, or everything, looks also.

"He has gone!" exclaims Evelyn. "How odd! Why has he gone, I wonder?"

"I am afraid he is a dun, after all," laughs Captain Dumaresq, lightly; "he has studied my countenance closely, on account of his 'little bill.' There will be no escape for me this time. I really must peg in and pay off all my debts, although I am afraid I shall feel quite lonely without my liabilities—they are friends of years' long standing, you see."

Evelyn laughs her sweet, gay laugh, although she is not in the least amused, but secretly scornful and disgusted. She knows that Captain Dumaresq has recognized his scapegrace cousin as she has heard him described—the wild, lawless, handsome prodigal, who is, nevertheless, so she had learned on excellent authority, the lawful heir of Heneage Court, and inheritor of the title, and who will be Viscount Dumaresq, Baron Heneage, by and by.

Only lately has she learned all this, only lately has she begun to perceive the identity between the handsome, [illegible] man, who is her brother's tutor, and old Viscount Dumaresq's scapegrace nephew.

At the theatre, within these few minutes, she has perceived clearly—she has intuitively divined—a whole [illegible] of the history of the two men who bear the same name, and the 'big,' scheming, clever brain within that graceful girlish head has sprung far ahead into possibilities and probabilities, wherein she sees the elder Richard [illegible] so vividly, so attractively, that the younger man's presentment fades into indifference and nothingness.

He is, in those fair, cruel hands of fate, but a tool to her purposes, a means to a desired end; he can never, will never be more to her than that.

But at this moment there comes a distraction to fair Evelyn's schemes and Captain Dumaresq's gnawing anxiety.

The box door opens, and a big, old city man, with scanty, iron-gray hair, brushed in circular sweeps over his bald head, and a puckered, coarse-featured face with a heavy under lip and twinkling, small eyes, enters, and stands surveying the group sharply, with a sour, suspicious look.

"Oh, uncle!" Miss Petherick, the plain, [illegible], heavy-faced girl says, languidly, and slowly, "we thought you were not coming at all."

"So I see," Sir William Petherick says significantly, his underlip protruding, his gray eyebrows lowering in a scowl, and his niece winces at the token of his displeasure, which she has good reason to dread; but Evelyn Trefusis, her beautiful young cousin, looks round archly at him over her shoulder with a mock frown, and then, with a delicious little smile and gesture of forgiveness, she draws in the folds of her ivory cashmere, and motions him to be seated on about three inches of her chair cushion. Sir William frowns more heavily for a moment, as he pauses irresolutely, and then his brow relaxes a little as he comes forward.

"I did not come here to intrude on a happy party at this hour," he says, in a grating, sarcastic tone. "I have only come for a minute between the acts to give you a look up. No, thank you, my dear," to Evelyn; "I will not sit down, five people in a box are too many."

Captain Dumaresq's lips curls at this, and he wonders carelessly for a moment, "if the old fellow is displeased about anything in particular, he is so absurdly bearish." Truth to tell, he never deigns to take much notice of Evelyn's elderly host. He is "a city man," rich and vulgar, and lately knighted along with a batch of other civic dignitaries.

Captain Dumaresq regrets the existence of a person of this class, who has the right to claim beautiful, highbred Evelyn as a relative, only that he is certainly "disgustingly rich," and so may be made useful in the future for beautiful Evelyn and himself, even if one looks no further than a costly wedding present.

"I am with a friend of mine in a box under this," Sir William goes on, in a less disagreeable tone, and addressing himself to Evelyn. "Don't you find it very warm in here—such a lot of you?" the city man adds, bluntly.

"Dreadfully warm," Evelyn replies, with a sudden little smile, at which Sir William's surly lips curls into something which means affability toward the rest of the party.

"Come down to our box—nobody but an old friend of mine. It is much cooler," he says, briefly, with a nod of his head, in explanation to Lady Althea as chaperon, as he offers his arm to Evelyn, who accepts it with a gay, girlish little smile of pleasure, as if it is but a bit of drollery that amuses her, looks back at Captain Dumaresq, whose face has paled and eyes grown dark with pain and anger, as he stares unbelievingly watching the manoeuvre. It is not the first of the kind he has witnessed on the part of the lovely young woman to whom he has given his heart. And while he stares, Evelyn and Sir William have disappeared, and he turns away with fixed composure, to try and concentrate his attention on the stage, when his glance is intercepted by one from Miss Petherick, into whose pale, fleshy face a dull-red color has struggled, and whose dull eyes are sparking with a fire of indignation. She is gazing after the couple who have quitted the box, even when the door is shut.

"December and May!" she says, with a scornfully wrathful curl of her lip, which makes her look rather like her uncle. "It is simply disgusting!"

"What do you mean?" Captain Dumaresq demands, in a hoarse whisper, the veins in his forehead swelling darkly.

Miss Petherick owes Evelyn's lover a grudge almost as bitter as she owes Evelyn. They all seem—Captain Dumaresq in an aggrieved degree—to have neither eyes nor ears for her in Evelyn's presence.

"What do I mean?" she sneers. "Wait for a month or two, Captain Dumaresq, and you will know what I mean. If you wouldn't object to Miss Trefusis in a nearer degree of relationship, I would, decidedly."

Rage and jealousy together flush his face at the insulting speech, but he has more self-control than to gratify Miss Petherick by letting her perceive the effect of her words.

"I am sorry you don't like Miss Trefusis," he says, coolly, and adds, though a spasm of jealous wrath almost chokes his words, "I admire her quite as much as your uncle seems to do."

But having said this, he cannot trust himself to speak another word, and so endures the long minutes—nearly thirty of them—that elapse before Evelyn returns.

But when she does re-enter the box, there is no smile on her face for friend or lover. Her rich color seems more vivid, and there is a strange light in her brilliant eyes. She frowns impatiently, as she throws herself into a chair, and snatches the white folds of her dress from contact with Miss Petherick's heliotrope satin, as that young lady sits eyeing her malignantly.

"Tired, darling?" Lady Althea asks, softly and sweetly, with a very keen glance of her steel-blue eyes.

"Yes, very much," Evelyn says, curtly. "I don't care for this piece in the least—it is quite too absurd!"

"I am sorry you don't like it," Captain Dumaresq says, regretfully, looking wistfully at her. "Perhaps you will like 'Carle' better."

"I can't go to the theatre to-morrow night," Evelyn says, coldly; "auntie and I are going out to dinner."

"Shall you be at home to-morrow about one?" he asks, in a low tone.

"No; we shall be in the Row about one," Evelyn answered, with a slight smile.

"Who are we?" he asks, petulantly. Evelyn raises her dark brows.

"Sir William, Miss Petherick and myself," she says, placidly and coldly.

Captain Dumaresq turns away, breathing some utterance not loud but deep.

In the space of a minute he has execrated, fiercely and voicelessly, the theatre, the drama, the actors, Sir William Petherick, his niece, his wealth, his age, and everything concerning him, and is yet employed in cursing himself, his debts, his expectations, and his relatives, when the curtain goes down on the last scene, and he has the fleeting bliss and misery of taking Evelyn down to the carriage.

Sir William hurries up to the box door a little too late, and appearing evidently forestalled by the foregoing arrangement, offers his escort to Lady Althea with unflattering indifference.

"Evelyn! Evelyn!" Captain Dumaresq says, feverishly, making a brief opportunity for lovers' talk as they stand beside one of the pillars of the portico of the theatre waiting for the carriage, "how did you make me so wretched as you did this evening? Upon my honor, it is too bad of you to treat me so!" he goes on, in half-angry, half-tender remonstrance. "Letting that old fool monopolize you, too!"

"How droll that you and Sir William should think alike, and speak precisely alike only for the difference of an adjective," Evelyn says, demurely. "He said, remonstratingly, 'Letting that young fool monopolize you, too!'"

"Oh! Does he remonstrate with you, then?" Captain Dumaresq asks, white to the lips. "Is that how matters stand, Evelyn?"

"That the poor, dear old man has fallen in love with me, you mean?" Evelyn asks, with the merriest look of surprise. "Didn't you know that before? I thought it was a fact patent to the dullest comprehension."

"It was not patent to mine until to-night," Captain Dumaresq says, shortly and angrily. "I can't thank you for disenchanting me; I thought you were far above all that sort of thing."

"What sort of thing—people falling in love with me?" inquires Evelyn, and the little hand on his arm presses softly and warmly—a loving, tender, reassuring little pressure—and his wrath and jealousy begin to evaporate.

"Nobody could help falling in love with you," he says, adoringly, drawing the creamy, filmy lace mantilla over her dark, rippling hair, making her look like a lovely eastern bride in the lace veiling and swathing of soft, creamy-white tissues, out of which only her beautiful, bright face looks, fair as the fairest flower that blooms.

"My darling, you will let me see you to-morrow some time, won't you?" he pleads; "I have so much to tell you. I think the viscount is going to be a good old boy, and and—that things are going to be squared—and that I shall soon be able to go down to Cornwall—you know what for——"

He breaks off abruptly, the words telling her of his cherished hopes and plans, firstly, because the rest of the party are at his elbow—Lady Althea, bland, serene and dignified, as she is at all times and in all places when the eyes of man or woman are upon her—Sir William Petherick, surly and "crumpy," as an elderly gentleman whose temper is ruffled is apt to appear, and Miss Petherick, simpering and malignant; and the second reason for Captain Dumaresq pausing so suddenly in the outpouring of his feelings is the fact that Evelyn is not heeding him—possibly not hearing him—in her eager scrutiny of the face and figure of a man standing in the shadow of the opposite pillar of the portico, scanning the faces of the people pouring out of the doorway.

He is standing well in the shadow, and he has a dark overcoat on this hot summer night, and a dark silk neck-shawl. One moment he leans eagerly forward, and the gaslight falls on his face and his bright, watchful eyes under his felt hat, and Evelyn recognizes him again, and he sees that she does so, at the same moment that he recognizes his cousin, Richard Dumaresq, standing beside her.

CHAPTER XVI.

He is gone the next moment; Captain Dumaresq might persuade himself that the sight of his cousin's face is an optical illusion, but for his previous whisperings of fear or conscience within him, which tell him he has too much reason to expect his cousin's presence.

It is with a certain grim satisfaction that he sees, when he goes home to his chambers one hour later, the tall, straight military figure standing on the doorstep waiting for him.

"Can I speak to you?" he asks, in a low, sombre tone, as Captain Dumaresq steps lightly out of his hansom, and comes up the steps, feeling for his latchkey, and softly humming the refrain of a song out of the last comic opera.

"Speak to me?" he asks, with a well-assumed accent of haughty surprise; then, with a yielding to haughty courtesy, "Certainly, you can speak to me. Why! Dick! Is it possible?"

Nothing can be heartier or franker than the tone of this last exclamation, as he assumes sudden recognition and holds out his hand, and the two men pass into the house together, and go up to Captain Dumaresq's luxurious rooms, furnished in the latest aesthetic style, and Rayner, the captain's servant, brings out cigars and brandy and soda-water for his master and his master's guest, who are evently on very friendly terms.

And yet, the first words Dick Dumaresq had uttered after his first request were not reassuringly friendly in tone or purport.

"I want to have a few words with you—I want a short explanation," he says, and his voice shakes with suppressed agitation; and Captain Dumaresq smiles to himself scornfully as he precedes his guest upstairs.

"I wonder shall I have much trouble in bringing him to reason, or shall I have to use other measures?" he says, inwardly.

But, as soon as the lamps are turned up, and the room is filled with soft radiance from the shaded globes, and the servant has retired, Captain Dumaresq stretches himself luxuriously in an easy-chair, pours out brandy for his cousin and himself, and then says, in the pleasantest, most confidential tones:

"Now, Dick, old fellow, let's hear all about it; you're not in any trouble, I hope?"

"I shouldn't come to you, if I were," retorts Dick, bitterly. "After that letter of yours, I could believe anything. Do you know I got a forged telegram from my uncle, asking me to go to see him?"

"A forged telegram? What do you mean?" asks Capt. Dumaresq, squarely. "At least, what do you mean, besides trying to pick a quarrel with me?" he adds, in the injured, angrily reproachful tone he has always found efficacious in making Dick repent for any harshness. "I can see you are awfully put out about something, but I do not see what I have to do with it."

"I hope you have not, Richard," his cousin says, sternly. "I have received a telegram, purporting to come from my uncle, asking me to visit him, and be reconciled to him, and I went——"

"Down to Heneage Court? Did you?" Captain Dumaresq asks, eagerly, and amazedly. "Did you see him?"

"Yes, I saw him, I am sorry to say," Dick says, grimly, "and learned from him that the telegram was a cruel hoax, or part of a villainous plot concocted by some one who intends me mischief. Why and wherefore I cannot quite understand at present."

"But what end could a forged telegram answer?" objects Captain Dumaresq, still staring, the picture of amazement. "I can't understand your story, head or tail, and you are speaking with a certain animus in your manner, I can see, against me. I have got nothing to do with telegrams, have I?"

"I hope not," Dick says, gravely, looking at his cousin steadfastly.

"Well, by Jove! if ever I heard!" exclaims Captain Dumaresq, springing up with a sort of fury of remonstrance.

"I say I hope not; from my soul I hope you would not wish or try to wrong me, Richard," Dick says, slowly and solemnly. "We have been like brothers. Heaven forbid, you became my enemy!"

"Very well, then. What do you mean?" his cousin asks, angrily, still in the injured tone of a wrongly-accused person.

WHY IS IT

that chronic skin diseases which have defied all other treatments yield to Zam-Buk?

It is because Zam-Buk is germicidal, and also has such power of penetration that it reaches disease in the underlying tissues and cures from the "root" up. That is the only way a permanent cure can be effected.

Mr. H. C. Buckley of 441 E. Broadway, Portland, Oregon, says: "For chronic skin diseases there is nothing like Zam-Buk. For fifteen years I had eczema, and I tried an endless number of so-called 'eczema cures,' but nothing was capable of curing me permanently until I used Zam-Buk. Ten months' use of Zam-Buk has effected a complete cure."

For ulcers, abscesses, boils, ringworm, blood-poisoning, piles, burns, scalds and cuts, Zam-Buk is equally good. All dealers or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto. 50c. box, 3 for $1.25.

THEATRE AUDIENCES.

A Sermon for Those Who Arrive Late and Depart Early.

It is one of the most hallowed national customs not to go into a theatre until the curtain has risen. If by some stupid blunder we have arrived punctually we smoke a cigarette in the lobby.

So the cunning playwright takes care not to start his story until at least five minutes later. He occupies these five minutes with a colorless scene of some kind just to keep the groundlings amused. In some cases he will begin each act in the same way. It depends on how fashionable his audience is and how thirsty. For a converse reason he must finish his play five minutes before the final curtain falls.

Another of our national customs is to leave the theatre the moment Edwin has embraced Angelina although the author may have reserved a quaint comedy touch or a dramatic surprise for the actual end.

It is no use altering the hour of performance. Begin at midnight if you like, we shall not come until five minutes after. Leave off at 10; we shall go out five minutes before. It is in the blood. The idea that any audience owes any consideration to authors or actors is entirely foreign to us. The very suggestion of it is almost an impertinence.—Louis N. Parker, in New York Times.

Wigg—I hear your friend, the life insurance agent, was held up by a highwayman last night? Did he get anything? Wagg—No. Before he could get the thug's signature to an application blank, the fellow broke away and ran.

"Victorious" Germany

At the moment when the campaign of 1917 is reaching its climax it is well to recall again what its objectives are, since we are presently to be confronted by a German manoeuvre which, assigning false objectives, will seek to establish the idea that the allies have failed. The whole world is pretty fairly familiar now with the present German strategy. It aims at a desperate and final defensive which shall prevent a military decision this year and thus pave the way for a peace by negotiation.

Since the allies took the offensive on July 1, 1916, the allied objective has been steadily to wear down German resistance and German resources by local attacks with limited purposes until such time as Germany should be compelled either to shorten her lines or to hold them so thinly that she would face the same kind of collapse that came to Lee in the Spring of 1865.

It was essential that the Allies should first establish a moral superiority over the German on the battlefield. Thanks to superior equipment and to better training, the German had, during the first year and a half of trench war, fought at an advantage, not always conceded by the troops who faced him, but of infinite value because it was accepted by his own troops; thanks to heavy artillery, superior munitions, better trench weapons, the German had the advantage right up to the moment of the Battle of the Somme. He had also regained the offensive when he began his tremendous but ultimately unsuccessful drive upon Verdun.

Looking backward over 14 months, what have the Allies on the Western front accomplished and what will be the harvest of the present year? The answer is simple. First of all, they have asserted a material superiority; they have more guns, more munitions. The German used to rely upon his heavy artillery but his heavy artillery is now unable to meet the enemy, not shot for shot, but one shot for two, or one shot for three. Despite certain temporary interruptions the Allies have been also able to assert superiority in the air and to interrupt German observation.

Next, they have established a moral superiority, and the measure of this achievement is to be found in certain battles. Thus, since the French and British took the offensive on the Somme on July 1 of last year, there have been fought these considerable engagements: The Somme, the French offensives at Verdun, Arras, Rheims, the contest now going forward about Ypres, and finally the recent offensive attack at Verdun.

At the battle of the Somme the British and the French together took 85,000 prisoners. In their last two offensives in October and December of last year, at Verdun, the French took 17,000 prisoners. At Arras, in April of this year, the British took 80,000 prisoners, and in their fight east and west of Rheims in the same month and in the next the French took 35,000 prisoners. So far the British have captured 16,000 prisoners at Ypres and 2,000 about Lens, and the French bag of prisoners in the recent Verdun attack already passes 9,000. In 14 months, then, in battle the French and British allies have taken more than 195,000 prisoners on the western front and the captures in minor skirmishes swell this total well beyond 200,000.

Aside from the capture of prisoners there are other standards of measurement. More than one thousand guns, heavy and field, have been taken in battle from the Germans, while the total loss of the British in guns during the entire war has been under 100. At Arras alone the British took about 225 guns, many of them heavy. The capture of machine guns and war material, especially at Arras, was enormous.

Now there are yet other evidences. When the Allies began their attack in 1916 the Germans held all the important high ground positions from the Channel to the Argonne. The Anglo-French offensive at the Somme compelled the Germans to relinquish a thousand square miles of France, including the strong and heavily fortified ridge between Arras and Peronne and the high ground west of the Oise about Noyon. The French attacks last year about Verdun retook Douaumont and Vaux, the two forts captured by Germans. The recent attack has retaken Dead Man's Hill and Hill 304 and every position of military importance held by the French before the great great German German assault in February, 1916. In Flanders the British and French have retaken Pilkem ridge the British have recaptured Wytschaete Ridge, the Canadians have taken Vimy Heights and Hill No. 70. North of the Aisne the French have captured the high ground traversed by the Chemin-des-Dames, and east of Rheims they have taken the Moronvilliers Hills, which were perhaps the best of all observation and gun positions along the whole front from the Vosges to the sea.

BABY'S OWN TABLETS ALWAYS IN THE HOME

Mrs. Eugene V[illegible], St. [illegible], Que., writes:—"My baby suffered greatly from constipation, so I began using Baby's Own Tablets. I was surprised with the prompt relief they gave him, and now I always keep them in the house." Once a mother has used Baby's Own Tablets for her little ones she always keeps a supply on hand for the first trial convinces her there is nothing to equal them in keeping her little ones well. How Other Women Save

The announcement that one city wasted practically enough bread to take the season's output of 400,000 acres of wheat has aroused our readers to action. Several women have sent practical suggestions as to the use of all left-over bread.

One eastern woman writes: "In my cooking I've never found anything better to always have on hand than dried bread crumbs and odd pieces of left-over bread. I give you here my recipe for BREAD GRIDDLE CAKES.

1 pint buttermilk.
1-2 pint sweet milk.
1-2 cup bread crumbs.
1-2 cup flour.
1 tablespoon melted butter.
1 teaspoon salt.
1 teaspoon soda.
2 eggs.

Soak the bread crumbs in the buttermilk over night. Beat until smooth, add the melted butter, flour, sweet milk, salt and yolks of the eggs beaten until light. Dissolve soda in about one-quarter cup warm water and beat into the mixture. Beat until well blended and light, then add the stiffly beaten whites of eggs. A little liquid or flour may be added if needed, as the amount will vary a little with different bread crumbs."

BREAD DUMPLINGS FOR DINNER.

One-half cup bread crumbs.
1 1-2 cups flour.
1-2 teaspoon salt.
2 teaspoons butter.
4 teaspoons baking powder.
3-4 cup milk.

Sift baking powder, flour and salt. Work in butter with tips of fingers. Then add crumbs and mix well, adding milk gradually, using a knife to mix with. Toss on a floured board, roll to one-half inch in thickness. Shape with biscuit cutter. Place closely together in greased steamer, put over kettle of boiling water, cover closely and steam twelve minutes. If a little more milk is used this mixture may be dropped by spoonfuls and cooked on top of a stew. In this case some of the liquid must be removed so that the dumplings may rest on the meat and potato and not settle into the liquid. This makes a full meal, and with fruit for dinner a well balanced dinner."

A versatile western woman sent in these attractive entrees with the suggestion that we offer them to our readers as economy dishes. These are highly nutritive dishes and each requires very little besides to make a nourishing meal.

AN ENTREE OF COTTAGE CHEESE ROLLS.

2 cups cottage cheese.
1 cup bread crumbs.
1-2 cup left-over peas or beans.

Mix cottage cheese and crumbs and combine with the peas or beans, which must be first mashed or put through a colander. The liquid from the vegetable may be used to moisten this mixture sufficient to make into individual rolls. Place in a greased tin and bake fifteen minutes in a hot oven. Baste with a tablespoon of beef extract dissolved in a cup of boiling water in which one tablespoon of onion juice and one tablespoon finely chopped parsley has been added.

DINNER LOAF.

1 can veal loaf.
1 cup dried bread crumbs.
1-2 cup chopped green peppers.
1 tablespoon beef extract dissolved in one cup boiling water.
1 cup tomato soup.

Mix altogether, mold in small bread pan and bake thirty-five minutes.

A bride offers this attractive luncheon dish!

LUNCHEON CROUSTADES.

Cut stale bread in one-inch slices and shape with a round cutter. Remove a small portion of centres, leaving [illegible]. Brush over with melted butter and brown in the oven. Fill with creamed flake, tun fish, mounding as much as possible. Sprinkle with buttered crumbs and garnish with strips of whites of hard boiled eggs and yolks forced through a strainer and form petals and stamens of a flower. Reheat in oven, arrange on a hot platter and garnish with sprigs of parsley.—Mrs. Jean Prescott Adams, Director of Domestic Science, Armour & Co., in "The Business of Being a Housewife."

Soap Making.

Soap making was known to the ancient Romans, and [illegible] they obtained their knowledge of the art from some Germanic tribes who had learned it from some of the [illegible] further to the west and north. Pliny mentioned that the Germans used both hard and soft soap, and he indicates that it was a discovery which had been made by the Gauls.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

At the annual gathering of the Trades and Labor Congress in Ottawa last week the delegates discussed the hours of labor, argument being made for six hours to constitute a day's work. But why work at all?

Toronto Star, after advocating conscription very strongly, now deplores the fact that the people are calling the men conscripts. Why the worry, nearly all the armies in the great war are conscripted, and it is no disrespect to call the new Canadian army conscripts.

The evidence in the Flavelle inquiry discloses that in five years, 1913-1917, the profits of the William Davies Company were $5,295,000, and that they increased from $417,083 in 1913 to $1,911,910 in 1917, or more than four times.

Women generally will endeavor to watch against waste in their kitchens, but the food controller should look around for farther opportunities to save the supply of wheat and bacon. The prompt response of the common people to help win the war should be backed up by the officials. There is waste in the high places.

Near Ingersoll last week a little child was burned to death. This is only one of many happenings of the same nature the past year or two. These fatalities are reported as due to the parents leaving their children alone in the houses. These cases are altogether too numerous. The parents are guilty of neglect, and it would have a wholesome affect on those who leave children without proper protection, if an example was made in the next fatality of this nature.

Sir Thomas White announces another war loan about November, in which he again asks all the people to participate. One of the wise acts of the Minister of Finance has been the borrowing of money from the Canadian people at a good rate of interest. Why could not this method of financing be adopted by a municipality? When funds were required it would seem good business for a township or town to borrow from its own citizens, offering a good rate of interest therefor.

Toronto women organized to canvass the city for signatures to the food pledge card. The president of the organization gave out the following instructions to the women canvassers: "Take the name and address of anyone who refuses to sign the cards. We want to know the pro Germans in our midst". That's placing people with a vengeance and it hardly allows room for an expression of an opinion, or even an opportunity for thinking it over. The canvasser says "sign," whether you intend to carry it out or not. How much better it would be to endeavor to get signatures with a sincere purpose to have the pledge carried out and food saved.

A legal notice that canned goods are not to be sold, and signed by the Clerk of the Privy Council, appears in the papers operated by Conservatives, at so much per line. Is this an order from the Food Controller, to help out the friends of his party? When the Food Controller wants to inform the public how to save some food, he sends out typewritten sheets to all the newspapers, soliciting free publicity. If the government can pay its friends for publicity of this nature why not play fair with all newspapers? Whose money is being spent nowadays? Are we not all contributors to the public treasury? Then why flesh of one, and fish of another?

A bone dry state is Arizona. The other day 500 carloads of booze valued at $3,500,000 were dumped in the bay at Sonora. Photographs of the scene and official notification of the action were received by the Consul. The beverages were the accumulations of shipments to Sonora seized by the State since the abolition of the liquor traffic, January 1, 1916, and the stocks on hand which were taken over when the prohibition decree became effective. Every Government warehouse in the State has been emptied of liquor, it is declared, and the information to hand says that so far as the authorities are aware there is not a drop of intoxicants in the State.

At a sale held at Mr. Gammie's in Arran township the other day, some young cattle were offered, and were eagerly bought up, because the farmers have plenty of feed this year. But the chief feature of the sale was the fact that $4,441 was realized, and of this sum all but a few dollars was paid in cash by the farmers who purchased the cattle. Eight years ago there were some large sales held at which less than $100 was paid in. It is satisfactory to know that the farmer has the money these days, and it is a good sign that he sees a profit in paying cash rather than borrowing at 7 per cent.

For the year ending March, 1917 there was used in Canadian breweries and distilleries:

Grain for malting	98,582,300 lbs.
Corn	69,417,487 "
Rye	10,430,817 "
Oats	131,580 "
Wheat	37,783 "
Sugar, Rice, etc.	616,369 "
Molasses	27,416,716 "
Total	206,803,051 "

The food controller's job is a heavy one, especially when the people are asked to save wheat, but the distilleries are allowed to go on using it for whiskey. However, that is no reason why we should not do our part. If you are not, because you live in a small town, or in the country, asked to sign the pledge, just resolve to carry out its objects, and you will be doing your part in the big scheme to help win the war.

Waste Not—Want Not

Food waste in war time is a crime. People in Europe are starving for food. Belgium is devastated and the crusts Canada throws away would be picked out of the dirt and eaten by the starving Belgians, Serbs, Poles and other unfortunates of the war zone.

Canada wastes an enormous amount of good food every year. The Food Controller gives $50,000,000 as a conservative estimate. Expressed in wheat at $2 a bushel, this would be 25,000,000 bushels, whereas we are asked to save but 12,000,000 this year out of normal consumption. Expressed in meat at say 40 cents a pound it would be 125,000,000 pounds, or enough to supply a Canadian army of 500,000 men for 200 days.

The bones thrown into the garbage pails every day contain the essence of hundreds of plates of soup.

The bread thrown there every day is a waste of thousands of loaves.

No bone should leave the kitchen until every scrap of marrow has been boiled out of it; no scrap of bread should ever be thrown away.

The woman who wastes a crust, wastes the war effort of the farmer, the miller, the storekeeper and the transportation and delivery men. This is a time when every man's work is valuable to the country to supplement the invaluable work of our soldiers.

Watch everything. Watch against waste in the kitchen and in the pantry. Watch against waste in the cellar and in the dining-room. As much food is wasted in the eating as in the cooking.

As we have said before, Owen Sound has all the ear-marks of a city. The latest news is that a Labor candidate will likely contest for the Federal House, the workmen of Owen Sound meeting to-day to discuss the matter.

They Shall Not Pass

The Immortal Cry of Canada at the Second Battle of Ypres.

The defence of Ypres following the first ghastly gas attack April 22, 1915, exalts all history. By it our men were transfigured and the undying, imperishable Soul of Canada revealed.

In the name of these Heroes of Ypres, Festubert, Givenchy, Vimy Ridge, Lens, The Somme, Verdun—aye and the Deathless "Old Contemptibles"—we beseech you, Women of Canada, to Dedicate Yourselves and Your Families to War Service by signing the Food Service Pledge.

The sacrifice is not great. We merely want you to substitute other foods for part of the white bread, beef and bacon your family now eat.

> "What follows almost defies description. The effect of these poisonous gases was so virulent as to render the whole of the line held by the French Division practically incapable of any action at all.

> "The left flank of the Canadian Division was thus left dangerously exposed to serious attack in flank, and there appeared to be a prospect of their being overwhelmed and of a successful attempt by the Germans to cut off the British troops occupying the salient to the East.

The Undying Pledge of Canada's Mothers to Her Sons.

When baking use one-third oatmeal, corn, barley or rye flour. Or, order some brown bread from your baker each day.

Substitute for beef and bacon such equally nutritious foods as fish, peas, lentils, potatoes, nuts, bananas, etc.

Third, and this is most important — positively prevent the waste of a single ounce of food in your home.

A Food Service Pledge and Window Card has been or will be delivered to you. The Pledge is your Dedication to War Service—The Window Card is your Emblem of Honour.

Sign the one and display the other.

YES! LIFT A CORN OFF WITHOUT PAIN!

Cincinnati authority tells how to dry up a corn or callus so it lifts off with fingers.

You corn-pestered men and women need suffer no longer. Wear the shoes that nearly killed you before, says this Cincinnati authority, because a few drops of freezone applied directly on a tender, aching corn or callus, stops soreness at once and soon the corn or hardened callus loosens so it can be lifted out, root and all, without pain.

A small bottle of freezone cost very little at any drug store, but will positively take off every hard or soft corn or callus. This should be tried, as it is inexpensive and is said not to irritate the surrounding skin.

If your druggist hasn't any freezone tell him to get a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house. It is fine stuff and acts like a charm every time.

Evangelist Crossley will hold a series of Evangelistic services here beginning the third week in October.

ELSINORE

On Sunday Sept. 16 a memorial service was held in the Presbyterian church, in honour of our soldier boys who have been called from the struggle to everlasting peace.

Dr. Campbell pastor of that church preached from the text "Greater love hath no man than this that a man lay down his life for his friends." In simple earnest words the speaker sought to impress the truth that the cause upheld by our armies is the cause of humanity and therefore the men who have given their lives have died not only for friends and country but for the world. Since so many noble men are dying for the cause of right surely it is the duty of those at home to live for the cause.

The service was a comfort and inspiration to the many relatives and friends of the dear ones who are now at rest "Somewhere in France."

The church was decorated with the flags of the Allies also with white flowers on a bank of ferns.

The choir was assisted by members of the Methodist choir and Mrs. Jas. Hewitson sang an appropriate solo.

Many friends from outside points came to join in honoring the beloved dead.

Miss Johnston of Elsinore suffered a serious injury to her hip in a fall down stairs at her home last week.

In other words Toronto is no place to go unless one has friends or plenty of cash. The raising of the price of rooms on the part of the hotelmen has gone to extremes and should get attention from the government.

THE MAKING OF TOMMY ATKINS

"We are trying to turn out men at arms and—I think we are succeeding." That in a dozen words sums up the attitude of the British army authorities, as enunciated by General Sir Archibald Hunter, G. C. B., a veteran who spent 15 years of his life in Egypt and the Soudan under Kitchener and other leaders first in "making riflemen from mud," as Kipling has it, and then in using the mudbegotten ones and a few—a very few—white soldiers to dam back and finally to overthrow the Mahdi's barbarian hordes, writes the London, Eng., correspondent of the New York Times. Later in Ladysmith, in the belly-pinching of 1899-1900, he was the life and soul of the defense, and now ever since the opening of the great European war he has been in command of the Aldershot training centre.

Now the Aldershot training centre is an area, roughly speaking, some 20 miles square in the loveliest part of Southern England, where Hampshire and Surrey join and in peace time it is a peaceful place enough, with few soldiers to be seen save in and around Aldershot itself, a pleasant town of red brick barracks and shady trees, a kind of Fort Leavenworth raised to the ninth power, which has been ever since just after the Crimmean war, and nursery and training ground of England's armies. Now, however, Aldershot, busy place though it is, is simply the headquarters and nucleus of a tract that is dotted and sown with camps thick as the stars in the sky, and there for the last three years, while the navy, "Britain's sure shield," has stood between this country and invasion and given England a breathing space. General Hunter, quite out of the limelight and quite unknown to the man in the street, has labored day in and day out, week after week, month after month, and now year after year, to fashion and weld and temper the trenchant blade that will ultimately give the deathblow to the Teutonic barbarism and give back peace and freedom to the world.

This time he had better material to start with than the Egyptian fellaheen, and he has succeeded in turning out the most superb infantry ever seen on a modern battlefield, those new armies whose boast it is, and it is no mean one, that they have lived up to the imperishable traditions set by the "first seven divisions" of the original expeditionary force.

IMPORTANT OF BAYONET SPIRIT.

With a skin browned by African suns and triple row of decorations on his tunic, the outward and visible sign of more than 46 year's devoted service, General Hunter looked himself a very perfect man at arms to-day, when he told a party of American newspaper men what he and his subordinates were doing.

"We are trying," he said, "to make every man a master of his weapon. The artillery may pave the way, but for ultimate success we must still rely on the three B's—the bayonet, the bomb and the bullet. We pay special attention to bayonet fighting here, not only for its own sake, but also because in inculcates what may be called the bayonet spirit—the desire to get to close quarters and come to grips with the enemy at all costs. If a man goes into a fight with the belief that in a hand-to-hand fight he can get the better of his antagonist, that is half the battle won already. In wars between civilized peoples when the men get to close quarters, it is not always that this hand-to-hand fight ensues, in fact it is comparatively seldom that they actually cross bayonets. It usually ends with one man putting up his hands. We are trying to ensure that it won't be our men; that's all. We have established a moral superiority over the Hun and we mean to keep it.

"In carrying out training we find games of enormous use to us. Cricketers are our best bombers. Boxing gives the quickness of hand, brain and eye that is so essential in bayonet fighting, and sprinters and hurdlers are very useful people when it comes to a bayonet charge and the attacking infantry has to get over or through barbed wire that has only been partially cut and must jump across into trenches, and I think," concluded the general, "that just as the Canadians have done, your people will find baseball a great asset when it comes to learning bombing."

Aldershot, as well as being a centre for training of large bodies of troops in bulk, is the chief station for the specialized and intensive training of promising officers of all branches of the service, who, having gone through a course in this, that or the other subject, then return to their units anywhere in the British Isles, themselves to act as instructors to men of their battalion, company, squadron or battery as the case may be. Soldiering now in England—and even in France during that period misnamed "rest" when troops come from the trenches only to fall into the hands of the schoolmaster is largely a matter of going to school.

THINGS SOLDIERS MUST LEARN.

Leave is hard to come by and courses are many. There are courses in every imaginable subject from gas drill, which teaches you the proper—and the quickest—way to put on your gas mask, the same being often a matter of life and death, a death that is a slow torment; to bayonet drill, which teaches you the most effective way to perforate the Hun. Here are a few, a very few of them:

First aid, barbed wire entanglements, bombing, trench mortars, range finding, sniping, scouting, night patroling, mining, physical and bayonet training, the use of the sniperscope, an artful combination of rifle and periscope that vexes the heart of old liter Boche; machine gunning, including the use of Vickers, Maxim, and Lewis guns; signaling by Morse and semaphore, by flag, lamp and buzzer; the use of and defense against gas, and proficiency in a fascinating subject known as camouflage, invented, as the name shows, by the sprightly Gallic mind, which concerns itself chiefly with paint and canvas to the end that that which is deadly may look innocent, and that the innocent may look deadly. The complete camoufleur's motto is: "Things are not what they seem," and he goes about making dummy guns which he puts into conspicuous places for Fritz to strafe, and making real guns and "strong points" look as innocent as possible, to the better undoing and confounding of the Boche.

Chief among the courses come those on gas, bombing, and physical and bayonet training, and these were the "stunts"—this Americanism is current now through the entire British army—displayed to-day for the benefit of the London correspondents of the various American papers.

THE GAS COURSE.

The gas course is naturally divided into two parts, (a), how to gas your enemy, which is the special function of the engineer, and (b) how to protect yourself from being gassed, which is one matter that vitally concerns every one, not only in the line, but for about 12,000 yards behind it, for the gas attacks can be delivered not only with the gas cloud expelled from cylinders, but with gas shells and lachrymatory shells at any hour of the twenty-four.

A gas attack by a cloud is a comparatively simple matter, but a sufficiently ticklish one to try anybody's nerve. It involves bringing up into the front line of trenches a supply of gas cylinders, which weigh about 120 pounds and take two men to carry them, or more if the mud is bad. Then these cylinders must be disposed ready for action and concealed, for one of them smitten by a hostile shell, would instantly transform your trench into a reeking death hole.

For defense against gas, the British soldier is better equipped than any other combatant in Europe. He carries (1) that is known as the box respirator, a clever arrangement of goggles, mask tubes and valves, whereby the air is purified by passing through certain substances before T. Atkins breathes it in, precisely as the air is purified before it is deemed fit for the august lungs of the legislators by being passed through filter beds of cotton wool. (2) In addition to this, he carries a "P. H. helmet," a vast cowl impregnated with phenol-hexafair imitation of a familiar of the Spanish Inquisition, and (3) for protection against lachrymatory gas, or "weepers," as Thomas calls them, of the "tear-shells, a pair of close-fitting goggles. The drill in connection with these safety appliances consists of putting them on at a perfectly astounding speed.

CURING SKIN TROUBLES

So many people, both men and women, suffer from skin troubles, such as eczema, blotches, pimples and irritation that a word of advice is necessary. It is a great mistake for such sufferers and those with bad complexions to smear themselves with greasy ointments. Often they could not do anything worse, for the grease clogs the pores of the troubled skin and their condition actually becomes worse.

When there are pimples or eruptions, or an irritating or itching rash, a soothing boracic solution may help to allay the irritation, but of course that does not cure the trouble. Skin complaints come from an impure condition of the blood and will persist until the blood is thoroughly purified. It is well known that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have effected the best results in many forms of skin disorders and blemishes. This is due to the fact that these pills make new rich blood, and that this new blood attacks the impurities that give rise to skin troubles and banishes them; so that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure skin disorders from within the system—the only sure way.

It should be added that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have a beneficial effect upon the general health. They increase the appetite and energy and cure diseases that arise from impure blood.

You can get these pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

FEEDING THE BOY.

Give Every Healthy Youngster Diet His System Craves.

The growing boy—the active, healthy, normal boy—is a better judge of his diet than mother or father or doctor. He needs every kind of food, plenty of it, and his system will naturally crave for just those foods that are best for him.

Such, in substance, is the theme of an article in the National Food Magazine by Dr. H. E. Barnard.

There are two kinds of food—proteins, with which the body is built up, and the growing boy needs as much of these as the full-grown man, often more; carbohydrates, which are the fats and sugars and starches that supply heat and energy.

The boy's protein food need not all be meat. Dr. Barnard says "it is better that no small part of this nitrogenous food come from milk and eggs, cheese, beans and peas. If he has plenty of these rich and relatively cheap foods he will not crave meat so inordinately as some growing boys do," Dr. Barnard continues.

"The boy needs a large quantity of carbohydrates. That is why his demand for bread and butter is limited only by the supply at hand, and when he uses almost as much butter as bread, do not stint him. By the pound butter is expensive, but it is pure, wholesome food, and he can use it readily. It will not make him ill; quite the contrary.

"And do not be afraid of sugar and sweet foods. Sugar is a true concentrated food. Give him candy for dessert. He craves it and his craving is natural, not abnormal.

"The boy's instincts will lead him to choose the all around diet he needs."

HOW JAPS COOK RICE.

The quantity of water varies according to the qualities of rice, but five parts of water to four of rice, or six parts to five, by volume, will be common proportion.

Simply boil the water and then pour the rice, previously washed, into this boiling water, at the same time increasing the flame. The pan cover must fit the pan edge as tightly as possible and also must be a heavy one, enough to withstand the high steam pressure in the pan, and if it is not heavy enough, put some weights on it. Keep the fire strong. In three or four minutes the steam pushes out of the pan; but let the fire be strong for three or four minutes more, and then, as quickly as possible, withdraw the blazing fire (in case of wood fuel) or make the fire very mild (in case of coal) and let the pan stand on little under fire or very mild flame for 20 or 30 minutes. Then remove the pan from the furnace and let it stand fourteen minutes more. This is all the process.

Rice thus cooked is very delicious to taste and may be eaten by itself without any milk or sugar.

GREAT LAKES LEGEND.

Stories of Niagara Falls and of Leelinau, the Fairy Girl.

In old, old times, on the highest peak of a great mountain, there dwelt a hunter and his five sparkling daughters. Their lodge was of bright betula bark, and on clear days they could see the distant ocean flashing like a silver band.

"Come out! Come out!" cried the younger daughter, the little Er. "Come Su! Come Hu! Come Mi! Come Cla! (The names stand in order for Erie, Superior, Huron, Michigan and St. Clair). Let us away to the sea, where the foaming breakers roar!" So they left their lodge, and leaped and sang with happy hearts. Their robes were of blue and chrysolite green, and floated on the breeze. Their moccasins were of frozen water drops, and their wings of painted wind. And they scampered and romped across the plain or floated beneath the sky, or rushed past valley and hill and field, singing and shouting with glee.

At last they came to a precipice of jagged rocks and moss. "Alas!" cried Er, "what a dreadful leap! But we have come so far that we must go on, or our father will laugh at us! So come Su! Come Hu! Come Mi! Come Cla! and follow me!"

So over the steep they sprang, and floated down on their painted wings. They leaped and they sang like happy-hearted birds. Then the little Er cried, "Let us up and down the steep again!" And up and down the five maids skipped and laughed at the sport and foam and called it Niagara Falls.

And to-day, through the rainbow mist, you may see their robes of blue and chrysolite green, and their painted wings and their twinkling feet, as the five play in the waterfall.

Once on the shore of Lake Superior there dwelt a lovely Indian girl. She was tiny and slender, with soft dark eyes and little feet. And whenever the moon rose faint and white while the sun was setting, she danced in a pine grove by the shore. When she danced thus, her mother called, "Come back to the lodge, Leelinau, for the silver moon is rising. Soon the Little People, the Fairies, will come out to play among the trees, and they carry away dancing maidens." So Leelinau returned sorrowfully to the lodge, for she longed to see the Fairies.

Summer after summer, on moonlit nights the Little People joined hands and danced among the pines, and their sweet voices were heard by Leelinau sitting in the lodge. And when the Indians were sleeping, the mischievous Fairies came creeping in, and Leelinau, waking, heard their low laughter in the dark. They rustled about, and hid the fisherman's paddle, and plucked the feathers from the headdress of the hunter, and carried away nuts and fruit. And in the morning Leelinau saw their tiny footprints in the sand-dunes by the lake. And so it happened summer after summer.

When the cold, cold winter nights came, the mother sat by the fire and told tales of Fairyland: how deep under the ground all was warm and the flowers bloomed, and the Fairy birds sang, and the Little People feasted and rejoiced. And Leelinau's heart filled with longing to be in Fairyland. And so it happened winter after winter.

Now, on a summer day, a brave came to woo Leelinau. Her mother dressed her for the marriage. She bound her garments on her, and let her out to the wedding feast. And the braves and squaws and the youths and maidens of the Chippewa, for miles around, came to the feast. But Leelinau sighed and wept, and begged that she might go alone to the pine grove before she became a bride. Her mother said, "Yes," so at evening time Leelinau decked her hair with flowers, and filled her arms with tassels of the pine trees. Then she hastened to the grove.

The darkness fell and Leelinau did not return. The moon arose and shed its white beams on the lake, but the maiden did not come. The bridegroom and guests went to search for her. They wandered through the grove, and they sought up and down the shore, but in vain! Leelinau was gone, and had left forever the upper world.

And no one had seen her go, except one poor fisher lad who was paddling his canoe near the land. He had watched her wander through the grove, and dancing with a bright Fairy Chief whose green plumes nodded high above his head. And then together they had vanished from his sight. And Leelinau the Fairy Girl was never seen again on the shore of Lake Superior.—New York "Evening Post".

RESPECT PROMISES.

Therefore Do Not Make Any Unless You Can Keep Them.

Keep your promises, so don't make any you cannot fill.

Don't make any in conflict with agreements.

Neglecting the exact terms of a definite promise is after a very serious thing.

The keeping of promises in business transactions is the "sheet anchor" in the establishing of credit among one's business associates.

The world of business places great value on promises.

Not only in all business transactions but in everyday life, the keeping of promises should be looked after with care.

Whatever you do, keep your word, for the man who breaks his promises even in little things is sure to break them in the more important ones.

It is a good plan when making a promise as to appointments to jot down in a memorandum book the man's name, so that no mistakes can be made.

It is a question of obligation that is not cancelled until it is paid.

The man whose promise or word can be relied upon is the one whose influence is far-reaching in any community or in any business.

Keep your promises, so don't make any you can't fill.—New York Mail.

ZEPPELIN AIR CRAFT.

Aluminum Girders and Hoops Line These Monster Balloons.

The technical details in the construction of Zeppelin aircraft are explained in a journal called the Aeroplane. The visible exterior part of the Zeppelin is merely the cloth or fabric covering of the framework, which consists of sixteen girders made of very thin aluminum. The girders run from end to end of the ship, parallel for most of their length and turning inward to meet one another at nose and tail. The cylindrical body of the Zeppelin may therefore be said to have sixteen sides on account of the sixteen girders.

To keep these longitudinal girders, or "stringers," in position there are thwartship girders, which run like hoops around the ship and act like the ribs of a boat. There are generally about 18 hoop girders, spaced an equal distance, one from another, and they are braced across and across inside each hoop to the next by wire bracing, so that they cut up the whole skeleton into a succession of compartments, each of which—except the end compartments—has flat ends and sixteen sides.

In each of these compartments is a gas bag standing on its edge. The idea is that if one gas bag springs a leak or is punctured by a projectile only that one bag collapses, and the weighting of the ship is so arranged that even if four or five gas bags are entirely deflated those that remain will float the ship after all ballast, ammunition and other non-essentials have been thrown overboard.—London Standard.

Even the people who take things as they come don't always keep them.

PAPER YOUR FLOOR.

Walls No Longer Enjoy a Monopoly of the Papering Idea.

Three sheets of strong, brown paper, pasted together, with a top covering of ordinary wallpaper, make an excellent, inexpensive, sanitary substitute for linoleum.

After cleaning the floor, a sheet of good, strong brown paper is pasted down and allowed to dry. Then a second sheet is laid and allowed to dry thoroughly before laying a third sheet.

If a pattern floor covering is desired, ordinary wallpaper serves the purpose admirably. It is pasted to the top sheets of brown paper already laid. The whole, being thoroughly dry, a coat of sizing is applied and left to set, after which a coat of good varnish completes the process. This floor covering has all the advantages of real linoleum and may be washed and polished in the usual way.

SKIRTS.

College Lecturer Says Short Ones Cause Big Food Bills.

Philadelphia, Pa., Feb. 13.—"Short skirts and silk stockings make a girl eat so much that she becomes bad tempered."

"An inch from the skirt equals a pound of beefsteak inside."

"High heeled shoes make a girl's ankles wabbly."

"Two-thirds of the girls don't know how to dress for the street."

"Highly colored dresses are very dangerous and make a girl irritable."

"A calico dress is better than imitation silk."

"Woman's first duty is to make herself as beautiful as she can."

These are a few gems from the law of clothes laid down by Miss Jane Newcomb, a state college extension lecturer, in a talk to a group of women at the Friends' Central school.

Miss Newcomb gave first the warning that the less a girl wears the more she must eat in order to keep warm. In the day of short skirts and high flying coats Miss Newcomb has brought her research work into the "Folly of Fashions" to the conclusion that to lengthen the skirt is to shorten the grocer's bill.

"The girl with money can get enough food to keep her warm when she undresses for the street," Miss Newcomb went on, "but the working girl who spends all she earns on clothes to imitate the heiress has so little left for food that she becomes weakened and an easy victim for tuberculosis."

PRESTER JOHN.

Monarch of Fabulous Wealth and Power Remains a Myth.

The general opinion about Prester John cannot perhaps be better summed up than in the cataloguing phrase "a fabulous medieval Christian monarch of Asia." There can be little question to-day as to his fabulous character; but the persistence of the legend about him is exceeded in remarkableness only by the astonishing number of its variants. It is hard to believe that the detailed history of Prester John, who occupied such a prominent place in the thought of Europe for nearly three centuries, ruling over those vast tracts of country now once again in dispute, has not some foundation in fact. When it comes, however, to trying to determine just what the facts were, the task is found to be one well nigh impossible.

Whoever he really was, however, his history partakes of the nature of a series of tableaux. [illegible] wonderful stage management [illegible] after does not appear at the beginning, on the stage. He is traced along the streets of mediaeval Rome, a mysterious person. [illegible] the Indians," moves rapidly across the stage, as it were, in the early years of the twelfth century, and [illegible] at Rome [illegible] of the wonders that had been performed at the shrine of St. Thomas in India. Then, after much further talk of the great Christian kingdom in the East, Prester John makes his appearance. He is "a king and a priest," [illegible] the "extreme Orient" beyond Persia and Armenia, a Christian, albeit a Nestorian, who had set out from his distant kingdom to fight for the church at Jerusalem, and was prevented from achieving his purpose only by lack of transport to carry his army across the Tigris."

Hardly had the excitement occasioned by his story, which is related in detail in the chronicle of Otto, bishop of Freisingen, subsided, when all of Christendom was thrilled with the news that the Emperor Manuel had received a long letter from the great monarch of the East. It was signed "Presbyter Joannes," and the writer, who described himself as the greatest king under heaven, declared that seventy-two other kings, reigning over as many kingdoms, were his tributaries, and that, within his vast dominions, were to be found all the wonders that men had ever dreamed of, all fabulous beasts and all the fabulous races which had ever been made the subject of story. In his kingdom were to be seen the ruins of the Tower of Babel, the Fountain of Youth, the Sea of Sand and the Stream of Precious Stones. When the king went to war, thirteen great crosses of gold were carried in front of him; whilst in his kingdom there was "no poor, no no thief or robber, no flatterer or miser, no dissensions, no lies, and no vices." Even when all this has been said, the half has not been told. For was he not waited on by seven kings at a time; sixty dukes, and 365 counts? Did not twelve archbishops sit at his right hand and twenty bishops at his left? And yet this so great a king remained only a presbyter. If it were asked why, it would be answered because of his humility, and also because there was no title left under heaven great enough to comprehend his greatness. So popular was this letter that many copies were made, of which no fewer than forty-six are still extant.

The legend was so firmly established, and although nobody ever saw the great king, or really visited his kingdom, travellers were forever seeking to identify him with this or that one amongst the potentates whose shadowy forms held sway over the great unknown vastness of the East. Thus, about the year 1221, when Jenghis Khan began his march west, the rumors flew through every city of Europe that some great potentate was attacking the dreaded Moslem powers in the rear, Jenghis was identified with the son, or grandson of Prester John. Then there were the discoveries of Marco Polo, who identified him with Une Khan, the Prince of Kerait, or again with the rulers over the Plain of Kuku-Khotan, some 300 miles west of Pekin.

By the close of the fourteenth century, the legend, as far as Asia was concerned, had faded out; but it was a persistent legend, and when Asia had obviously no further use for it, it reappeared in Africa. And here the probabilities of a foundation in fact, namely, in the person of one of the kings of Abyssinia, are much more in evidence. Indeed, by the fifteenth century Prester John had quite definitely found his seat in Abyssinia, so that, when John II. of Portugal was prosecuting inquiries as to access to India, one of his first cares was to seek to open communication with "Prester John of the Indies," who was understood to be a Christian Monarch in Africa. It is curious, however, that right to the end, for shortly after John II.'s time the legend began to lose its hold on popular though, Prester John remained a really mythical character. Everybody had heard about him; but nobody had ever seen him.—Christian Monitor.

Spanish Irishmen.

A recent writer draws attention to the connection which has long existed between Ireland and Spain. In the days of the "Wild Geese," when Irishmen were carving out futures for themselves as soldiers of fortune in many lands, they went in large numbers to Spain. Then again large numbers of Irish men and women, many of them belonging to well-known families, emigranted to Spain in the early days of the nineteenth century. All these emigrants were adopted by the country, and they adopted it wholeheartedly—so whole-heartedly, indeed, that as the writer already referred to pointed out, hardly any of their present representatives speak English at any rate, as "a native tongue," and they have lost all touch with Irish life. They have retained their names, however, unaltered, and in the Spanish army list are to be found many such names as O'Connor, O'Neil, O'Donnell, Shaw, and so on.—Christian Science

Father of the American Navy.

A native born Irishman that the members of his race are particularly proud of is Commodore John Barry the "Father of the American Navy." He was born in Wexford, Ireland, in 1745. His father put him on a merchant ship before he was twelve years old, and at fourteen he was employed on a ship sailing from Philadelphia. He was a master of ships before he was twenty-one years old. When the Revolution began Barry was employed by Congress to fit for sea the first fleet which sailed from Philadelphia. [illegible] commanded the Lexington, which captured the first British war vessel taken by a regular cruiser. Blockaded by a superior British fleet in the Delaware, he landed with his sailors and marines and joined Washington's army.—Detroit Free Press.

CANADIANS IN HOT SKIRMISH

Foe Took Outpost Work, but Was Driven Out.

Is Trying to Terrorize Coal Miners.

(By Stewart Lyon, Canadian press correspondent with the Canadian Forces.)

Canadian Army Headquarters in France, Cable.——Sharp outpost actions occurred west of Lens yesterday morning, and again this morning, in which the enemy were the aggressors. In the first affair picked German troops raided our outpost line and succeeded in cutting off one of the garrison. He tried to hide in a shell-hole, but was discovered and captured. Shortly afterwards the score was evened by one of our patrols that caught a member of a raiding party who had missed his way.

The objective of this morning's skirmish was a certain ruined house in the western part of Lens occupied by us as an outpost. Early last night a strong party of Germans attacked the house, but were driven off. They returned to the attack a second time in stronger force and captured the house. The Canadians who had held it at once organized a counter-attack, driving out the Germans.

Artillery activity has been greater to-day, aided by brilliant sunshine, than for several days. The tendency of the enemy, already noted, to devote more attention to shelling our back areas with long-range, high-velocity guns increases, as does his use of gas shells in sections where noncombatants live. The object apparently is to terrorize mine-workers and their families and make more difficult the work of raising coal.

A quiet day on the front enabled me to visit, in company with a Canadian artillery officer who took part in the battle of St. Julien, in April, 1915, the scene of that splendid victory, when our men saved the situation and barred the road to Calais. Standing on the bank of the Yser Canal and looking north-easterly up the slopes of Pilkem ridge, there is, I was assured, little change in the landscape. The ruins of farmhouses in the foreground which were set on fire during the battle of St. Julien, have been smashed into heaps of rubbish; but the shelter trenches on the upward slope from the canal are still plainly visible. The enemy has been driven over the ridge and beyond the Steenbeke; but although there is no longer an Ypres salient and the high land, both north and south of the city, is now firmly held by us, the enemy still answers gun with gun. A duel between some German heavies and our own was in progress at the time of our visit. It is beyond a doubt that in no part of the western front, not even at Verdun itself, has there been so prolonged and steady a gunfire maintained during the past three years, as around Ypres. This tragic city of the dead looked hideous, but it is doubtless true that in the moonlight, when the shadows of pinnacles and mounds of crumbling stone that mark the site of the Cloth Hall, one of the chief architectural glories of the Middle Ages, fall upon Grand Place, Ypres has a beauty that not all the malevolence of the foe can destroy.

AIR MECHANICS' NIGHT IS BUSY

Then They Overhaul the Fliers' War Planes.

Have Big Responsibility Upon Them.

Behind the British lines in France, Cable — (Correspondence of the Associated Press)—Night, as well as day, is full of work and bustle at the army aerodrome. Night flights are not frequent, but the night is the time when the mechanics are busiest, putting everything right for whatever to-morrow may bring forth.

Long after the sun has sunk beneath the tops of the hangars and the trees have changed from green to black, the hard-worked airplanes drift homeward, crossing the evening sky like black specks on a purple cloth and landing with a deep droning on the clipped grass, lame and weary from a long afternoon's work over the lines.

The day's work is finished; reports are handed in, and the pilots saunter down to their mess-tent among the trees. The mechanics appear, wheel the machines into their respective hangars, and the night's work is begun.

It is seventeen miles to the shell-holes of No Man's Land, and all the horrors of war. The long white road, thick with the dust of transport, is silent. The first aerodrome is in darkness but the hangars, looming black against the evening sky, are bright within. There is much to be done. Miles of wires must be overhauled; many must be replaced or tautened. The enemy anti-aircraft artillery has been active and some of the planes bear witness of its work. The canvas wings of one machine are riddled and need long and patient attention before it will be fit for service again. On another, the flying struts must be renewed. On another, the wings are out of shape, the result of straining manoeuvres in aerobatic fighting.

The whole means a hard seven hours of work for the entire staff of mechanics. They settle down to it as a matter of routine. Every time a machine comes back from the lines it has to be overhauled, perhaps dismantled. New gadgets must be fitted, the engine repaired and cleaned. Airplanes are after all very delicate pieces of mechanism and need continual attention. Without it they are useless, even dangerous. The accuracy of hundreds of measurements, the trustworthiness of hundreds of parts, are essential to good flying and reliability, and just as much depends on these factors as on the skill of the pilot.

The airplane mechanic doesn't share the dangers of the field or the hardships of the infantryman or artilleryman, but he has endless work, and a very heavy responsibility. When there is heavy air fighting he must frequently work all day and all night, and woe betide the pilot if he should skimp any of his work. Upon his shoulders rests the strength of the squadron and its efficiency.

The officer in charge of the aerodrome during the night hours is known as the "Orderly Officer." Warmly clad, to keep out the chills of the night, he walks around the busy sheds and hangars, now and then offering a word of advice or encouragement, but always with an ear for the telephone bell, for at any moment orders may come through for night bombing or the warding off of some hostile air-craft. Such orders are very rare, but everything is ready for them when they come.

ONTARIO CROP OUTLOOK GOOD

As Sent in by District Representatives.

Threshing Active—Most of Grain is Plump.

Toronto, Report.—Following is a summary of weekly crop reports made by district representatives to the Ontario Department of Agriculture:

With the exception of a touch of early frost on the night of the 10th, the weather during the week was favorable to agriculture. Grain which had to lie out in the shock owing to the rush of harvest has been garnered, fall plowing has been rushed, and considered fall wheat and rye has been sown, the land being in much better condition than it was a month ago. With a few warm rains it is expected that both the wheat and rye now being sown will get a sufficiently early start for entering the winter with a fair amount of top.

Threshing is active, and most of the grain is turning out plump. Oats are especially showing extra weight to the measure bushel.

Some corn was caught by the frost but most of the injury has been very slight. A number of farmers have already filled their silos which will enable those running corn cutters to accommodate more farmers.

Beans have suffered from the frost, and will not be as large a crop as was looked for earlier in the season.

Potatoes are reported to be doing well, although in some sections the tops got nipped by the frost.

All classes of roots are making excellent growth, and are much ahead in general condition compared with last year.

The second growth of clover has done fairly, but it is not as heavy as was expected a few weeks ago.

CEREMONIAL IS SYMBOLIC ONE

Impressive Parade Behind British Lines.

Shows Why the Army is Confident Now.

London Cable.——Reuter's correspondent at British Army Headquarters in France telegraphs:

We have recently carried out sundry raids and minor attacks with a satisfactory measure of success. It is worthy of note that the Germans have been fighting with more determination than usual on these occasions.

I was present yesterday afternoon at a ceremonial parade on a large scale, in a back area, when a distinguished French general bestowed sundry decorations on British officers and men, and I confess I was deeply impressed with the splendidly-inspiring bearing of our troops. Several battalions which had borne the full brunt of the recent battles in Flanders swung past the saluting base to their respective regimental marches, and there was an elation and consciousness of triumph in their whole demeanor which left one in no doubt as to how the British army feels about it all.

Then followed a band competition, in which the drums and fifes and pipers and the full bands of various divisions and regiments participated. It was a brave spectacle of proud strutting and twirling of tenor drumsticks, with the fanfare of silver-toned bugles and the pulse-quickening skirl of tartan-wrapped pipes. The esprit of the khaki-clad figures, who clapped and cheered as one after another of the bands marched on to the parade grounds, was breathed in the stirring strains and borne in the defiant strides of the tiger-skinned drummers, and in the challenging precision of the fifes.

And all the while I watched and hearkened I found my fancy wandering back to those early dark days in this same part of the country, when our men trudged through mud and rain to hold their own against overwhelming odds, with no note of music to help them on their way save what their own unquenchable spirits chanted in tired cadences. The comparison was topical, for it was symbolic of the difference between then and now.

An introduction is a conventional thing, but it is still possible to impart a little originality into the formula. "This is grandpa!" said the six-year-old proudly, as he introduced his friend. "I pray for him every day," he added, impressively.—Manchester Guardian.

GOOD FOOD FOR POULTRY, HOGS

Buckwheat Screenings Showed Fine Results

In Tests by Government Experts.

A car of this feed was purchased by the Poultry Division, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, through the Superintendent of the Government Terminal Elevators, Fort William. The car contained twenty tons, costing $20 F. O. B. Fort William and $35 per ton F. O. B. Ottawa—$1.75 per cwt. Of this, fifteen tons were whole and five tons ground fine.

On receipt, it was fed to all classes of poultry, old and young, the grain in hoppers and the mash in hoppers or in moist mash. The birds, after eating a corn and wheat diet did not take to the whole screenings for several feeds, but the mash was readily taken from the start. When the grain was fed in large quantities, the wheat was picked out, and a little care had to be taken in order to have them eat everything up clean. Now after three weeks' feeding, everything is eaten up except a few oat hulls.

A test was made on 200 pullets from 2 to 4 months of age. In twenty days they ate 516 pounds of grain and 204.5 lbs. of mash. The total gain was 152.6 lbs. that is, it took 4.7 lbs. of the feed to make one lb. of gain, at a cost of 8.2 cents.

Dr. Shutt, Dominion Chemist, has submitted an analysis of this product from which we quote the following information: "This product, it will be seen, consists approximately 50 per cent. wheat, 40 per cent. wild buckwheat, 2.5 per cent. light oats, 1 per cent. flax seed, one-half of 1 per cent. weed seeds, 5.7 per cent. chaff, hulls, etc. The chemical analysis of the ground mash is: Water, 14.07; protein, 11.84; fat, 2.07; carbohydrates, 64.53; fibre, 5.36; ash, 2.13—100.00.

S. S. Archibald, Dominion Animal Husbandman, reports that buckwheat screenings as a feed for swine of all ages is very valuable. For finishing and young growing hogs well-ground buckwheat screenings will produce as great gains as will a mixture of wheat shorts three parts, fine ground corn three parts, linseed oil meal one part. This latter mixture at present price is worth fifty-four dollars per ton on the eastern markets.

The above prices were for a car lot, and prices for smaller quantities would likely be considerably higher. It is suggested that a number of poultry or swine breeders in a locality club together to order a car. It is a good purchase at a figure near the above price.

RUSSIAN UNREST.

Sections Still Fighting—The Cossack Trouble.

Petrograd Cable.——In view of the resolution of the Maximalists which was voted by a plenary session of the Petrograd Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's delegates, demanding that power be assumed by the council, the whole bureau of the council has resigned. Among those who handed in their resignations were President Tchezze, vice-presidents Anniemoff and Getz, and Mm. Skobeleff, Tseretelli and Tchernoff.

It was expected that the Cossack incident shortly will be closed in a satisfactory manner, says the Russian official news agency. Cossack officers have submitted to the provincial Government a petition requesting that the order for the arrest of General Kaledines, the Cossack leader, be countermanded, alleging that the affair is entirely the work of political agents. A delegation of loyalists from Moscow has now gone to the Cossack headquarters to make an investigation on the spot.

The provincial Government has abolished the post of military governor of Petrograd, and re-established the office of commander of the troops of the Petrograd district. Colonel Polkovnikoff has been appointed commander, with powers to settle questions relating to the food supply and transport.

GOOD REPORTS ABOUT RUSSIA

U. S. Has Assurances of Her Integrity.

Will Carry On War With All Her Resources.

Washington Report.—Hopes that the military and political pendulums are about to swing the right way again in Russia, to the advantage of those who are allied against Germany in the present war, were revived late this afternoon when it became known that Boris Bakhmetieff, the Russian Ambassador, had received from Petrograd assurances of the determination and ability of the Russian Government to win.

On the basis of the confidential instructions, Ambassador Bakhmetieff will to-morrow convey to Secretary of State Lansing oral assurances from the Petrograd Government voicing its firm and quiet determination to carry forward the war with all of Russia's resources. The verbal communication to be transmitted to the Secretary of State by the Ambassador will declare the Provisional Government's ability to overcome all obstacles, both internal and external, with the adoption of the strong measures that have been planned or already begun.

The assurances conveyed to Ambassador Bakhmetieff from Petrograd cover the situation as it stands after the suppression of the Korniloff movement, and express the supreme confidence of the Kerensky Government that it will be able to meet every difficulty. Among these obstacles are the activities and influence of the Bolsheviki in the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Deputies and the weakened discipline in the army, which is being steadily overcome by the firm hand with which General Alexieff has taken hold of the military situation in succession to General Korniloff.

According to the latest confidential advices reaching the Russian Embassy the military situation on all Russian fronts has improved. On Monday the Embassy was notified that the Russian forces on the Riga front, which had retreated out of a difficult position when the Germans captured Riga, had within the past week advanced seven miles over a wide front toward the city. A despatch to the Embassy this morning said that the Russians had strongly entrenched themselves in their new positions and were not only showing a splendid fighting spirit and fine morale, but were equal to any offensive the Germans might attempt.

A supplementary message received by the Embassy this afternoon stated that the Russian army had resumed the offensive on the Riga front and had forced the Germans to evacuate several villages, which the Teutons destroyed as they fled. The resumption of the initiative by the Russian forces is interpreted as evidence that General Alexieff is making headway in his handling of the army, and as a demonstration of the army's support of the Kerensky Government. It is also regarded as visible proof of the assurances received by Ambassador Bakhmetieff that the Russian Government and people are determined to wage the most effective warfare possible under existing conditions and more vigorous fighting later, when the Russian army has been reorganized into a more efficient and better disciplined fighting machine.

The despatches received by the Russian Embassy to-day indicated that the Germans had "shot their bolt" in the Riga campaign, and are not strong enough in men, guns and gas bombs to press the advantage of their capture of that point.

PAN-GERMANS ARE FROTHING

Over Rumors of Abandonment of Belgium.

Reply to Pope Does Not Mention Matter.

Berlin Cable.—via London Cable.—While the text of the German reply to Pope Benedict's peace proposals will not be announced before Saturday, the Berlin press and parliamentary circles concur in the prediction that the message will not contain specific declarations concerning Belgium.

The fate of that country just now is calling forth excessive pan-German frothing, due to recurrent rumors that the Government had definitely decided to abandon all intentions of permanent control in the occupied Belgian territory.

While these reports are said to have been in the "alleged trial balloon," sent out by England, they equally carry earmarks of an obvious artificial inspiration for the purpose of supporting the annexationists' campaign.

Official quarters to-day were absolutely non-communicative on the subject of the German answer, outside of admitting that it will be delivered to the Papal delegate at Munich to-morrow. The impression prevailing in well-informed quarters is that the note will leave the subject of Belgium in abeyance. This is considered wholly in keeping with the Pope's present effort at mediation, which, it is pointed out, do not call for the specific peace terms of any of the belligerents.

German attitude on this point might exactly be expressed this way: Germany considers Belgium too valuable a pawn to be exposed to jeopardy through an ill-timed or hasty move.

On the subject of international arbitration the German note, it is believed, will express approval of the suggestion. However, in view of the previous failure of such an international tribunal, it is assumed the Pope will come forward with proposals incorporating a scheme calculated [illegible] only [illegible] an institution of international arbitration.

COMMERCE AND WAR.

U. S. Business Considers How to Aid.

Atlantic City, N. J. Report.—How American business can help promote the development of transportation on land and sea, as a primary factor in winning the war, and the functions of commercial organizations in war, were the chief topics for discussion at today's sessions of the war convention of the Chambers of Commerce of the United States.

Under these two general heads the discussion covered a wide field, the speakers including many of the nation's leaders in business and in industry.

At the night session Lord Northcliffe, chairman of the British war mission, and Herbert C. Hoover were on the programme for addresses.

Green uniforms have replaced white ones among British hospital surgeons and British hospitals are also being lined in green instead of white because this color is easier upon the eyes of patients.

"First I was taken in to dinner by that California gentleman you introduced to me. He was quite gallant, and

CONFIDENCE IN FRENCH CABINET

New Ministry Wins Vote of 378 to 1.

Painleve and Ribot Talk On Ally Affairs.

Paris, Cable.——Premier Painleve replying to-day in the Chamber of Deputies to interpellations by Deputy Frederic Brunet, who asked the Government to associate itself with President Wilson's refusal to treat with the German people as long as they were submissive to the military caste, and advocating an institution or society of nations, said that he had made every effort to preserve collaboration with the Socialists.

"I failed, and I regret it," the Premier said.

After paying a tribute to Albert Thomas' services, the Premier said that absence of Socialist Ministers would make no change in his policy. He declared his determination to proceed energetically against all intrigues and certain foreign agents, but added that he did not intend to allow these scandals too much publicity in the press, because they were picked up abroad and weakened the country's morale. This part of the Premier's speech was interrupted, especially by the Left, as were his declarations that the censorship was necessary and ought to be respected. The Government, he said, hoped to remain in agreement with the press in appealing to the newspapers to maintain their own discipline.

The Chamber applauded the Premier's allusions to the society of nations and President Wilson's message as principles to which France fully adhered, thereby showing her abnegation and moral grandeur.

Alexandre Ribot, Minister of Foreign Affairs, told the Chamber that all documents concerning France's agreements with the Allies were ready, and could be published to-morrow, but that the Entente Allies must be consulted, saying: "The nearer we reached the end of the war the closer must be our unity with them."

M. Ribot added that France could not reply to Pope Benedict's note without an agreement with her Allies, "but our war aims are known, and we are ready to constitute a society of nations when we have the necessary guarantees."

M. Ribot said that the Petrograd Government had asked him to defer the publication of the Franco-Russian agreement. He said that he considered that he ought to comply, owing to the difficult situation of their great ally.

Pierre Renaudel said that the Socialists would await Premier Painleve's acts before voting for him. He reproached the Premier for forming his war committee of old men instead of young and ardent men. Confidence in the new Ministry was then voted by the Chamber 378 to 1. The Socialists did not vote.

WILL HANG ON TO BELGIUM

Berlin Denial of Giving Up Conquest.

No Decision Yet Taken, is Claim.

London Cable.——Reports widely circulated in [illegible] that Germany had abandoned dreams of stealing Belgium are quickly denied. There are so many rumors being obviously set afloat by Germany with the deliberate purpose of including that of the peace suggestions from Britain, which have already been exploded officially, that it is evident public opinion in Germany is being tested on a wide scale. It will be instructive to note the effect on Germany of General Smuts' declaration that the well-informed leaders in Germany already know that Germany is beaten, and that soon all her people will realize the same.

An Amsterdam despatch to the Times says: "The Koelnische Volks Zeitung's Berlin correspondent telegraphs with reference to the Tages Zeitung's enquiry concerning the German Government and Belgium: 'The Tages Zeitung is clearly speaking of rumors recently circulated in Berlin, according to which it was decided at the Crown Council that we are disinterested as regards Belgium, and also guarantee the autonomy and independence of Belgium after the war.' The declaration was made to-day from an authoritative quarter that no decision concerning Belgium has yet been taken. Recent rumors perhaps obtained credit from the discussions of the Free Committee with the Government concerning the answer, the answer to the Pope. A member of the [illegible] Belgium in this connection. The German Government's observations concerning Belgium in reply to the note of the Pope will probably [illegible] in a usually reverse sense. As we are informed, nothing whatever about Belgium is said in the reply to the note. The earliest time, therefore, will be at the peace negotiations table. It is gratifying that the Chancellor declined to listen to ever-conversation concerning indemnity to Belgium. Rumors also state that the Crown Council expressed in the Kaiser's presence German disinterestedness in Belgium cannot be correct. After this war and after experiences of German diplomacy, Germany cannot any more declare she has no interest in Belgium. Out of consideration for our adversaries, indeed, our Government must abstain from such declaration."

Earlier Amsterdam despatches had quoted the Tages Zeitung's story (already denied) about the withdrawal of claims on Belgium. Other papers, including the Frankfurter Zeitung, had published the Berlin rumors. Amsterdam also reports Erzberger at a public speech describing the Reichstag peace resolution as a "peace wave we now experience," but the Koelnische's Berlin correspondent reports that Erzberger's political action must be received very critically, as he is not on confidential terms with the leaders of German foreign policy.

GERMANS KNOW ALLIES HAVE WON

Lt. Gen. Smuts On the War Outlook.

Final Result is Mathematically Certain.

(Reuter Despatch.)

London Cable.—Interviewed by ferring to Germany's present position, South African soldier-statesman, resays:

"She has little or no improvement the London correspondent of Le Journal, Lieut.-Gen. Christian Smuts, the to hope for. Can one doubt, on the other hand, the growing feeling of terror which possesses her as she sees the nations range themselves side by side against her, her food problems becoming daily more and more acute, her economic future hopelessly compromised, and her name more and more detested? In short, she is faced with the prospect of being strangled to death unless the Entente re-opens the doors of the world to her. What does the future offer to her, even on the impossible hypothesis of a reversal of the military situation?

"There is nothing that Germany longs for more ardently than peace. All her people feel that their position is desperate. But before thinking of peace we must be certain of having finished with the military Imperialism. Before accepting any peace those who are charged with the destinies of nations should give serious reflection to the terms; for on the peace we sign will depend for generations the peace and future of the whole world.

"This war is a war of machinery. Instructed by experience we have adopted tactics which may not be very showy, but the results of which are mathematically certain. Our tactics consist in progressing by advances strictly limited to ground rendered impossible for the enemy to hold by the superiority of our artillery. These tactics cost the minimum to us, and inflict the maximum of losses on the enemy.

"If the public understand these methods and their success there is no more question regarding the winning of the war. To-day we have won, and the Germans know it quite well. The final result of the persistent pressure of our army is well anticipated in Germany despite their reassuring communiques. German's military successes in the East cannot make up for their defeat in a world where [illegible] Germany's desire for peace. But despite the horrors and the carnage [illegible] must continue until the lesson is graven deep in the heart of the German people."

HUGE SUMS FOR FRENCH FINANCE

Over 12,000,000,000 Francs to Be Appropriated.

Total During War 103,000,000,000 Francs.

Paris Cable.——A bill [illegible] the 12,[illegible]000,000 francs for the fourth quarter of 1917 was introduced in the Chamber of Deputies to-day by [illegible] L. Klotz, Minister of Finance. [illegible] 1,[illegible] francs [illegible] the third quarter of 1917. More than half of the increase is for the War Department, while the navy requires [illegible] francs additional.

Of the proposed increase [illegible] War Department more than [illegible] francs is for expenses incident to improving the condition of soldiers in service and the families of soldiers. The armament department requires an increase over the third quarter of 10,000,000 francs, [illegible] increase of 76,000,000 francs in the expenses of the automobile service.

The progression of expenses for carrying on the war is shown by the schedules attached to the bill as follows:

1914 ... 1,17[illegible],000,000 francs [illegible]
1915 ... 1,514,000,000 francs monthly.
1916 ... 1,880,000,000 francs monthly.
1917 ... 2,500,000,000 francs monthly.

The total appropriations since the beginning of the war including those for military operations as well as for civil administration to the end of 1917 are 103,000,000,000 francs.

Care of Birds.

In an English treatise on the hygiene of Bird Keeping attention is called to the thoughtless practice of hanging birds in cages near the [illegible] and to the mistaken kindness of hanging a cage in a corner of a sitting room or a kitchen near the ceiling. In the one case the bird is subjected to draughts and will in all probability die from catarrh and bronchitis, and in the other, it lives in a vitiated atmosphere.

Get Behind the Wheel of a Ford and Drive

TRY it just once! Ask your friend to let you "pilot" his car on an open stretch. You'll like it, and will be surprised how easily the Ford is handled and driven.

If you have never felt the thrill of driving your own car, there is something good in store for you. It is vastly different from just riding—being a passenger. And especially so if you drive a Ford.

Young boys, girls, women and even grandfathers—thousands of them—are driving Ford cars and enjoying it. A Ford stops and starts in traffic with exceptional ease and smoothness, while on country roads and hills its strength and power show to advantage.

Buy a Ford and you will want to be behind "the wheel" constantly.

German Gas is Very Bad Stuff

Pte. Robert White, in a letter to Miss Flora Smith, on the 4th of Saugeen, says:

"I am well now, as I am in the hospital near London. I got wounded on the 15th of August, when we went over in a charge on the Germans at Lens. Of 1000 men in our battalion which where in the drive, there are only about 40 left. The Germans put up a fierce kind of fight, using his latest poison gas, which is very bad. The new kind smells like mustard. The new is worse than the old, which smelled much like pineapple. Before the German uses the new poison gas he puts over a mild gas that makes you sneeze, so that we have to take off our gas masks. Then he puts over the poison stuff. The Germans are good fighters in this sector, till you get right up to them, then they put up their hands and yell "Mercy, Kamerad," and expect us to be kind to them and have mercy. But we could not think of mercy sometimes, after what we have to wade through. The Germans are getting fierce because they realize they are losing. He is bombing the hospitals where the wounded are, and killing them. The hospitals are far behind the lines in France, but they bombard them just the same.

I was hit with an overhead shrapnel bullet. It went into my left shoulder and cut my left arm. I was operated on in France, on the 17th of August, and am improving now.

Things are very beautiful in England now. It is great to get away from the trenches.

Best regards to all."

Pte White is well-known here. He was brought up at the ol home Mr. Dugald Smith, in Saugeen, where he lived for fourteen years. A few years ago he left this district. Many friends will be glad to know that Pte. White is recovering from his wounds

Many of the people from this section took in the school fair in Port Elgin on Friday and it was enjoyed by all. Nos. 5 and 6 showed up good in the prize list.

Mr. Thos Cairns and daughters Mrs. J. McGillivray and Miss Isabella Cairns of Vaughan, Mr. J. J. Harris and daughter Janet of Mildmay motored to Mr. A. Cairns on Saturday.

The Bell Telephone is extending its lines here and joining the upper end of the [illegible] with the line coming out from Paisley. There are a few new subscribers coming on.

NOTICE—Our store will be closed each evening at 8 p. m. except Wednesday and Saturday. Wm. Martin.

Try a nice fresh lake trout. Telephone Eaton.

Willscroft

Miss Ollie Robb has returned from visiting her sister in Brantford.

Paisley fall fair was well represented by the people of Willscroft and they report a good time. Alex Robb got first prize for his three-year-old driver.

The Farmers club met on Friday evening and elected their officers for the year. Mr. James [illegible] acting as President and C. Crawford secretary Treasurer.

Miss Bella Harron of Dobbinton spent a few [illegible] last week with her sister Mrs. Arthur [illegible].

[illegible] Senior of Toronto gave a fine address in the Baptist church on Sunday.

Another Automobile Turns Turtle

While coming to visit their daughter, Mrs. Cushman Smith, at North Bruce, on Sunday, Mr. and Mrs. Fisher, from near Owen Sound, met with a bad mishap.

While motoring near Mr. James Reoch's, their car, the steering gear of which had not been working very good, suddenly skidded and turned turtle.

Mr. and Mrs. Fisher were badly bruised and shaken up, the former sustaining a badly sprained wrist. Along with them was Francis Smith, the little son of Mr. and Mrs. C. Smith, but he was not hurt.

BURGOYNE AND DISTRICT

After so much drought, recent rains were very welcome. Roots were much in need or moisture., ploughing was at a stand still, and wheat sown late never even sprouted, corn in general is a failure, scarcely tall enough for the corn binder to tie properly.

Mr. Jas. McRobbie from Corwin, Puslinch, spent a few days visiting friends here and in Arran Lake district.

Mrs. Walter Gowanlock Jr. is visiting her sister at Atwood. She was accompanied by her aunt, Mrs. Wm. Gowanlock late from the west.

Mrs. McAndrew has purchased the Ferguson cottage from Mr. Jas. Ferguson and intends to move in the fall.

Rally Day was observed in the Sunday school and church service here. A home missionary discourse on the needs of church and Sunday school services in newly settled districts was given by the pastor. Miss Black sang an appropriate solo, entitled "A Dream of Paradise". Envelope mission contributions were given by the children.

There is a rumour that potatoes are starting to rot and that the crop at best is not average. It is reckoned that the cost of raising an acre of potatoes this year, counting seed will be $100.00 and the average yield 100 bags. If the price to the city consumer is set at $1.25 per bag. How much will the farmer gain per acre after the shipping bill and middleman's profit has been deducted.

As usual a goodly number from this part attended the Port Elgin show Thursday afternoon and many more the concert in the evening. Although the exhibitors from this district were not numerous there will be several names on the prize list for stock and farm produce. There is a feeling that horse racing on the track should not be permitted while the horse judging is in progress crossing and recrossing the track by children and older persons unaware of danger is continually going on and there is little protection from accidents.

Considerable tile is to be put in a number of farms in this section. Wm. Howe's ditcher is working at Mr J. W. Beany's and Mr. Cunningham's. There will likely be considerable work here as the list includes work at the farms of J. Lyons, A. Geddes, John Busch, J. H. Schwass, John Duke. The ground was surveyed by an engineer from N. C. McKay's office at Walkerton.

W. D. Gowanlock has gone west again after a visit with his father Walter Gowanlock. Mrs. Gowanlock and the boys will stay awhile yet.

Master Stewart Begg is home from Walkerville, having had his right arm broken while cranking a car.

The elders, managers, and leaders of the various organizations of the Presbyterian church were called together on Thursday evening by Rev. Mr. Mann, when especial reference was made to the church's duty in these serious times. In an interesting and impressive way the pastor urged the co-operation of every member in a greater devotion to the cause of Christ, and of service to the Empire in the hour of its trial.

NOTICE

We have frequently requested small boys to cease playing on our window casings, and endangering the plate glass. If the windows are broken we shall be compelled to hold the parents responsible. B. Hilker

A Trip To Cape Croker

To the Editor of The Times:

Sir:—As I come in contact from time to time with the people in the surrounding communities of the County of Bruce, I find them deeply interested in the welfare of our Indian friends on both the Saugeen and Cape Croker Reserves. I am frequently questioned regarding their farming operations, educational facilities, capacity of the children for receiving instruction, and such like questions which go to show that our white friends are carefully following the progress our Indians are making in every department of their lives. This is as it should be. The Indians are our wards, and as such it is our duty to interest ourselves in their welfare. That our Indians are improving from year to year is an established fact. No one knows it or appreciates it more highly than the faithful teacher who labours among them, for an abundant fruition in years to come.

Realizing the delight with which your numerous readers welcome any authentic information regarding the welfare of our Indians, I thought I would give you a short account of a delightful trip handed to the teachers of the Saugeen Indian Reserve by our highly esteemed Public School Inspector, Mr. John McCool. Early on the morning of September 7th, Mr. McCool and his son Byron came along with their splendid car and picked up, at Chippewa Hill, Miss Bella Ruxton, the Saugeen teacher, and then proceeded by the North gravel to Scotch Settlement where Mrs. A. Robb was taken on board. On up the Reserve they go to French Bay where T. J. Wallace joins the party and away we go by Skipness and Zion through the Village of Hepworth and up the County line and into the town of Wiarton. On we spin through Wiarton, up the Lion's Head way to a point six miles beyond. Speeding eastwards for three miles beyond we come to Purple Valley. To the north again we go and soon reach McIver, twelve miles from Wiarton. Once more to the east we turn and enter the beautiful Cape Croker Reserve and are set down at Sidney Bay Indian School the first we are to visit on Cape Croker Reserve.

Miss McIver is the teacher here. We invade her school-room, led by our escort, Mr. McCool. Did we rattle the teacher? Was she nonplussed? Did we stampede her thirteen little Indian pupils? Not much! Miss McIver was as cool as Mr. McCool, and he was as cool as the proverbial cucumber. She gave us the glad hand of fellowship, introduced her little Indians and had us at ease in a moment. School garden next. Out we go. Wonder of wonders! Flowers here, flowers there, flowers everywhere. The whole school encased in a bower of blossoms. If we were entranced by the human garden within we now stood enraptured by the beauty of the garden without. With difficulty we tore ourselves away from this lovely scene to view a magnificent vegetable plot consisting of beets, carrots, onions, beans, potatoes and many other varieties too numerous to mention, and all in splendid condition and showing the results of excellent care and cultivation.

The Indian Department has in course of construction at this school, a substantial and commodious stone dwelling for the accommodation of the teacher. This will add greatly to the comfort and convenience of Miss McIver and her successors.

Leaving Sidney Bay we proceed to the Cape Croker Indian school, four miles farther on. Here we are met by our highly esteemed friend, Rev. Father Cadot the resident Missionary Priest. After receiving from him a right royal welcome, we are ushered into the school-room. This school is in charge of Miss Moffatt, probably one of the ablest and most up-to-date teachers on any Indian Reserve in Canada. As we entered the school room, these superbly trained pupils rose and stood to attention to greet us. As Miss Moffatt presented us each in turn to her class each received a salute of welcome from the assembled pupils.

This is probably one of the best equipped schools, either white or Indian, to be found in any rural section in the Province of Ontario. Among the various school appurtenances we noticed a number of equipped individual work-benches. Domestic Science in all its ramifications is taught here, as is also the science of Agriculture, both theoretically and practically.

On visiting the grounds we found a fine Agricultural school garden. Here again we found a superb flower-garden of immaculate beauty. In this beautiful flower garden may be found plants ranging from the frozen north to the southern zone. Blossoming shrubs from the sunny South are here found mingling with flowering plants from the temperate zones.

This school is also provided with a splendid dwelling-house for the teacher and all under the same roof with the school-room. After partaking of a hearty meal in the home of Miss Moffat we were taken on a tour of inspection through the Cape Croker Hospital by our friend Father Cadot. From the balcony of this hospital looking towards the bay, there lies one of the most beautiful sights the human eye could gaze upon. The hospital itself is a marvel of utility, convenience and comfort. From the hospital we are conducted to the Roman Catholic church which is a marvel of beauty.

Our time being limited we now make another start and soon reach our third and last Indian school on this Reserve known as the Port Elgin school. Miss Schultz is in charge of this school and is doing splendid work since her inception just a few months ago. Here also we found a splendid dwelling house in connection with the school.

This being the last school, we turn our faces homeward and after a delightful trip we are each set down at our homes again feeling grateful to Mr. McCool for giving us one of the most pleasant and profitable outings of our lives.

S. S. No 9 Rural School Fair

There was a great crowd of parents, children, and friends at Mewhinney's school on Thursday, the event being the school fair. Mr. McKay reports the exhibits superior to last year. The work and effort put forth in connection with their exhibits by the boys and girls was extra good.

The school parade was really a fine feature. S S No 7 Greenock, known as Clark's school, won the prize. There were boys attired in boy scout suits, and also a number attired in sailor suits. A boy scout put them through the drill, and they received the applause of the crowd. E. D. Campbell is the teacher of S. S. No. 7.

The prize list will appear in The Times after Mr. McKay has tabulated it.

Gives His Life

PTE. ERNEST H. CUNNINGHAM

A message which came over the wire from Ottawa last Thursday conveyed to Postmaster Joseph Cunningham and wife of Glamis the sad intelligence that their youngest son, Pte. Ernest Hall Cunningham had been killed in Action Somewhere in France on August 15th, 1917. The young man who was in his 23rd year had been at the front since May the second. Ernie, who was a general favorite around the old neighborhood, left for the West in 1911, where he enlisted in Feby. 1916. He had been in France since last May.

Soldiers Signing Demobolization Cards

In a letter from France dated August 23, Pte. Eldon Dell says that the weather is fine and that the French people are busy hauling in grain. There is considerable betting among the soldiers that peace will be declared soon. I was reading in a Canadian paper of the prices you have to pay for a lot of the good things you send me, so you can cut out the fancy things, and send the plainer, with some good magazine stories.

I saw King George when he was through our section recently. We have many aeroplanes here. They fly in squadrons, and it is a common sight night and day to see them.

Well, we have signed our demobilization scheme cards. Perhaps there may be something doing soon. I hope there is, as this war is losing some of its beauty spots. But Fritz must be beaten first."

UNDERWOOD NEWS

If you are in need of a new stove this fall. Call and see Thede and Brill.

Arkwright Honors Returned Wounded Hero

In the hall at Arkwright on Friday night Pte. Tom Donald was given a rousing welcome home, and a presentation consisting of some gold and some socks and shirts. The affair was gotten up by the women's Institute, Mrs. Simpson, president, and Miss Lind, secretary-treasurer, making the presentation on behalf of Arkwright ladies.

Pte. Donald went away with the first of the soldiers, and has been in the thick of the fighting for three years. His wounds are not slight. He has lost an eye, and carries thirteen wounds, some of which are still serious and hazard his life continually.

In acknowledging the gifts, Pte. Donald gave a brief account of fighting he was in, and something of a soldier's life, which were eagerly listened to.

Rev. Mr. Stapleton occupied the chair and made an eloquent patriotic address. Arran council was well represented by Councillors Thomas, Brunton and George. These gentlemen conveyed in good speeches, the thanks of the township for the heroism of Pte Donald, and expressed the hope that returned soldiers would be well looked after. Mr. Walker, of Tara, president of the Kin Association, impressed the gathering with the need of co-operation in getting returned soldiers properly placed in suitable occupations, and urged all present to help wherever possible. Mr. E. R. Sayles made a few brief remarks.

Musical selections interspersed the addresses, after which the ladies provided tea and sandwiches, and an enjoyable hour was spent in social intercourse.

The officers and members of the institute are to be congratulated on the capable manner in which everything was carried out. The hall was filled with people from village and township.

TIVERTON

The Directors of Tiverton fair met in goodly numbers on Saturday evening last to arrange for final touches in preparation for the great fair.

The meetings in Knox church are being well attended and will continue for the next two weeks. The song service Junior choir and senior choir are features of the meetings.

Tiverton and vicinity are blessed with a most abundant hay and harvest crop and threshing is showing the results of united efforts. The potato crop is good in places but a number of the farmers will have to buy the Irish lemons. To justify the use of "Tiverton" in the above I must inform you that the following citizens had the threshing machine to thresh crops grown within the limits of our Burg, viz, Frank Harmer, James McDonald, A. Shier, J. H. McKay, D. McIntosh, Rev. J. C. Robinson and A. Nelson, with good results.

Chester Gibson, 4th of Bruce, has purchased a Ford.

Pte. Stevens of the engineers, is visiting his children, at the home of Robert McIntosh, boundary west.

Why do farmers draw cream all the way to Kincardine to be shipped to Listowel or Walkerton, when the Climax wagon passes their doors? Will the Climax directors answer?

Camping at Inverhuron is about over. Does camp life tend to greater production?

When does the good roads proposition in Bruce county begin? It is about as slow as conscription.

Thursday evening September 27, Miss Jennie McDonald, Townline Bruce and Saugeen gave an at home at the house of her father Mr. Neil McDonald, to her uncles and aunts. Mr. McDonald has sold his farm and is moving to Port Elgin and before leaving the old farm he and his daughters struck on the idea of a little family gathering.

A very pleasant occasion it was and will long be remembered by the honored guests. The hostess had made ample preparations by way of a fowl supper and with the assistance of Mrs. Brown and Miss Mary, her sisters served in a manner befitting a palace. The guests were Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Nelson, Mr. and Mrs. John Nelson, and Mr. and Mrs. John Riley of the 12th Con. Bruce, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Nelson Con. 2, Saugeen, Mr. and Mrs. Michael Nelson and Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Nelson Con. 8, Bruce Tp. and Mr. and Mrs. Allan Nelson of Tiverton. Expressions of good wishes for Neil and his family in the new home concluded an enjoyable evening.

NOTICE—Aberdour Egg Circle will meet Friday night at 8 o'clock in Aberdour school. John Schrank, President.

ARKWRIGHT

Miss Jessie and Florence Tirpin left on Monday to take a course in Owen Sound Business College.

Rally day service was held in the church on Sunday night. There was a great turnout in spite of the unfavorable weather.

Mr. Reg. Crawford is busy threshing in this neighborhood and is doing good work.

The ditching job on con. 4 was let to George Marrow of con. 10, at 22c per rod. We expect a first class job.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson I.—October 7, 1917.

Psalms of Deliverance.—Psalms 85, 126.

Commentary.—I. A plea for mercy (85: 1-7). The plea made in verses 4-7 is prefaced by a grateful recognition of what the Lord had already done for Israel; and a knowledge of what had been done inspired confidence to make further large requests. 1. Lord—Jehovah, the eternally-existing One, the almighty, true, personal Being, the Father of spirits (Num. 16: 22). thou has been favorable—Here is a hearty recognition of God's power, authority and interest in the affairs of men, and acknowledgment of his goodness in all his dealings with Israel. thy land—It was the land which God had provided as a dwelling-place for his people, from which they had been driven because of their sins, and to which they were being restored through the divine favor. thou hast brought back the captivity of Jacob—The punishment foretold by the prophets had been inflicted, and the sin of idolatry, for which Israel was chastised, had been forsaken. The thing which to human reason seems impossible had been accomplished. 2. forgiven the iniquity—Sin is here represented as a moral unevenness, or distortion, or a missing of the mark, and forgiveness is the removal of crookedness, or moral defect. covered all their sin—Christ is covering, "propitiation" (1 John 2:2), for our sins. The atonement of Christ covers the sins of all who in the evangelical sense believe in him, and he does not remember them any more forever. selah—No satisfactory explanation has ever been given of the meaning of this word. It seems to have been used to give some direction as to the way the portion of the psalm should be sung. 3. all thy wrath—The divine wrath, or indignation had been let loose upon the nation because of sin, but now it was withdrawn, and the people were rejoicing in the divine favor.

4. turn us—Although much had already been done in the nation's restoration, much still remained to be done before they could enjoy full national prosperity. The captivity had been turned, but as yet only a small proportion of the Jews had turned from Babylon to Jerusalem. The expression means "convert," and was applicable to Israel as a nation and as individuals. O God of our salvation.—This was a fitting acknowledgment for them to make, that God was their sole hope and help. The prayer included in this verse is expressive in penitence, need and faith in God's mercy and power. 5. wilt thou be angry, for ever—The desolation visited upon Jerusalem and the land of Judah when the nation was taken into captivity was great, and conditions there grew worse during the seventy years of exile; consequently, the process of restoration was slow and arduous. It was more than twenty years after the decree of Cyrus authorizing the return that the temple was restored, and nearly one hundred before the walls of Jerusalem were rebuilt. Sin works ruin and its consequences are likely to be long-lived. 6. revive us again—Faith increased as the petitioner proceeded with the request. The need was great, but application was being made to the right source, and confidence was growing strong. 7. shew us thy mercy—It was not enough that mercy had been shown to Israel in their deliverance from Babylonian captivity.

II. Blessings promised (85: 8-13). 8. Hear what God the Lord will speak—When we pray, we ought to listen to hear what the Lord will say to us. He will speak peace—God's anger was turned away from Israel because of their changed attitude toward him, and in response to their prayer of faith he would speak peace to them. His saints—Those who had set themselves apart for God's service. Let them not turn again to folly—in the past the Jewish nation had been unstable. They had repeatedly turned to the Lord and had as often forsaken him. It is the height of folly to turn to sin after one has known the Lord. 9. That glory might dwell in our land—In the time of Solomon there was great prosperity in the nation, and the glory of the Lord was manifested in the temple at Jerusalem. 10. Mercy and truth are met together—God's words concerning Israel had been proved to be true, and his mercy had been shown in the nation's restoration. 11. Truth shall spring out of the earth—There had been a period of spiritual dearth, but the truth of God would prevail in the hearts of men as a consequence of their turning to the Lord. Doubtless reference is also made to the time when Christ should appear on earth to establish his kingdom through his ministry and death. 12. Our land shall yield her increase—Because of Israel's sin the land had become barren, but with a return to righteousness its fertility would be restored. 13. Righteousness shall go before him—As a herald to prepare the way for his people.

III. Jehovah [illegible] (126: 1-6). 1. Turned again the captivity of Zion—Brought out from captivity. Zion—The Jewish nation. Like them that dream—It seemed a thing incredible that the heathen king Cyrus should proclaim deliverance to the captives in Babylon. 2. Laughter ... singing—Expressions of great joy. Among the heathen—Even heathen nations recognized the fact that Jehovah was at work in behalf of his chosen people. 3. Great things—While reference is made primarily to the fact that deliverance had come to the nation, its history abounded with "great things" that the Lord had done for them. 4. Turn again our captivity—The proclamation of Cyrus which gave deliverance to Jewish captives in his realm was in force, yet comparatively few had availed themselves of the privilege of returning to their own land. The plea is for a general movement in that direction. As the streams in the south—[illegible] rains in the hills and mountainous districts of southern Palestine quickly caused dry river beds to become rushing torrents." The psalmist prays for great streams of his people to return from the land of their exile. 5. Sow in tears ...... reap in joy—If there was no sowing in tears, there would be no reaping in joy. If we were never captives, we could never lead our captivity captive. Our mouth had never been filled with holy laughter if it had not been first filled with the bitterness of grief.—Spurgeon. 6. Goeth forth and weepeth ————come again with rejoicing—Earnest and perhaps toilsome sowing for the Master will surely be rewarded by a heart-cheering harvest. A most blessed promise is here given.

QUESTIONS.—Upon what occasion are these psalms supposed to have been written? How long was Israel in captivity? In what sense is the name Jacob here used? What reasons had Israel for rejoicing? What is meant by the Lord's anger? How had God shown His mercy to Israel? Upon what conditions can one enjoy peace of soul? What promises were given to the nation? Why did the land of Israel become barren? On what conditions would its fruitfulness be restored? What is said about sowing and reaping?

PRACTICAL SURVEY

Topic.—Restoration.

I. Of Israel to divine favor.

II. Of Israel's divided forces.

I. Of Israel to divine favor. Public interests were very near the psalmist's heart. He evidently belonged to the time immediately after the return from captivity. By strong faith he saw in vision a perfectly harmonious cooperation and relation between God and man. The people of God in a very low and weak condition were taught how to address themselves to God to acknowledge with thankfulness the great things he had done for them. Their return from Babylonian captivity was a restoration from exile, bondage and destitution to former religious privileges. In the misery of their servitude they realized the mercies they had so thanklessly enjoyed. Cyrus had proclaimed liberty to the captives, yet it was the Lord's doing according to His word many years before. It was the divine purpose to reverse the moral state of things, so long prevalent among the people, to establish a blessed partnership in an endeavor to make humanity what God would have it be. From their past experiences, from the constancy with which God had kept his word, from his demonstrated and eternal unchangeableness they expected that for which they prayed. While captives in Babylon the people were long sowing in tears, but they were at length brought forth with joy. Then they reaped the benefit of their patient suffering and brought their sheaves with them to their own land, in their experiences of the goodness of God to them. God's law of compensation worked out its unfailing result in the experience of his people. In the various afflictions of life God appears in the sterner aspects of his character. In its pleasures and enjoyments he is seen in his tender aspect. This union and cooperation bring about the blessed result of training the soul for the higher life. The moral prosperity of earth will be a source of delight to heaven, a delight springing from the discovery of an increase of happiness in the universe.

II. Of Israel's divided forces. The release of Israel is called the turning again of the captivity of Zion. The restoration of their sacred interests and the reviving of the public exercise of their religion were the most valuable advantages of their return. The psalmist recalled the rejoicing which filled the hearts of the Israelites on their return from captivity in the midst of the acknowledgment by Gentiles and Jews that their deliverance was a wonderful and mighty deed of Jehovah. He prayed for a like restoration to their homes of their companions who still lingered in captivity. The bringing of those yet in captivity to join their brethren would be as welcome to both as water upon a dry land. A part of the nation had returned to a ruined city, a fallen temple and a mourning land, where they were surrounded by jealous and powerful enemies. Discouragement had laid hold on the feeble company. Restoration was but partly accomplished. After a retrospect of the former mercies bestowed upon the people, prayer was made for a renewed manifestation of the same mercy during present sufferings. The psalmist resolved to listen for God's pledge of peace to his people. His prayers and expectations were grounded on what God had done. The remembrance of the bright beginning encouraged him to believe for complete triumph for the divided forces of Israel. Songs and sighs intermingled in his psalm concerning the restoration of Israel. He sought forgiveness and consolation from God. He watched, waited and expected divine direction and blessing. God had done much for his ancient people. There was a striking contrast between the taunt of those who carried the Jews into captivity and the saying among them when their captivity was ended. They had won the confidence of their oppressors who rejoiced in their restoration and aided them with kindly gifts. They had witnessed their calamity and triumphed in it. They observed their deliverance and approved it. Mercy and truth worked inseparably in all God's dealings with His people. T.R.A.

Cancer Not Hereditary.

That cancer is not inherited in man seems to be proved by statistics collected by Arthur Hunter and presented to the Association of Life Insurance [illegible]. Mr. Hunter investigated the history of policy holders and found that when both of a man's parents had died of cancer only two grandparents out of 251 had died of the disease. Among 254 sons and daughters of parents both of whom had died of cancer he could find but one case of cancer. He considered only those above the age of forty.

He found only nine cases of cancer among 301 brothers and sisters of cancerous parents. Of the 810 sons and daughters above forty in the families of which one parent had died of cancer only three were known to have had the disease.

How to Gather Seed Corn

Seed corn should be selected from stalks standing where they grew. This is necessary, because it is the means of making sure that the seed will have the power to yield well, as shown by the superiority of the stalks over surrounding ones that grew under the same conditions. This sort of seed inherits high producing power.

It must be understood, that like produces like, and that an early-maturing corn yielding abundantly on short, thick stalks is likely to repeat these same characters in the next generation. For example, seed corn should be taken from the stalks without suckers; such seed may produce some stalks with suckers, but it will invariably produce fewer suckers than seed from sucker-bearing stalks.

All seed corn should be selected by hand, as a special task, and not incidental to husking. The corn should be gathered as soon as thoroughly mature and before the first hard freeze. Enough should be gathered for two seasons planting to insure a supply of seed if, for example, the first planting is drowned out or if the next crop should be hurt by early frost.

As soon as the crop ripens the wise farmer will go through the field with seed picking bags, and husk the ears from the stalks that have produced the most corn without having any special advantages, such as space, moisture or fertility. He will pass by the large ears on stalks standing alone with an unusual amount of space around them. Strains that do well in competition for light, and moisture, and soil fertility are likely to repeat under the same conditions. The most important consideration is to select seed from those plants which have the ingrained ability to furnish the largest quantity of dry shelled corn.

Early maturity is a desirable quality, and so are short, thick, wind-firm stalks; top-heavy ones with ears borne too high are likely to mean losses. Breeding experiments have proved that the tendency to produce suckers is hereditary in corn. Other things being equal, take the seed from suckerless stalks.

MACHINERY FOR SILO FILLING.

The silo-filling season is at hand. In some communities in Ontario this is the busiest time of the year. Because of the large number of silos, the scarcity of filling outfits, the short space of time in which the work must be done and the scarcity of farm labor this year, silo-filling will be a larger task than ever. Therefore it is necessary that we do all we can by way of preparing for it.

THE CORN BINDER.

A corn binder is subject to greater strains than a grain binder and though the parts upon which most of these strains fall are built more heavily than those of a grain binder, yet the fact remains that a corn binder wears faster and needs more attention. Before the season's cutting is started the machine should be examined. Knives should be ground, parts which show excessive wear or play should be replaced, and the whole machine should have a general tightening up. Then, just before the machine is started it is well to give all bearings a thorough soaking with kerosene.

This eats out the rust and dirt, smooths the bearing surfaces and makes a free path for lubricating oil which is to follow. This practice on any farm machine makes for light draft and eliminates excessive wear.

If these things are done the binder will do the season's work in the shortest possible time and with a minimum amount of trouble.

THE CUTTING BOX

Nothing is more annoying in silo-filling time than a filling outfit which fails to do its duty. A cutting box is subject to great strains and the best of care should be given it throughout the season. An ordinary cutting box often cuts from twenty to twenty-five tons of corn per hour and elevates it to a height of thirty feet and over. This is a feat which requires a great deal of power and it is sure to tell on the machine even with the best of care. First of all, the condition of the knives is an all important factor, both from the farmer's and machine owner's standpoints. In order to make first class ensilage the knives should be changed once in two and a half hours of running. It is also necessary that this be done in order to get the greatest amount of service out of the machine. Nothing is harder on a cutting box and the engine driving it than dull knives. The cutting plate of the mouthpiece should also be kept sharp and the adjustment of the knives is likewise important. They should cut so close to the mouthpiece that the corn will be cut off with a shearing cut.

A machine with knives which are quickly interchangeable should have a preference with farmers over one in which the changing of a set of three knives means the removing and replacing of twenty-one bolts. Time at silo-filling is too precious for such performance.

The blower pipe should always be set as vertically as possible. If set on a slant, the heavy corn will slide up the low side of the pipe and the air will pass it over. This causes a blocked pipe and a cleanout with a loss of at least twenty minutes of precious time.

When the season is over and the defects and weak points in your corn binder or cutting box are still fresh in your mind, make notes of the things which should be done for next season and do them. This is good farm management.—Canadian Countryman.

Improving Fudge.

A few drops of molasses added to fudge after it has boiled for about five minutes will improve the flavor and keep it from getting sugary if boiled a little too long. Substituting sweet cream for milk also adds to the richness of fudge.

Around the Farm

THE TRACTOR HAS COME TO STAY.

Some years ago there was some doubt in the minds of some of our leading agricultural authorities as to whether the farm tractor would ever prove practicable on the average farm. It was conceded that out West where the farms were very large that the tractor was a paying proposition, but it was doubted whether with our smaller farms here in the East that tractors would ever be generally used.

Anyone who had any doubts as to the growing popularity of the tractor had but to see the lively interest evinced by farmers at the Canadian National Exhibition in the display of tractors to have these doubts removed. We venture to say that never was there a better exhibit of tractors and never was more interest shown in them. One fault we had to find with the earlier types of tractors was that they are somewhat difficult to handle and could not be turned sharply. The present day tractor, however, has not these defects and can be handled easily and turned in a very small space. The wide use that the Ontario Department of Agriculture is making of tractors in its campaign for greater production has undoubtedly done much to draw the attention of people to the merits of the tractor, which is becoming more popular the better people become acquainted with it.

CLOVER SEED—WHY NOT GROW YOUR OWN?

In average seasons, red clover that has not been pastured after the first hay crop has been removed, will produce a crop of well matured seed. Instead of cutting the second crop of hay, pasturing it or, as it frequently happens, plowing it under, why not allow this crop to mature and save the seed from it?

By raising your own clover seed you are obtaining seed from plants which, by their very existence, have demonstrated their adaptation to the conditions prevailing on your farm, and in your immediate locality. Such seed, it is quite reasonable to suppose, will produce plants which are equally well adapted to local conditions. For this reason home-grown clover seed is really more valuable than most of the seed obtainable through ordinary channels of commerce.

Quite often very poor looking fields of second growth red clover will produce a profitable crop of seed. In many cases fields where the clover is quite thin, and, say only eight or ten inches high, will yield over one hundred pounds of clean, well matured seed per acre. Usually, however, an average second growth will produce anywhere from 150 to 250 pounds of seed per acre.

The red clover seed crop should be cut when the heads are dark brown in color, and contain hard, well-developed seed. In harvesting all unnecessary handling should be avoided. Rough handling, frequent turning, etc., will thresh or break off the most mature heads, thus wasting a portion of the most valuable seed.

Where the crop is less than one foot high it may be cut with an ordinary mowing machine. It is usually advisable to have two men follow the machine with hand rakes and move each swath out from the standing crop a few feet so that, on the next round, the cut clover will be out of the way of the horses and machine. By following this practice with short clover a great deal of seed will be saved that would have otherwise been threshed by the horses' feet and, therefore, left in the field.—Canadian Countryman.

SUNDAY AT HOME

THE GOOD SHIP TO-DAY.

Talk not o' cloud of yesterdays
That are a hundred years away;
Though I of them could sing much praise
Our large concerns are of to-day.

Sigh not for good old days of yore,
There is no music in the lore.
To-day stands wide the open door,—
To-morrow is as yet unknown.

Seek not for things that used to be;
You are not equal to the strife,
As well attempt to drink the sea
As bring the dead past back to life.

The past has its allotted space,
Yet we now have the right of way.
What not the past, but present, face,
And sail on the good ship To-day.
—Thomas F. Porter, in Boston Globe.

MADE US KINGS AND PRIESTS.

Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests.—Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light.

Ye shall be named the priests of the Lord; men shall call you the Ministers of our God.—Priests of God and of Christ.

Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Jesus Christ.—By him therefore let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is the fruit of our lips giving thanks to his name.

For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them.—The temple of God is holy, which temple ye are.

SHADOWS.

(By the late Rev. T. H. Miller.)

What is a shadow? It is an interruption in the rays of light. I stand in the light and the scene is somewhat darkened. My personality stands in another light and my character is portrayed. Where there is character there is influence. Some shadows have unlimited stretch, and we ask in vain, how far, how long, how much. The greater the man the greater the shadow. Emerson says: "All our institutions are to be regarded as the lengthened shadows of some great man." If I created a sentiment in favor of right; if I help another to bear trials with fortitude, to hold or to honor amid severe temptation; if I lead a prodigal back to his the Father's house, I fling a shadow across a hundred generations yet unborn. Shadows are not the newspaper reports of our doings, or the appreciation of those who love us blindly, but it is the influence we shed, largely unconscious, that gives the real measurement of our character. It is our souls, not our manners, which leave the greatest impress on the world. What we are in our innermost natures cannot be kept hidden and secret. A beast cannot cast the shadow of a man: the greater the man the greater the shadow. Each man's personality is unique; each man worthy of regard has seen visions of truth and life, and knows his relation to them. No man can do his work as he ought unless he feels that he is where the Lord wishes him to be. Do men open their hearts to us as the flowers to the sun? Do tears start in the storm-chased cheek of ill-fated mothers? Do love and patience and aspiration bring up wherever we go? Then our shadows are bright as the light and warm as the sun, and lasting as eternity.

Given a distinct and well-built personality, what then? Why, in order for a shadow, the light must shine upon it. Here is the mystery and magnificence of life! Here I plunge into the deepest abyss. Here I stand in awe, for it is holy ground.

"Why was I made to hear Thy voice
And enter while there's room?"

Why is Britain great to-day? Why is the Atlas of the world likely to be painted red? Maybe it is partly owing to the songs of saints of a hundred years ago, whose lives and hearts and lines corresponded, as they sang:

"Shine, mighty God, in Britain shine
With beams of heavenly grace;
Reveal Thy power through all our coasts,
And show Thy smiling face."

When a man or a woman is lifted from the lowly and given work to do, the waiting watchers sing, "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." Is not the light sovereign? Is it not beyond man's control? How often we hear the anthem: "He hath put down princes from their thrones, and hath exalted them of low degree; the hungry he hath filled with good things, and the rich he has sent empty away"?

H. T. Miller.

Easy Ways.

To clean a cotton rug, lay it on the cement floor of the cellar or on the back porch and wet it well, then sprinkle naptha powder over it and scrub briskly with a broom. Hang on the line and rinse with the hose or with several pailfuls of water.

To clean white kid slippers get a clean white cloth and soak it with gasoline, then dip in powdered chalk. Rub until all dirt is removed and then dry in the air, but not in the sun.

To remove grease from carpets or rugs, cover the spot with fuller's earth and wet with turpentine. Cover with paper, and at the end of two days brush clean.

Wet sawdust is a valuable aid in cleaning the cellar. It will take up the dust and ashes as you sweep and make the work less dusty.

A small dish-mop is a very handy thing to use when washing lamp chimneys, as it will go inside many chimneys that are too small for the hand and will not break with them.

BATHTUBS AND BATHING.

In many European countries "the best people"—if you know what that means—never bathe in water.

Spanish matrons have expressed much surprise at my complaints about the absence of bathing facilities in the Madrid hotels. One lady, wife of a distinguished member of the cortes, told me she "had herself rubbed down in oil once a week, but never had got into a tub of water and never would!"

My memory of London hotels goes back to 1875, when there was not a single bathtub in any hotel in that city. A tin pan and bucket of warm water was the only "tub," and you were lucky to get that.

And in that same period in New York city the Metropolitan and St. Nicholas hotels, supposed to be models of excellence, were totally wanting in bathrooms.

Admittedly, it is as difficult to imagine life without motorcars as without bathtubs, but the former are less than a twenty-year-old necessity, while the bath was an institution long before the times of the Roman emperors.—Julius Chambers in Brooklyn Eagle.

Odd and Interesting Facts.

Japanese make a waterproof leather with many uses from the hides of sea lions.

Rats every year destroy about 5 per cent. of the growing sugar cane in Jamaica.

So many electric bulbs are stolen that a thiefproof electric lamp socket has been devised.

There is a great demand for road building experts and workmen in all parts of the United States.

Manufacturers of that country are planning to establish the first paper plant in Argentine.

South Africa mines are experimenting with a dust laying preparation which has molasses as its base.

Indications are that after the war Europe will become a strong competitor of the United States for the trade of Guatemala.

Taking a Pill.

You can't?
But you can.
And it is easy.
First take a little liquid.
Then put the pill in your mouth.
And now let your head drop well back.
Presently the pill will have worked down and back.
Just then you swallow the liquid and down goes the pill?
Even one who "never could take a pill" finds it easy managed this way.

"You should weigh your words," said the orator's friend. "Yes," chimed in another friend; "and we don't mind if you give us short weight at that."—Washington Star.

What Do They Make in Germany?

What do they make in Germany
In place of the books and toys
That they used to make, ere the War God spake,
For good little girls and boys?

What do they make in Germany
In place of the fairies' wings
And the bright moon-beams and the golden dreams
And songs of a million springs?

They've made them a God in Germany
Of murder and lies and lust;
And their olden-time creeds and their [illegible] deeds
Are trampled deep in the dust.

What do they make in Germany?
It's Death that they're making—Death!
And a myriad fears, and a sea of tears
And Hate, with its poisoned breath!

What do they make in Germany?
They're making the flames of hell
And the boundless blight of an endless night
That ages will not dispel.

Things that are made in Germany
Are things that I shall not trust;
For they're made at the nod of a Prussian god
Of murder and lies and lust.

THE SMOCK.

It's the Thing for the Summer This Year.

Pages could be devoted to the subject of smocks, so varied are the designs. Picking one from the many, as the most worthy of description, is a difficult task, for all are charming. Those of blue [illegible], ranging in tones from deepest midnight-blue to a pale gray-blue, are, perhaps, the best liked. They are trimmed with bands of worsted embroidery in tapestry designs showing borders of small fruits or flowers in the wonderful combinations of color only to be found in antique tapestries.

Every cloud may have a silver lining but that doesn't always enable us to get in out of the wet.

Through Many Trials

"I mean a lot of things, Richard, which I can't understand," Dick answers, slowly and sadly still. "I don't want to accuse you, or blame you without cause; but there is treachery somewhere, my boy." His voice shakes perceptibly here, and Captain Dumaresq pushes the spirit decanter nearer to him.

"I can see you are in trouble," he says, sympathetically. "Tell me all, Dick; you'll feel better when you do."

"I told you all I had to tell—more than I had any right to tell—in that letter I wrote you," Dick says, shortly.

"I give you my word, Dick, that letter of yours was a riddle to me which I haven't solved yet," Captain Dumaresq says, with an emphatic shake of his head; "not to mention the flurried, frantic style of writing," he adds, with a comically hopeless look. "I gathered—after infinite pains and perseverance, I assure you, dear boy—I gathered the interesting but not surprising fact that you had fallen in love with some sweet little Cornish girl, and that you were in the despairing stage—same as I was myself."

"You did not seem in the despairing stage this evening, sitting by her side in the theatre," Dick retorts, briefly, "while your man here told me you had gone to Paris for a week! Did you think I should not know Miss Trefusis when I saw her, or that I shouldn't know you when I saw you? Or what was the object of your making a mystery and a secret of her name or your whereabouts to me?"

He has risen from his chair, his brilliant eyes aglitter with smoldering wrath, his voice full of wrath and energy, his figure and gesture full of spirited resolve; and Richard Dumaresq, his cousin, selfish and cowardly to the core of his heart, despairs for the moment of gaining his ends, since there is no way open but that of duplicity.

"I have made no mystery, no secret of anything, my dear boy," he says, taking refuge in bold denial. "Take a little more brandy and soda. I did not mention names—you didn't mention names. I meant to tell you all in good time, of course."

Dick stares at him gloomily, in puzzled silence, for a full minute.

"I mention names! You know quite well to whom I alluded," he says, huskily. "Not that I had any right—not that I shall ever have any right—to speak of her like that. How I envied you this evening, sitting by your sweetheart, having the right to tell her, to ask her to wait for you!"

"Where the deuce were you then?" the captain asks, pettishly. "You keep on talking in riddles, upon my honor you do, Dick."

"I was in the theatre next your box, looking at you and Evelyn Trefusis; and you both looked up and saw me," Dick answers, quietly.

"I never saw you," his cousin insists, "but I was with Evelyn Trefusis, as you mention her name; but I am not her accepted lover, my dear boy; I wish I was. I'd give half my life to be her accepted lover, or her husband, and I haven't a chance! You needn't envy me—I envy you! I'm the most wretched man alive! You're not hampered with debt; you can strike out for yourself. You are decidedly clever and well read, and all that; all things are possible to you, but to me, nothing—only the fate of Tantalus."

"I see no more delightful possibility before me than a lonely life spent in hard work, earning enough for my bare subsistence, without a wife or a child to call my own," Dick answers despondently. "I have no chances; my last chance is gone now," and he does not notice the flash of satisfied expression that crosses his hearer's face at his despairing assurance.

"Did you tell the old man about your love affair, then?" he asks, quickly.

"Not I!" Dick says, indignantly. "Do you think I would dare to discuss her, and bandy about her spotless name, unless I had the best of rights for so doing?"

"That's all for the best, then," his cousin says, in a relieved tone. "It would have done harm to your cause. He is furious with me for dreaming of marrying, and I don't dare to tell him I dream of marrying any one in particular."

"Nevertheless," his cousin says, in the same settled tone of despondency, "you may be able to clear away the obstacles in your path, and you may one day be the husband of Evelyn Trefusis; but I never shall be able to call my white dove my wife—never."

"By your 'white dove' you mean Evelyn's younger sister—Imogene, I think she is called?" Capt. Dumaresq asks, with soft sympathy, marred by a glimmer of a sneer.

"Yes, Imogene," Dick answers uttering her name with half-whispered reverence.

"And what do you propose doing now, dear boy?" Captain Dumaresq inquires, earnestly. "To strike out another course in 'fresh fields and pastures new,' that will lead in the end to the white dove sitting patiently waiting to be caught? You can't stay in the old place, Port—what's its name now; your position would be too painful."

"I shall stay in Portreath until something better opens to me," Dick answers, decidedly. "My position is only painful to myself, and I have learned, I hope, to suffer and be strong. It matters to no one but myself; it is known to no one but myself—except you, now that I have told you," he adds, with palpable regret.

"Then the girl does not care for you?" asks Richard Dumaresq, quickly, passing his hand over his mouth to conceal its expression.

A slight flush deepens the bronze color in Dick's face, and his eyes grow darker and softer.

"No; not care like that, heaven bless her innocence," he says huskily. "She likes me very well, but that is all."

"Then, Dick, dear boy," urges his cousin, very seriously, "do you think it is right, or fair to her, to go back now? You must let her know your feelings; you can't keep silence, old fellow. You are drawing her and yourself to the tortures of Tantalus, surely!"

"I shall go back for a while, at all events," Dick says, rising, with a determined, excited look. "I shall go by the fast train to-morrow morning!"

"You must not—you must not, Dick; you must come here to breakfast with me," his cousin says, with affectionate insistence.

"No thank you," Dick answers, coldly.

"Then I shall go to breakfast with you," Captain Dumaresq says, gayly. "Dick, old man, don't be so gruff about it; I'm in the same boat, and infinitely worse off than you. You can sympathize and fraternize."

"I don't think we can, Richard," Dick says, gravely—nevertheless, he calls him Richard, and his tones soften, and his looks soften, as he takes his cousin's hand. "I shall expect you, to-morrow morning," he adds, quietly.

Captain Dumaresq goes to breakfast with his cousin next morning and the two men spend most of the day together.

Late in the evening they drive down to the docks, and go into a small hotel and tavern in the immediate vicinity, and Captain Dumaresq returns to his rooms late that night—alone.

"Beastly place down about the docks," he says, yawningly, to his man Rayner. "Been down there this evening, seeing off a fellow by the Rotterdam boat."

Next day Captain Dumaresq travels down into Cornwall, and on the afternoon following makes that call on Sir Philip Trefusis at Portdreath, which has for its chief purpose the proposing in due form for the hand of his eldest daughter, and for the lesser purpose—in strictest, friendly confidence—the warning of the baronet against the person who has lately been an inmate of his household, and who, Captain Dumaresq expresses his regret, is all unworthy of the trust reposed in him. He confides fully in Sir Philip, even to a painful family secret.

"Which explains the interest I take in the poor fellow," he says, reluctantly, "and my desire that you should not seek to punish him for his presumption. He has gone, you see, Sir Philip, fearing an expose. He will not trouble you with his presence again."

And it seems as if he speaks with authority—days and weeks pass on, but Dick Dumaresq returns no more.

CHAPTER XVII.

Miss Jane Proude has just finished her breakfast in the tiny breakfast parlor of her tiny house, No. 3 Atlantic Terrace, Warminster-on-Sea, and is looking forward with a house-keeper's pleasure to the mysterious ceremony designated "turning out."

"We'll begin with the drawing room and get that done early in the day, Hennie," Miss Proude says, briskly, "and then, after dinner, we can turn out the dining room, and do as much as we can before tea time."

"Yes, mum," answers obedient Hennie, with whom her mistress' word is law, being, as she is, a maidservant in the nineteenth century who actually regards her place of service as her home, and her mistress as her friend, counsellor and protector, to be equally loved and respected.

"It's nice and early, Hennie," Miss Proude remarks, with satisfaction, as she assists her handmaid in the "turning out" process by carrying all the light moveables into the hall, and piling them up anywhere and everywhere, taking down the curtains, and covering up the couch and piano in sheets, while "Hennie" bestrews the carpet with damp tea leaves, and works away vigorously with long and short handled brooms. "For I wouldn't for the world that any one should come this fine day and find us all in a mess," Miss Proude says, with a reassuring glance at the clock, which has only reached the half hour after eight of this bright, warm morning; "but, if we work hard, Hennie," her mistress concludes, cheerfully, as she turns a bust of Socrates upside down in a box, and puts a duster around the "Greek Slave" to keep them clean and safe, "we'll have everything in beautiful order by eleven o'clock, and surely to goodness, no one will come looking for apartments before that time!"

For Miss Proude, in common with the rest of the middleclass householders in Warminster-on-sea, "lets" two or three of the best rooms in her tiny, pretty little house to such visitors as perceive the little card in the fan-light over the door, and are tempted by the bowery, flower-adorned, white muslin-draped, glittering, spick-and-span appearance of Miss Proude's climbing roses and shady little lawn, and snow white doorsteps, and glittering window glasses and pretty little doll-like rooms, with bouquets of mignonettes and geraniums everywhere.

"I dunno 'bout that, mum," Hennie answers, with a shake of her head. "That lady come, you know, before eleven o'clock as you thought had come about the drawin' room—that handsome young lady in the lovely dress."

"Yes, yes! I know," Miss Proude answers, hurriedly, her voice changing and her face clouding, "but she didn't come about apartments—that is to say, not altogether; I thought she had at first."

"Here's somebody comin' about apartments as sure as I live, mum!" gasps Hennie, distractedly. "Whatever will we do! and the place in a reg'lar downright muddle, as I like a sweep!"

"It's not that young lady again, is it?" Miss Proude asks, breathless with agitation. "You would know her, Hennie, wouldn't you? Tall, and—and beautiful, fair skinned, and dressed very plain, and ——"

"Lor, no mum!" retorts Hennie, as she aids her mistress in frantic attempts to shove back some of the furniture, and carry away a pile of rugs and mats which are blocking up the little entrance hall. "This lady's elderly, and dressed very plain, and—"

"Oh, well!" Miss Proude says, impatiently. "It's somebody about apartments, and you must only take them across the hall into the dining-room, Henrietta."

Miss Proude only says "Henrietta" when she is displeased or perplexed, and so the handmaiden knows her mistress' mood is a troubled one.

The visitor is not an apartment-seeker, however, but is no other than Miss Proude's sister, Mrs. Lilly.

Miss Proude has not seen her Quaker sister for many years, and she goes down to the parlor with some fear.

It is with a sensation of an [illegible] pupil being brought before a severe governess that she turns the handle of the dining-room door, pausing a moment on the mat to get up the necessary amount of gushing delight to be expressed in face and voice.

"Well, Miriam, dear, this is an unexpected pleasure!" she exclaims, clasping her plump hands with a gesture of rapture as she trips forward, and Miriam Lilly, her grave face not relaxing a muscle, rises formally from her chair, takes her sister's hand, and touches her cheek with her lips, and sits down again.

"It is an unexpected visit, I am sure," she says, quietly, with the faintest echo of sarcasm in her tones, "and I would not have intruded on thee at this early hour, Jane, only that I have to return to London this morning. I came down here by the last train last night, and I want most particularly to have a talk with thee."

"Of course, dear," poor Miss Jane replies, secretly appalled by this preamble, "and I am delighted to see you after all these years; but you mustn't talk of going back to London to-day!"

"Jane," she says, rigidly, "I have come down from London to see thee concerning a matter which troubles me very much. Afterward, if thee pleases, I will think of rest if there be time. Can thee spare an hour to talk to me?"

"Certainly, Miriam," Miss Proude says, utterly subdued by her sister's manner, and giving Hennie certain complicated instructions, she comes back and shuts the door, and sits down meekly, trembling in anticipation of she knows not what.

"When did thee see Richard Dumaresq last, Jane?" she inquires, suddenly, and poor Miss Proude flushes and twines her fingers nervously together.

"Why, Miriam!" Miss Proude asks. "The poor boy hasn't got into any trouble, has he? Oh, Miriam, don't be hard on him, poor lad!"

"Thee art a tender-hearted woman, Jane," Miriam Lilly says, sarcastically, but not unkindly, "and as ready to shed tears as ever, I see. I suppose thee considers me in the light of Dick Dumaresq's enemy because I did not approve of Katherine's unequal marriage, any more than I approved of her son proving rebellious and ungrateful to Francis Dumaresq, Lord Heneage, who had brought him up, and educated him, treated him as a son."

"Well, all I know is," Miss Proude says, indignantly, drying her tears, "that Lord Heneage must have been a hard, disagreeable, cruel old man, or he never could have shut his heart against poor, dear Dick these ten years, and let the poor boy risk his life in foreign lands, and go into awful battles," Miss Proude says, in imminent danger of bursting into tears, "and then go and earn his bread as a tutor—that's what he's doing now, if you want to know, Miriam," Miss Proude says, waxing defiant—"poor Kitty's child! He's got a first-rate situation in a very good family—titled people—he did tell me the name, and he wrote to me after he went there once. It was somewhere in your part of the world, too—it was—it was in Cornwall somewhere, I recollect, but I can't think of the name of the place or the people."

"Was the place 'Portdreath,' and the name of the family 'Trefusis'?" asks Mrs. Lilly, with a curling lip. "If thee can tell me no more than that, Jane, I have taken this journey in vain. Will thee tell me the very latest date on which thee either saw him or had a letter from him?"

"I have not seen him since the beginning of May, I tell you, Miriam," Miss Proude reiterates, "and I had a letter from him just after he went to—this place. How on earth do you know the name?" She looks bewildered. "But you always did find out everything, Miriam, and knew everything long before Kitty or I did, when we were all girls together," she adds, admiringly.

"And that is all you know?" ejaculated Miriam Lilly, unconsciously resorting to the phraseology of her girlish days in her agitation.

"That is all I know—every single thing," repeats Miss Proude, with staring eyes and tightly locked hands. "What else is there for me to know, for gracious sake? Don't say he has got into any trouble, Miriam!"

"Nothing has happened to him, as far as I know, Jane," Mrs. Lilly says, gravely, "but he has left his situation at Portdreath, and I want to know if thee cannot give me even a clew to his whereabouts. He came to London on the 10th of July; he was in London the next day I believe, and after that no one can give me any information concerning him. Certainly I have made no inquiries but from the few persons whom I thought it likely——"

"Why, my gracious! of course. How stupid I am! Seeing the lady, drove you out of my head—I mean you drove the lady out of my head!" Miss Proude exclaims. "I never had a clear head, you know, Miriam."

"Yes, I know," rejoins Miriam, grimly. "Who was the lady?"

"One of the handsomest, most elegant girls you ever saw, Miriam!" Miss Proude says, with excited enthusiasm, seeing that her sister is listening with eager interest. "And she came here one day looking for apartments, and she was so nice and friendly. I was just going to have a cup of tea and I asked her to join me, and she did, and we were chatting like old friends in a minute. A 'Miss Brown' she was, a lady from the country, and she knew all about the Dumaresqs."

"Knew all about the Dumaresqs!" echoes Mrs. Lilly, gazing at her sister, who, delighted to find that her talk is making such an impression on Miriam, grows voluble and recovers her spirits.

"Oh, yes!" Miss Proude says, glibly. "She knows Lord Heneage and Captain Richard very well—that shows what society she is in, doesn't it? And she knew Dick, too, at least she said she understood there was another nephew of Lord Heneage's who had been disinherited, or—who—who had quarreled with him—and she had heard some horrible, abominable story," Miss Proude says, suddenly, with flashing eyes, "and if it's true, as she said, that Captain Richard repeated it, it was through him she had heard of it."

"Then you speak plainly, Jane!" Mrs. Lilly exclaims, angrily. "What did thee 'Miss Brown' of thine hear, and what did Captain Richard say? Nothing good of his cousin Dick Dumaresq, I suppose?"

Eat Less Meat—Eat More Whole Wheat— that is the way to save money, save strength, save health and save food. Cut out the expensive indigestible foods. The whole wheat is the most perfect food given to man. But be sure you get the whole wheat grain in a digestible form. Shredded Wheat Biscuit is 100 per cent. whole wheat and is made digestible by steam-cooking, shredding and baking. It contains more real body-building nutriment than meat, and costs much less. Delicious for any meal with milk or cream, and fruits.

The recipes for Apple Tapioca Pudding, Escalloped Potatoes and Bran Gems, mentioned above, are as follows:

Apple Tapioca Pudding—
3-4 cup pearl or 1-2 cup minute tapioca.
Cold water.
2 1-2 cups boiling water.
1-2 teaspoonful salt
7 sour apples.
1-2 cup sugar.

Soak the tapioca an hour, and cook it in a double boiler. Pare and slice the apples and arrange in a buttered pudding dish. Add the sugar, pour over the tapioca, and bake in a moderate oven until the apples are soft. Serve with sugar and cream. Minute tapioca requires no soaking.

Escalloped potatoes—

Butter a baking dish well. Put in a layer of potatoes, sliced thinly. Sprinkle with salt and pepper, and dredge with flour. Repeat. Add milk until it may be seen through the top layer. Add bits of butter. Bake in the oven until the potato is soft.

The recipes for cornstarch mould and brown bread, mentioned above are as follows:

Cornstarch Mould—
Cornstarch, 4 tablespoons.
Sugar, 6 tablespoons
Milk, 2½ cups.
Vanilla, ½ teaspoon.

Scald milk, mix cornstarch, sugar, and salt (⅛ teaspoon) with a little cold water, and add to scalded milk. Cook over hot water 20 minutes, stirring part of the time. Add vanilla, and pour into a cold, wet bowl or tin. When cold, turn out and serve.

Brown Bread (Boston)—
Rye meal, 1 cup.
Granulated cornmeal, 1 cup.
Graham flour, 1 cup.
Soda, ¾ tablespoon
Salt, 1 teaspoon.
Molasses, ¾ cup.
2 cups sour milk, or 1¾ cups sweet milk or water.

Mix and sift dry ingredients. Add molasses and milk, stir until well mixed, turn into a well-buttered mould, which should never be more than two-thirds full, put on cover and steam three and one-half hours.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

One Toronto daily says "poll'ng early in December," while another says "election not till February." The latter date will certainly be a bad one for the rural districts.

With the saving of all the crusts and no waste whatever, what is to become of the poor dogs that are to pick their own living?

The Flanders Campaign is not moving rapidly enough to suit the British public, with the result that there is criticism of the government. Oddly enough, however, there is no call for resignations and a new government. The people seem satisfied that they have the right men in control, but but they are urging for greater speeding up in the war. In Canada, however, if one mentions he would like to see greater effort at the front he is put down as disloyal

A leader of the fashionable set in Toronto, says those women who don't sign the pledge cards are pro Germans, and their names will be recorded by her organization. We fancy the Kaiser will be pleased to meet this women. She is one after his own heart. But honestly, is the individual any more pro-german who refuses to sign a food card, than the authorities who permit the grain and sugar to be wasted in beer and whiskey?

Reeve Izzard has received a notice from the Food Controller in which it requests that milk dealers do not raise the price, setting forth the fact that feeds and coarse grain are more plentiful than usual. Fortunately for Port Elgin it is well supplied by a reliable milk dealer, who in an interview in The Times a few weeks ago said he did not intend to increase the price of milk. The rate per quart here is but seven cents, which is quite cheap when other towns are compared. The best of it is, our citizens have a reasonable rate at the will of the milk dealer, and not because of any request by the authorities.

British children, all over the country, wherever the chestnut tree grows, are to gather horsechestnuts as they come falling from the trees this autumn It is to be their particular contribution to the winning of the war, for ripe horsechestnuts have been discovered to provide a good substitute for the grain which is used in the making of munitions. It will be quite valuable service, for the computation is that every ton of chestnuts will save half a ton of grain. The gathering will be organized by committees in connection with the schools, and woods and lanes will see bands of young patriots enjoying their "war work" hugely, one may be sure.

Tara has the sympathy of Port Elgin and community in its great loss by fire. It is only a short time since a disastrous fire swept its front street In fact, Tara's citizens had just shown splendid loyalty and faith in their town in building fine new stores and business places when it was again visited and great damage done They find it hard to place the exact cause, and if it were found there would not be a great deal of satisfaction The Leader points out in a recent issue that the firemen were not practicing, and that the bell rope broke while giving the alarm, also the chemical engine was out of some chemical for its proper working. These are the little things that count much when fire breaks out Every small town has a lesson here. Eternal vigilance is needed to prevent fires, and all fire apparatus should be ready every moment day and night. Port Elgin citizens are inclined to rest on the fact that their town has a splendid waterworks system. We have, but to use it to good advantage in a fire, we must have trained men, and frequent inspection in order that every piece of apparatus may be in perfect working order.

There is quite a squabble in Toronto just now over the price of milk. The producer, or in other words the farmer, has asked a higher price, and the retailers are quite worked up about it. They say they will have to raise milk to 14 cents per quart. One of the men who goes to the farmer and gets milk, at five and six cents a quart, and then invests in a horse and rig and peddles it to the cityfolk at 11 and 12 cents a quart, making more out of the deal without much investment, than does the farmer, says that "the farmers are so well organized they can do as they like." This will be news to most people, but it is about time the farmer was coming to his own The farmer has been paying up, across and down, and it cannot be wondered at if he has learned something from the big fellows lately. Even the little milk peddlers have taught the farmer that he is a chump to invest in a farm, a great herd of cattle, hire men, and then get 5 or 6 cents for the product that the little milk peddler sells for 12 cents. Have Toronto people noticed any farmers' organizations showing as great profits for as little work as the William Davies Co., or has anyone noticed any real rich farmers? The regrettable feature of the thing is that when the farmer gets a little more the consuming public get soaked good and plenty An example of this is found in the farmer getting 17c a pound live for his hogs, while if the town man wants a bit of bacon he must pay 50c a pound, and it is probably made to weigh heavier by a little "pickle" in the process. What is required is a means whereby the producer and consumer can get together more readily, and we could find the means if we had men representing the people in parliament who would be a trifle more interested in solving the common problems of the day.

The Times still points out that the speed limit for autos still holds. Do not observe the speed laws simply to avoid a fine, but rather that you may assist in making the streets safe for pedestrians.

It is noted that Canada's conscript army will be mobilized in battalions in the different cities. This will give the larger centres of population a chance to indulge in the usual disgraceful squabble as to who should get a battalion.

The Food Controller makes out a good case in his statement to the public, that it would disrupt the whole business fabric if he were to set prices and cut out the middlemen. If Mr. Hanna would go the whole way and explain why he allows sugar and wheat to be used for making beer and whisky the people would have a great deal more faith in him.

In a letter from Pte. Dell appearing in this issue, a very sensible request is made when he asks his people at home, after he has read of some of the high prices prevailing in Canada, not to send him luxuries, but the plainer things, and reading matter. This is a worth-while thought. Many boxes going to soldiers contain a good many things which are very expensive just now, and a hardship on some families to provide. It is splendid of the soldier lads to remind the home folk that they appreciate the sacrifice, but that they would be equally satisfied with the plainer things.

Can't Cut Out the Middlemen

In a statement given to the press last week Food Controller Hanna in a straight forward manner, points out some of the difficulties of his office, and as well draws the attention of those who would use force regarding fixing of prices, to the danger of doing so. Mr. Hanna says that under present conditions the adoption of a drastic policy of arbitrary price cutting would mean "temporary ruin to every city and town in the country."

He admits that an excessive number of middlemen is a great evil, but unless the people generally are willing to face a complete disruption of trade, he must proceed slowly and carefully. It has taken a great many years of luxurious living on the part of Canadians to bring about the present number of middlemen in all kinds of trade, and to do away with them at one stroke would, as the Controller says, work havoc not only in the cities, but even in small towns.

The Controller points out that there is too much duplication, and that there have long been too many city people and too few farmers in this Dominion is common knowledge, but it is not so well known among city people that there are too many distributors, packers, carriers, wholesalers, advertisers, printers, salesmen, brokers, sub-brokers, deputy brokers, assistants sub-brokers and the whole army of people in the services and professions that wait upon the middlemen. In the City of Toronto, in 1910 (the last census year) there were less than thirty thousand actual producers of goods, including a large proportion of those who produced only luxuries The balance of say, the hundred thousand wage earners in the City of Toronto must have been either servants, professional men or middlemen. This inflated staff of non-producers, not only in Toronto, but in every Canadian city and town, was and still is dependent for its wages upon the movement of farm goods to the city and city goods to the farm and all overspecialized, overelaborated, process which a luxurious civilization imagines are necessary to its happiness.

The whole statement of the Controller is very interesting, and every thinking man will appreciate the difficulties under which Mr. Hanna labors. He admitted however, that there is an evil in the middleman business, and accepting his understanding of the situation, we take it that the people of Canada have a right to expect that he will labor to eliminate that evil. It may not be eradicated in a day, or a month, or a year. The thing is, are we progressing in the right direction. We look to our high officials to lead.

HE DONE WITHOUT

One of the ladies of Port Elgin, who keeps her own house, and who, by the way, has a family and husband to look after, has written the following bit of verse for The Times. It has especial merit just at this time, and fairly well describes the attitude of the average housewife in this place:

Oh, you corn bread, Holly Gee;
It's good for Hanna, but not for me;
If he likes it, he can eat,
We should worry, but give us meat.

To try and save we know it's right;
To help those brave boys in the fight
But if the "big guns" do the same,
I'm sure we'll all get in the game.

It's great to talk when "mun" you've got,
But a man to eat such truck, it's rot.
When a man's to work ten hours a day,
Give him the meat, what do you say?

I'm sure that Hanna means it well,
But let him try it for a spell;
And if he gains a pound a day,
We will all get in it right away.

Now we must save, there aint a doubt,
So economize and do without,
To help our boys and do what's right;
But Hanna, too, is in this fight.

I wonder if he sends a box,
Or does his wife ever knit socks,
For if they do we know it's great,
I know the boys appreciate.

And when the boys get back we'll say
We helped in all come in our way.
Then when the train pulls in we'll shout
'Twas Hanna done it—He done without, we'll shout.

LIFT YOUR CORNS
OFF WITH FINGERS

Tells how to loosen a tender corn or callus so it lifts out without pain.

You reckless men and women who are pestered with corns and who have at least once a week invited an awful death from lockjaw or blood poison are now told by a Cincinnati authority to use a drug called freezone, which the moment a few drops are applied to any corn or callus the soreness is relieved and soon the entire corn or callus, root and all, lifts off with the fingers.

Freezone dries the moment it is applied, and simply shrivels the corn or callus without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue or skin. A small bottle of freezone will cost very little at any of the drug stores, but will positively rid one's feet of every hard or soft corn or hardened callus. If your druggist hasn't any freezone he can get it at any wholesale drug house for you

Rural School Fair

A Big Success

The school fair on Friday was a big success. The parents and children turned out in large numbers, more than a thousand persons being on the grounds.

Representative MacKay had experts to assist him, including Mr. Springstead, Mr. Duff and Mr. Clark, who handled things in splendid style.

The attractive feature was the parade of the scholars from the various schools. There were ten schools contesting, and every one of them presented a fine appearance with their banners and emblems.

The first prize went to S. S. No. 7 Saugeen. Miss Wallace had her scholars march in the form of "VII" and they did their movements well. But they were all good, and all deserve credit. No. 3 Saugeen, Miss Cairns, teacher, was second, No. 4 Saugeen, Miss Wells, third and Dunblane school Miss Brien, teacher, forth.

After this the public-speaking contest was staged. The addresses were listened to by a great crowd, and the speakers, although only small boys and girls, were heard most clearly, so well did they speak. The addresses were the best of the school fairs held here, and to say that the speakers reflected great credit on themselves, is putting it mildly. No. 7 school was again to the fore in this, Muriel Beany and Jessie Bailey winning second and third place, with little Elma Karcher of No. 5 taking the first place. Mary Bell, and Sandy McDonald both made splendid efforts, and so did Mary Muir and Bert Ross. The subjects were well selected, and the information given by the pupils was interesting and educative.

After this the scholars indulged in races and games under the supervision of the trustees, and the officials.

In the hall, Mr. Mackay said the exhibits were of better quality than usual, and altogether the boys and girls were learning to do things better each year.

There were exhibits of poultry, flowers, roots, vegetables, baking, sewing, and fancy work of all description.

The scholars sold patriotic buttons, to help in the movement to buy motor ambulances for the front.

On the grounds the pupils also operated a refreshment booth. In fact the fair belonged to school children, and it was a great day for them. They conducted themselves splendidly, and they undertook their tasks with enthusiasm, and performed them efficiently.

The prize list, when prepared, will appear in The Times.

OBITUARY

The following from The Fort William Times-Journal concerns a former well-known woman from Port Elgin, Mrs. Alex Ross. The Journal says:

After a lengthy illness, the death occurred this morning at six-thirty, at her late residence, 38 Algoma street north, Port Arthur, of Sarah, wife of Alex. Ross, the well known Cumberland street jeweler. Mrs. Ross was one of the best known ladies of the district, and her long residence at the head of the lakes and kindly disposition had won her hosts of friends who will regret to hear of her demise at the age of fifty-one years. For some time Mrs. Ross had been in failing health, and a few months ago Mr. Ross took her to Toronto, in the hope that medical treatment there might prove beneficial, but she returned home no better than when she left, and medical skill was unavailing, death resulting from paralysis. Deceased was born at Port Elgin, her maiden name being Eby. She is survived by her husband and two children, Fenton and Helen. Mrs. Ross was a Presbyterian and quite prominent in women's societies connected with the church.

THE VALLEY OF 10,000 SMOKES

Greatest Volcanic Region in the Whole World.

Alaskan Vale Dwarfs Other Districts.

The National Geographic Society here will get detailed scientific data on the Valley of the Ten Thousand Smokes, the greatest volcanic region in the world, about Mount Katmai in Alaska.

This valley, according to preliminary reports from Robert F. Griggs, director of the society's exploration expedition, is the first wonder of the world. It makes Vesuvius, renowned for centuries, appear as nothing but a toy by comparison.

There is a great volcanic region about Mount Katmai, a hundred miles in extent, literally filled by millions of active craters.

Dr. Griggs and his party, with complete scientific data and photographs of the region, is now on his way to Washington. The expedition is expected to reach Washington October 5th. Dr. Griggs telegraphed his discoveries immediately upon reaching civilization at Kodiac, Alas.

Hidden away in the centre of Alaska, Mount Katmai and this enormous volcanic region were unknown to the civilized world, until the great eruption of 1912 that nearly devastated the coast area. Alaskan Indians had told the story of the Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes, and the Mouth of Hell, but their descriptions were inadequate, it seems, in the face of scientific discoveries.

Explorations were made by the National Geographical Society in succeeding years, but the enormity of this volcanic region has just become known. The Mt. Katmai explosion in 1912 was the most terrific in the history of the world. The quantity of material thrown from the Katmai crater was vastly greater than that which resulted in the projection of the island of Krakatoa out of the bed of the Pacific ocean. The greatest effort of Vesuvius could not be compared with it. Practically the entire Alaskan peninsula and the islands of the Aleutian groups were covered inches deep in ashes, as were the decks of vessels hundreds of miles off the coast. The coast guard cutter Bear had to rescue whole communities threatened by the ash shower.

Announcement of Dr. Grigg's discoveries was made by Gilbert H. Grosvenor, director of the National Geographic society who received a telegram from Dr. Griggs announcing the safe arrival of his party from the interior and outlining some of its discoveries.

The survey of the exploration party proved that Katmai is the greatest crater on the face of the globe, being more than nine miles in circumference and 3,600 feet deep. The party also discovered a mud river seventeen miles long, and mapped 1,60- miles of territory hitherto uncharted. Two thousand photographs of the great volcano and the contiguous territory were secured, and a complete collection of plants, insects, birds and geological data is being brought back to the United States by the expedition. Gasses from the vents are also being brought back for chemical analysis.

Mr. Grosvenor announces that the expedition, judging from Dr. Griggs' preliminary report, is one of the most successful ever undertaken by the National Geographic Society, and that the data collected by it will be among the foremost contributions to the science of the earth's surface since the dawn of the twentieth century.

This expedition set sail for the Mt. Katmai region from Seattle on May 25th.

Dr. Griggs announces that the expedition sustained no casualties and that the whole party has returned to civilization in perfect health.—Washington Times.

NERVOUS TROUBLE

The nerve system is the governing system of the whole body, controlling the heart, lungs, digestion and the brain; so it is not surprising that nervous disturbances should cause acute distress. The first stages of nervous debility are noted by irritability and restlessness, in which the victims seem to be oppressed by their nerves. The matter requires immediate attention, for nothing but suitable treatment will prevent a complete breakdown. The victim, however, need not despair for even severe nervous disorders may be cured by improving the condition of the blood. It is because Dr. Williams Pink Pills actually make new, rich blood that this medicine has cured extreme nervous disorders after all other treatment had failed. The nerves thrive on the new blood made by these pills; the appetite improves, digestion is better, sleeplessness no longer troubles the former nerve shattered victim, and life generally takes on a cheerful aspect. Every sufferer from nerve troubles, no matter how slight, should lose no time in giving Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial, thus regaining their old-time health and comfort.

You can get Dr. Williams Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine, or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

ARMY ELEPHANTS.

Their Skill in Moving Big Guns That Have Become Stalled.

In India elephants are used in many ways in the army, especially in moving artillery. Of their work in this line a British writer says:

"When a gun comes to grief the elephant marches up with the important air of an experienced engineer and deliberately inspects the state of affairs. Thrusting his trunk around the spoke of a wheel, he gives it a lift as if to ascertain the depth and tenacity of the mud and then quietly walks around and does the same by the other wheel, dropping it again with a funny twinkle of the eye as if he said to himself, 'All right; I can start her, I think.'

"Then he deliberates for a few minutes, gives a slight push here and a slight push there, when, having at last made up his mind as to the best mode of procedure, he probably applies his forehead—which has been padded for the purpose—to the muzzle of the gun and, uttering a shrill, trumpet-like sound as a signal for the gun bullocks to pull together, pushes against it with all his weight, while the bullocks obey the signal and pull away too.

"This generally starts the gun. But if the bullocks are sulky and refuse to obey the signal the elephant gets perfectly furious and rushes at them, brandishing his trunk with such ferocity as usually compels obedience."

A GOOD IDEA

Lieut.-Col. George McLaren Brown, the European manager of the C. P. R., writes to the Tariff Reformer and Empire Monthly in England, urging a comprehensive scheme by which the returned soldiers could be placed on the land in so far as they desired it—a scheme by which lands closed to the public would be fully opened up—not a few parcels of land, such as were noticed in the press, and which would not give a square foot to all who might seek this means of settlement, but a plan by which large numbers could be accommodated on the lands in the mother country. Mr. Brown refers to the plan of the C.P.R., which offers improved farms, in selected colonies, with distinctive military names, improved by the company; and assisted colonization farms of 320 acres each, selected by the intending settler, and then improved by him with assistance from the company. Easy terms of payment are offered, carried over twenty years, but the point that Mr. Brown insists on is that it is not people out of the [illegible] that Canada wants, because such are not desired in the Dominion but people who are likely to succeed. He urges that the whole question of reconstruction be tackled with vigor on the other side.

Caustic Criticism.

A young New York man, a member of one of the first families as far as wealth is concerned, had been in the habit of writing poems, which, unable to dispose of, he managed to get printed in certain publications by paying therefor at advertising rates. He attended a social gathering at which a cynical old fellow named Timble, who despised the would-be poet, knowing of his manner of obtaining publicity, chanced to be present. The rich young man lost no chance of referring to his "works," and finally remarked, ostentatiously, that he was born on the same day that Washington Irving died.

"Both of which occurrences," snapped old Timble, "have had a very depressing effect upon American literature."

They Simply Won't Be Married.

Several young men were recently asked by a writer in the Woman's Home Companion why they refused to be married. Their answers throw considerable light on what is becoming a national problem. One said that girls are too clever for the men nowadays—that he wanted "just a wife," and the girl he had been engaged to marry was making more money than he was and refused to give up her work. Another complained of the expensive tastes of the modern young woman, another that he had set out to accomplish certain things before marrying. Still another refused to be sentenced to hard labor for life, and one complained that the local girls were "a bit narrow."

Waste Not—Want Not.

Food waste in war time is a crime. People in Europe are starving for food. Belgium is devastated and the crusts Canada throws away would be picked out of the dirt and eaten by the starving Belgians, Serbs, Poles and other unfortunates of the war zone.

Canada wastes an enormous amount of good food every year. The Food Controller gives $50,000,000 as a conservative estimate. Expressed in wheat at $2 a bushel, this would be 25,000,000 bushels, whereas we are asked to save but 12,000,000 this year out of normal consumption. Expressed in meat at say 40 cents a pound it would be 125,000,000 pounds, or enough to supply a Canadian army of 500,000 men for 200 days.

The bones thrown into the garbage pails every day contain the essence of hundreds of plates of soup.

The bread thrown there every day is a waste of thousands of loaves.

No bones should leave the kitchen until every scrap of marrow has been boiled out of it; no scrap of bread should ever be thrown away.

The woman who wastes a crust, wastes the war effort of the farmer, the miller, the storekeeper and the transportation and delivery men. This is a time when every man's work is valuable to the country to supplement the invaluable work of our soldiers.

Watch everything. Watch against waste in the kitchen and in the pantry. Watch against waste in the cellar and in the dining-room. As much food is wasted in the eating as in the cooking.

The Use of Candy.

Pure candy is good for children. Pure sugar is good for grown people. Of course there are exceptions to every rule. If the doctor prescribes a diet and orders a patient to refrain from sweets the patient is bound to obey his adviser. What is the use of calling a physician and paying him for suggestions if the latter are treated with indifference? People in ordinary health need not be afraid to gratify an appetite which craves sweets. Those the march hold out better if they have been telling us lately that soldiers on the march hold out better if they have rations of sugar than if their food omits this useful commodity. A fondness for sugar is often a defense against the temptation to use alcoholic stimulants. The inebriate does not care very much about pure sweets.

TORONTO FAT STOCK SHOW

The Toronto Fat Stock Show will be held at the Union Stock Yards, West Toronto, on Friday and Saturday, Dec. 7 and 8, 1917. Premium lists can be had on application from the secretary. The Toronto Fat Stock Show this year bids fair to eclipse that of all previous years. Finished animals will bring big prices, so that it is up to the stock raiser to increase production by putting 100 lbs. of finish on his steers. The Toronto Fat Stock Show is now a recognized institution, the largest thing of its kind in the Dominion, if not on the continent of America.

TRADE BRIEFS

Due to war conditions, Norway's entire 1916 fish catch o[illegible]4,829,839 pounds was disposed of at high prices. At Stavanger, the centre of the fish canneries, eighteen new factories were built to hande the trade. American canning materials are greatly in demand.

Competent representation and vigorous advertising campaigns will be needed to develop a demand for American goods in Russia at the end of the war. Merchandise from this country is popular in Odessa. Shoes are badly needed at the present time.

Six training schools for mine workers are to be provided in the Johannesburg, South Africa, consular district. One school has been established and accommodates sixty apprentices. The course extends through two years, and the students are self-supporting.

Cuba's sugar production this year will amount to 2,000,000 tons, which figure equals last year's record production. This is considered exceptional, because of the poor quality of the cane and the losses due to the revolution.

Canned goods are in demand in Italy.

One thousand tons of binder twine are needed in Tunis. Correspondence should be in French.

Brass and copper wire on spools is in demand in British East Africa.

Yarn suitable for knitting stockings is needed by a firm in Mexico City, Mexico.

A Portuguese firm in Lisbon is in the market for electrical supplies, gasoline motors, gasoline, oil and tin plate.

Representation of American makers of manufactured products is desired by an Italian firm in Milan.

An agricultural society is being planned in Greece with a view to establishing more intensive farming in that country. American agricultural machinery valued at $700,000 has been ordered, and fifty men will go from the States to demonstrate the several machines.

Canoes and rowboats fitted with detachable motors will be needed in Colombia, South America, at the close of the war.

Lumber is needed in Tunis. There is also a market for wine cask staves.

Knitting needles are wanted in Spain.

Counting the Salmon.

The Wood river in Alaska has been closed to fishing for many years and is resorted to for breeding purposes by red salmon escaping the nets in Nushagak bay. The counting of the salmon was first undertaken in 1909, and has been continued annually since that time, except in 1914.

The counting is made possible by throwing a rack across the stream and compelling the fish to pass through a narrow gate, where they are easily visible to persons immediately above. Agents of the fisheries bureau in relays are kept on duty day and night for the entire period of the run, and the tally is kept by an automatic counting device manipulated by hand.

The highest count for any one day in recent years was 25,554.—New York Sun.

VAMPIRE OF THE OCEAN.

"Ironing" the Devilfish is a Mode of Flirting With Death.

"Ironing" the devilfish, the largest of all the rays and one of the largest creatures of the sea, means flirting with death. The devilfish is also known as the ocean vampire. Its scientific name is Manta vampyrus, and all three names tell something of its habits. It gets its name devilfish from the fact that projecting from either side of its head is a hornlike appendage, which in reality is a detached part of the pectoral fin or wing. The horns, sometimes three feet long and freely movable, are used to bring food to its mouth.

These fish have been known to circle above the bow of a boat, lifting the vessel out of the water and deluging the occupants of the boat with gallons of water. When they flop back to the surface they make a noise that can be heard far off. Exciting? Dangerous? The sport is both. The only thing that saves devilfish hunters at a time like this is preparedness. Every man must be at his station, all must obey the will of the harpooner, and if a bit of luck is thrown in the manta is killed.

The devilfish gets its name of manta, meaning blanket, from the pearl divers of the Carribean Sea. An authenticated story is told of a manta that towed eight boats, lashed together, for hours until finally the crews were compelled to cut the rope and let the devilfish escape.

Its vitality is wonderful. There are records of specimens escaping after having been harpooned, lanced and shot many times with rifles of heavy calibre. It fights even after the brain and heart have been pierced. Death comes only when the spinal cord, back of the brain, is severed.—New York Sun.

THE SIBERIA OF FACT.

It Differs Greatly From the Province of Fiction.

Siberia is a Russian province larger than Europe. Such a bald, guide-book introduction gives, perhaps, an idea as good as any other of the vastness of that great land which stretches from the Urals to the Pacific, and from the Arctic Ocean to the Chinese frontier. Perhaps no other country is more consistently and persistently misrepresented than Siberia. To the world at large the name still conjures up visions of eternal snow, of frozen wastes and frozen rivers, of bleak, forbidding uplands and great, treeless valleys and, every now and again, a long file of chained convicts "slowly and toilfully, verst after verst, traversing the continent on their three years' march to that great inferno of the Far East, the convict island of Sakhalin."

This traditional Siberia was for many years a favorite field for the melo-dramatist and for the novelist who desired to give an utterly free rein to their imagination. Siberia, however, is far from being a "frozen waste" or any other kind of waste. In winter, it is true, there is snow more than enough, but, by the end of April, spring has set in with remarkable beauty and charm, and, during the weeks that follow, Siberia makes up for lost time. Of course, in a country so vast, conditions vary greatly in different parts; but, generally speaking, the land is astonishingly fertile, and those who know the country best confidently predict that it will, some day, become one of the great granaries of the world. The Russian authorities have known all about this for years, as they have known of Siberia's immense resources in other directions, and every means has been resorted to secure the colonization of the territory by Russians.

As early in its history as 1654, Siberia began to be a place of exile and a penal colony. Rebels under Peter the Great, courtiers of rank under the empresses, Polish confederates under Catherine II., the "Decembrists" under Nicholas I., nearly 50,000 Poles, after the insurrection of 1863 were exiled to Siberia, and vast armies of political prisoners since have passed through the great clearing station at Chelyabinsk, on the eastern side of the Urals, and have been transported thence to their allotted zone of prison somewhere between the Urals and the Pacific, 3,000 miles away. Prisons, indeed, are common enough buildings in Siberia. Irkutsk, for instance, is literally surrounded by great prisons for which generations have received the criminal and political offenders of Russia. Then, as imprisonment for any length of time has almost invariably carried with it exile for life, scarcely any of the prisoners, once released, have been allowed to return to Russia. The population of Irkutsk, as of so many other Siberian towns, is mainly composed of former convicts or their descendants.

A convict in Russia, however, is very far from being necessarily a criminal. And these towns, such as Omsk and Irkutsk, have no appearance of being convict settlements. They are not the overgrown, dreary steppe villages which many will still picture them, but thriving and modern cities, with lofty buildings and broad streets, long and straight, with all the side streets set at right angles, schools, universities, theatres, and hotels in which the traveller finds himself amidst the most approved hotel surroundings. Then there are public gardens, and bands, whilst everybody dresses very much in the same way as people do in Europe or America.

All that, however, is the best side of Siberia. A very little closer inspection only is required to understand the full misery of the life of thousands of those exiles, so many of them whom are now returning joyfully to Russia. The horrors of the proscribed area, the utter inadequacy of the government allowance, the loneliness of the exile, often highly educated, condemned to live within the confines of some village peopled with semi-civilized peasantry, would require many books adequately to describe. Certainly for no part of the Russian dominions will the great release of March 17, 1917, be more full of immediate blessing than for Siberia."

The Superannuated Officer.

They commissioned him a trawler with a high and raking bow,
Black and workmanlike as any pirate craft,
With crew of steady seamen very handy in a row,
And a brace of little barkers fore and aft;
And he blessed the Lord, his Maker, when he faced the North Sea sprays
And exceedingly extolled his lucky star
That had given his youth renewal in the evening of his days
(With the rank of Captain Dugout, R. N. R.)

He is as jolly as a sandboy, he is happier than a king,
And his trawler is the darling of his heart
(With her cuddy like a cupboard where a kitten couldn't swing,
And a smell of fish that simply won't depart);
He has found upon occasion sundry targets for his gun;
He could tell you tales of mine and submarine;
Oh, the holes he's in and out of and the glorious risks he runs
Turn his son—who's in a Super-dreadnaught—green.

He is fit as any fiddler; he is hearty, hale and tanned;
He is proof against the coldest gales that blow;
He has never felt so lively since he got his first command,
(Which is rather more than forty years ago),
And of all the joyful picnics of his wild and wandering youth—
Little dust-ups from Taku to Zanzibar—
There was none to match the picnic, he declares in sober sooth,
That he has as Captain Dugout, R. N. R.

Selenium is Sensitive.

By substituting a selenium cell for the human eye at the telescope M. Fournier d'Albe believes it would be possible to detect stars five magnitudes fainter than any now observable, thus enormously increasing the powers of the greatest instruments. Theoretically a selenium cell of sixteen square inches would register the light of a twenty-eighth magnitude star, but this would require longer exposure—several days—than would be practicable.

You never can tell. A man may be as deaf as a post and still have sound judgment.

NEW GERMAN FATHERLAND PARTY FIRM FOR WORLD DOMINATION

Tirpitz, at Opening Meeting Backs Outrages, Demands War Indemnity.

Copenhagen cable says: The new German Fatherland party held its first open meeting in Berlin last night, and the crowd in Philharmonic Hall was so enormous that an overflow meeting was held nearby. No government officials attended either meeting. Duke Johann Albrecht of Mecklenburg-Schwerin opened both meetings, and Admiral von Tirpitz was the principal speaker at each.

Admiral von Tirpitz pointed out that the submarine warfare is Germany's legal right, and that Belgium now has her just deserts. Belgium, the speaker declared, was always England's bridgehead, and that Germany must do her utmost in preventing England from becoming Belgium's protecting master. Admiral von Tirpitz further declared that peace without a heavy war indemnity means Germany's defeat and the victory of Anglo-American capitalism. Admiral von Tirpitz was greeted enthusiastically by the audiences.

Among the speakers was Dr. von Wolfgang Kapp.

The Rheinische Westfaelische Zeitung, of Essen, recently announced the formation of a new "patriotic party," the leaders of which are Duke Johann Albrecht, of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Admiral von Tirpitz, and Dr. von Wolfgang Kapp. The party's initial proclamation declared hostility to the Reichstag's peace resolution and added that the party was non-political and would be dissolved on the day peace is signed.

TROOPS NEVER COLD OR WET

In the British Campaign in Palestine.

Water is Scarce and Scorpions Busy.

With British Forces in Palestine, cable says: The various stages of the British campaign which has now brought them into Palestine are marked by the stations on the wonderful new railway across the Sinai Desert. Just the names of these stations tell how the Turks have been driven back step by step—Romani, Katia, El Arish and Rafa, marking the successive phases of their retirement.

The country in which the army now is operating is on the fringe of the desert which divides Egypt from the centre of Palestine. So far as army observation goes, it does not flow with either milk or honey; if it would only flow with water, the army would ask no more of it.

It has been a battlefield from time immemorial, a Flanders of the East. Modern Gaza is said not to be on the same site as the ancient city, whose gates Samson made so free. It makes a pleasant enough town, but is a very unhealthy spot in which to live.

The privileged traveler alights at the last station of the desert railway in the midst of a country of rolling downs not unlike some parts of England or of the Central West. Much barley is grown here.

Inland the country is flatter and beyond the Turkish line is a range of hills stretching away to Beersheba in the east. The wadis, or water courses, are the most distinctive feature. The most important of these is the Ghuzze, which varies in width from about thirty yards to full half a mile.

Nearly every part of the British Empire is represented on the beach at bathing time—men from every county of England, Scotchmen, Irishmen, Welshmen, New Zealanders, Indians and Egyptians of all types. The scene is an unforgettable one, and the swim is always followed by a delectable lunch of figs and olives, fresh from the trees.

The fly nuisance is the army's greatest affliction. Drastic sanitary measures have now done a great deal to diminish the evil. Nothing, however, can save the soldiers from their other great discomfort, the sand which continually blows into eyes, nose and mouth.

A great many men have been bitten by scorpions, which though not serious is no joke, especially if the offender is one of the large black variety. Tarantulas also are fairly common, but they fly away whenever possible and only bite if driven into a corner.

On the whole, it is not a bad country for campaigning. The soldier need never be cold and never can he get wet.

NO "SHOCK TROOPS."

Russia Will Abolish Such Battations.

Petrograd cable says: The military section of the Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates has voted in favor of a motion demanding the dissolution of "shock" battalions. The reasons given for this action are: First, from the viewpoint of principle it is inadmissable that there should be in the army groups of privileged soldiers who arrogate to themselves the right to die for the liberty f the country when this right belongs to all soldiers; second, that "shock" battalions place the Russian army in the position of an army which refuses to defend liberty, and, third, that "shock" battalions diminish the capacity of the army by creating on one side a category of heroes and on the other a mass of conscienceless sldiers.

FRENCH PRAISE FOR CANADIANS

Boulogne Paper Calls Them Ideal Soldiers

Of All Types, but United for Service.

A Paris cable says: French correspondents with the British troops have been lavish in their praise of the Canadians and their fighting at Lens. One of the most influential of the French provincial papers is Le Télégramme, published at Boulogne, and the following literal translation, without comment, of an article on Aug. 25, speaks for itself. It says:

"The Canadians at the present time completely hold the limelight in the theatre of war. It is these picked troops that have been given the incomparable, the glorious and difficult task of retaking Lens—Lens, where each house is a fortress; Lens and its slag heaps bristling with machine guns and trenches which the enemy only manage to hold by continual reinforcement.

"This Canadian army, although only raised during the war, is curious to study for several reasons. Recruited exclusively by voluntary methods, it is composed of various elements, curiously representing the world crusade against the abhorred Germans.

"One meets trappers, colonials, hunters, men who have lived full lives of adventure and peaceful merchants of Montreal. There are battalions that speak only the true French of the eighteenth century. Some have names like 'Gros René,' others 'Oeil De Faucon,' and all these various elements are assimilated in the great British army, respecter of the traditions of others.

"These trappers, these hunters, these woodsmen, trained to stand the limit of fatigue by their hard life, are the ideal soldiers. They keep themselves in condition, even when they are at rest, by their games and sports, which they practise with fury, but with method. Football and baseball, which they excel in, makes them grenade throwers of the finest class. They can jump in their competitions five feet six inches, and when the time comes they can do the same in combat. They have not abandoned their national game of lacrosse where these talents are necessary.

"There is one part of the Canadian army which is made up of foresters who are actually working in England and France with their own machinery. They can, it is well known, cut down a forest in the twinkling of en un clin d'oeil. You have to admire their marvellous cutting, while you sigh for our poor trees, sacrificed in this way for the country's cause. It would take several columns of this paper to relate the splendid deeds of these adventurous and hardy men."

GERMAN TERMS AS TO BELGIUM

Will Evacuate On Certain Conditions,

Including Right to Develop Commerce.

London cable says: Germany has agreed to evacuate Belgium on certain condition, it is declared in a German official statement, according to a despatch from Berne to-day, given out by the Wireless Press.

Germany, it is stipulated, must have the right to develop her economic enterprises freely in Belgium, especially in Antwerp.

The proposal was made in a supplementary note to the Vatican, replying to the peace initiative of Pope Benedict. It was in the form of a verbal communication made by Foreign Secretary Kuehlmann to the Papal Nuncio at Munich, wherein the Foreign Secretary specified the conditions under which Germany was willing to conclude peace on the basis of the evacuation of Belgium.

The verbal note to the Papal Nuncio said Germany would contribute a share of the compensation to be paid to Belgium for war damages. Belgium would be required, it said, to give a guarantee that any such menace as that which threatened Germany in 1911 would in future be excluded.

Belgium must undertake to maintain administrative separation of the Flanders and Walloon districts introduced by Germany, the verbal note says, because this separation corresponds to the wishes of a majority of the Belgian people, and because Germany desires such separation on account of racial sympathy.

A semi-official communication in the German press in explanation of the new German proposals says the Government intentionally avoided stating more clearly the conditions thus outlined. These conditions are said to be compatible with the dignity of Belgium. Germany avoided mentioning the question of the throne, because this was a Belgian domestic matter. Germany, the communication says, will agree to any Government in Belgium which accepts the conditions set forth. The principal question is how the guarantees enumerated can be formulated.

CROP REPORTS OF THE WEEK

Grain Yield Not Up to Expectations.

Good Acreage of Fall Wheat Already In.

Toronto report: In a summary of weekly crop reports made by district representatives to the Ontario Department of Agriculture, it is stated that threshing of grain is turning out well, although the yield is hardly in keeping with the showing of straw, nor up to the earlier high expectations of the growers. Oats are relatively plumper in the grain than wheat.

A good acreage of fall wheat is already in, but some later sowing is yet to be done. A portion of the winter rye has been sown, but more will be put in up to as late as the first week in October.

Both husking and silo corn have not cobbed as well as usual, and the crop generally will be below the average. The frost of the 10th of September has caused a number of farmers to fill their silos with rather immature corn.

There has been less rot and scab among potatoes than was anticipated, but the drouth of the past few weeks has been stopping growth of late varieties.

Mangels and turnips and other field roots are looking above the average, but the present drouth is beginning to try them.

Pastures are described as being in from fair to good condition. The second crop of clover is turing out only fair for seed.

Finished cattle and lambs are hard to find, but there is a fair supply of hogs in sight, and prices are holding up well. All classes of live stock are healthy.

Milk has decreased with falling pastures, according to a majority of reports, while others claim that the flow is keeping up well for the season.

Fodder supplies for the winter on the whole will be fully sufficient, but while there will be an abundance of hay and straw, corn will be scarcer than usual.

Owing to favorable weather for outdoor work, the labor stringency is not being felt so keenly as was expected, and should a fair share of open weather continue, farmers generally will be able to complete the acreage of plowing and other fall work intended. The light orchard yields also have relieved a number of pickers and packers of fruit for other farm work. Silo filling is progressing well.

One representative reports that farm tractors have accounted for a considerably larger acreage of wheat having been sown this fall, and adds that there is no doubt that the tractors will be kept busy until the frost makes plowing impossible.

ARGENTINA IS SOLID FOR WAR

200,000 March in Parade Through the Capital

In Quickly Organized Demonstration.

Buenos Aires cable says: The greatest demonstration that Buenos Aires has ever seen took place yesterday as an evidence of the almost unanimous feeling of the people against Germany. There were 200,000 marchers in line, and they proceeded through the streets, led by a commission of Uruguayan Senators and deputies, singing the national anthem, and demanding a rupture with Germany. This vast number did not include the thousands that lined the thoroughfares as spectators. The populace threw flowers and tiny flags from balconies and windows on the marchers, and cheered the Uruguayan Congressmen wildly, their presence being evidence of the solidarity of Uruguay with the Argentine Republic.

All business was absolutely suspended, and the stores were closed and shuttered. The demonstration was organized in 24 hours, indicating the unanimity of public opinion with respect to Argentina's relations with Germany.

Serious disorders occurred in various parts of the Capital to-day as the result of an anti-German manifestation and strike agitations. As an outcome of the firing upon street cars by strikers or sympathizers an inspector was killed.

PERU'S ULTIMATUM.

Huns Must Give Satisfaction for Sinking.

Lima, Peru, Cable.—The Government has instructed the Peruvian Minister at Berlin to present to the German Government a demand that satisfactory be given within eight days for the sinking of the Peruvian bark Lorton. If the demand is not met diplomatic relations will be broken off.

The Lorton was sunk inside Spanish waters last February by a German submarine. Peru declared the sinking to be unjustifiable and insisted on payment of an indemnity by Germany. The German Government offered to submit the case to a Prize Court.

CANADIAN RIFLE MEETING HELD BACK OF THE LINES

Event Has Lasted Several Days During Lull On Their Front.

(By Stewart Lyon, special correspondent of the Canadian Press.)

Canadian Army Headquarters in cable says: The Canadian rifle meeting, which has been in progress for several days, ended to-day. The winners in the grand aggregate, in various snap shooting and rapid-firing competitions, were: Officers and sergeants, Major Morris, Ontario, 81; Sergeant Simons, Ontario, 71; Sergeant Marshall, British Columbia, Lieut. Downie, Alberta, and Sergeant Boyd, equal at 69. Corporals and privates: Private Morrison, Alberta, 72; Private Fanchor, Alberta, 72; Privates White and Lunn, Alberta, equal, 71.

Another Albertan, Sergeant Wright, won the prize for rapid shooting, with a score of 41, five more than the next competitor. In this match 15 rounds had to be fired at a moving target of a man in one minute. The rifle had to be twice re-loaded during the minute, with clips of five cartridges. In the match between the privates, Private Craven, of an Ontario battalion, obtained 41, against 39 by the second man.

In the sniping competition, open to all ranks, the sport was very popular. At a range of 200 yards, five rounds were fired at a head exposed for four seconds, with intervals of three seconds, anywhere along a trench front of forty yards, for a shield given to the winner as the best Canadian sniper. Private Harress, of an Ontario battalion, had to shoot off a tie against Private Brierly, of British Columbia. Harress won. The others who found places among the first six were: Privates Digue, Ontario; Inglis, Alberta; McLaren, Quebec; Manderson, Ontario, and Hall, Manitoba, tried for sixth place.

The battalion challenge cup was won by a Light Horse team, with Ontario and Alberta battalions as second and third. Alberta had four battalion teams among the first ten and only one other province, Ontario, had two.

In the platoon competitions, Alberta also made an excellent record, securing, with the first team the remarkable score of 67 hits in one of the figures exposed for ten minutes to twenty-eight advancing riflemen, who began firing at 500 yards, and continued until they reached 100 yards from the figure.

NEUTRAL SHIPS TO AID ALLIES

U. S. Heads Expects Many in Service Soon.

Making Headway With Norway, Holland.

Washington report: It was stated to-day that an agreement might be reached shortly by the export administrative board and the State Department for placing a large part of the neutral tonnage into active service. The administrative board is observing strict secrecy in regard to whatever progress is being made with both Norway and Holland. More than [illegible] tons of neutral shipping is being tied up, its use made unavailable to either America or the Allies, on account of Germany's submarine activities. The use of this tonnage is badly needed by the powers at war with Germany for war trades or to replace their shipping which could be employed in the war trades.

Official figures on the amount of tonnage available for the Allies are not obtainable, but careful estimates have placed the total amount at about 25,000,000 tons, including neutral tonnage used by them. These figures are near the danger point, according to experts, but there is a confident expectation that at an early date at least [illegible] more tons will be utilized by America and the neutral countries, possibly excepting Sweden, and that sooner or later Japan and the neutrals together will increase those figures to [illegible] tons.

Whether the neutral tonnage will be employed in coastline shipping and in the South American and Pacific trades, or as required to transport war supplies, has not yet been disclosed.

GEESE SAVED BRITISH FORCE

Flight at Night Warned the Commander.

And 200 German Raiders Met Doom.

With British Forces in Salonika, cable says: (Correspondence)—This is the story of how the geese of Kara Zir gave the warning and saved a British detachment.

When the Bulgars left their native fastnesses and came down into the plains, their advance was halted by a certain famous river and a historic lake. A British company was holding the Upper Lake, for it was divided into two parts connected by the river. The company was charged with responsibility for the upper lake and five miles of the connecting stream as far as Kaise Zir. They had absolute command of the lake, thanks to the motor-boats, and a crossing there was inconceivable, but the river flowed through the maze of reeds and swamps and forests, most parts of which appeared absolutely impenetrable from the British side. A feeling of comparative safety pervaded the British camp.

Then one evening the Orderly officer set out from the camp on his bicycle to visit two outposts up the river nearly two miles from the camp. It was very dark. As he neared the sentry, he heard the movement of wings, and distinguished flock after flock of geese flying from their night rest among the reeds.

"Looks odd," he remarked to the sentry. Then to a sergeant, "I'll take one man, sergeant, and we'll cycle down the path and have a look."

The path ran a quarter of a mile along the marsh and then died an abrupt death in a stifling fence of reeds. The officer and his orderly dismounted and listened. They could discern over in the swamp a long line of men in single file.

Back at the picket post, the orderly sent a man to warn the camp, while he remained behind to keep the enemy raiders under observation.

The raiders were two hundred strong, under command of a German officer. They kept to the path until just before it came into a clearing. Then they halted and prepared to attack. They got into a loose sort of open order and came on quickly. At that moment the British officer fired four shots. Immediately a light over the British camp appeared. The glare was dazzling. There was a moment's silence and then a roar of fire. It was a complete surprise. The raiders were bunched close, and must have had fifty casualties in the first fusillade. They made no attempt to resist, but flung everything away and made for the maize fields.

The first person picked up was the German officer in charge of the enterprise, who had been hit in the thigh. Altogther there were 25 dead and 58 wounded, while 25 more surrendered during the morning at different places and more kept giving themselves up for several days. Probably not more than five or six ever got back to the Bulgar lines.

SINN FEINER STARVES.

Hunger Strike in Prison is Successful.

Dublin cable says: Thomas Ashe, a Sinn Fein leader, has died in a hospital here as the result of a hunger strike upon which he entered some time ago.

Ashe commanded the rebels in the eastern riots at Ashbourne in 1916, when several members of the constabulary were killed. He was sentenced to penal servitude for life, but was released last June under amnesty arrangements. Recently he was again sentenced by court martial to a year's imprisonment for a seditious speech, but immediately upon being imprisoned began a hunger strike, which resulted in his death.

So far as available records show Ashe is the only person who has died in prison recently from voluntary starvation, although numbers of persons—notably the suffragettes—have gone on hunger strike in England when they were imprisoned for infractions of the law. Ashe prior to his conviction in connection with the Ashbourne riots had visited the United States on a financial mission for the Sinn Fein League.

E. AFRICAN HUNS ARE DISPERSED

Remaining German Groups Are Broken Up.

Driven Back in All Areas With Severe Loss.

London cable says: The following summary on the campaign in German East Africa was issued to-day by the British War Office:

"The enemy remaining in the field at the beginning of September were in three principal groups. The first was in the Mbemkuru Valley region, the second was in the Lukeledi Valley and southwest of Lindi, and the third was based on Mahenge.

"On Sept. 19 the British advance in the direction of Kilwa was resumed and the enemy driven north of the principal passes over the Mbemkuru River. He evacuated Mihambia, retreating to Mjingo. Simultaneously we attacked a larger German group at Ndessa, compelling the enemy to evacuate that town. The enemy was retiring on the Mbemkuru, pursued by our main columns, when he found his retreat barred by our Nigerian infantry south of Ndessa. After severe fighting in which the enemy suffered heavy losses, he was dispersed into small parties.

"In the western area we engaged the enemy at Mpondas and the Ligomba hills, [illegible] miles southwest of Mahenge, while the Belgian forces are approaching Mahenge from the north."

MURDERED DEPORTING OFFICER

Newport, Vt., Report.—Angered because he had been ordered deported to Canada, Robert J. Peddy, of Quebec, opened fire with a revolver upon Daniel J. McDermott, a Federal immigration inspector, and J. P. Monocue, a local police officer, to-night. Monocue fell dead with a bullet in his heart and McDermott was seriously injured, having wounds in his stomach and wrist.

ANOTHER AIR RAID ATTEMPT UPON ENGLAND

Defense Guns Prevented the Foe From Reaching London.

20 CASUALTIES

People Are Learning to Take Cover, and So Fewer Suffer.

London cable says: Another hostile aeroplane raid on London took place to-night. There were two attacks apparently, for after a forty-minute quiet interval anti-aircraft guns resumed firing in the London district. In the first attack, after brisk firing by the defensive guns, lasting only ten minutes, the raiders were driven off without succeeding in reaching the city of London.

The firing of the anti-aircraft guns in the second attack was of only brief duration. The raiders were finally driven off and the police gave out the "All clear" signal at 9.30 o'clock.

A report of the raid was issued by Field Marshal French as follows:

"The Thames Estuary was again the objective of a hostile air raid this evening. The Kent and Essex coast was crossed at various points and a few bombs were dropped, but no casualties are yet reported.

"One raider penetrated as far as the south-eastern outskirts of London, where two bombs fell, causing some twenty casualties."

MONDAY NIGHT'S RAID.

It appears that the fierce battle which the British aeroplanes and anti-aircraft artillery put up forced the German aeroplane raiders to leave London Monday night without dropping any considerable part of their cargo of explosives. One of the London districts received several bombs with rather less important results than on the occasion of previous visits by raiders. Two bombs fell in the Thames near a bridge, throwing a column of water so high that it splashed clear over the walls.

The enemy remained over London at a great height for the greater part of two hours and the raid appears to have been on a pretentious scale, but it was even more abortive than previous attempts. Although the visitors arrived early in the evening, Londoners have taken to heart the advice of the authorities about seeking cover, and this accounts in part for the small number of casualties. It is safe to say, however, that at least three-fourths and probably four-fifths of the casualties were suffered by persons who had failed to take cover or persisted out of curiosity in watching the overhead spectacle from the inadequate shelter of balconies or doorways.

A suburban county official, named Lapwood, dropped dead from over-excitement during the raid.

DAMAGE VERY LIGHT.

Viewed by daylight this morning, the damage resulting from Monday night's visit appeared to be surprisingly slight. The number of bombs dropped in the London district was small, and the practical results were almost negligible.

The chief damage visible this morning was broken glass. In one spot, where a heavy bomb landed squarely in the middle of the street a hole four feet deep was torn in the pavement. The spot was fenced off early in the morning and men were at work repairing the pavement. The concussion of this bomb broke glass over several acres, including windows in neighboring hotels, in which are many Canadians, Australians and Americans.

Only three persons were killed by this explosion. All of them were standing in a door watching the explosion of a shrapnel overhead. In this district about half a dozen persons were wounded, mostly by breaking glass. Wagon loads of glass were swept up from the pavements and carried away early in the morning. Two or three other bombs which fell in London caused even less damage.

The following official report was given out by Lord French, commander of the Home Defence:

"Aeroplane raid. The latest reports concerning last night's aeroplane raid show that the group of raiders which approached London was driven off by the fire of anti-aircraft guns.

"Only one, or at the most two, machines penetrated the defences.

"The casualties in all the raided districts reported by the police up to the present are:

"KILLED, 17.

"INJURED, 70.

"The material damage was not great.

ZEPPELINS DRIVEN OFF.

"Airship raid: Enemy airships crossed the Yorkshire and Lincolnshire coasts between midnight and 3 a.m.

"There is no evidence of their having penetrated to any distance inland.

"They were driven off by gunfire, from various defended localities which they attempted to approach.

"Bombs were dropped at one coast town, three women being slightly injured.

"Little material damage was caused."

BERLIN NAMES PLACES BOMBED.

Berlin cable says: Official announcement was made to-day that German aviators last night dropped bombs on the heart of London and on Dover, Southend, Chatham and Sheerness, and also on Dunkirk, Northern France. All the machines returned undamaged, the statement says.

The Ford Saves the Hay and Oats the Horses Eat

FIVE acres of land are required to maintain one horse for a year, according to the U. S. Department of Agriculture. The same five acres would produce nearly enough food for two people. If 40,000 farmers each replaced one horse with a Ford, 200,000 acres would be added to the Nation's source of food supply and enough extra food made available to feed 400,000 people—sufficient to feed Canada's entire army at the front.

Just think what a great service this means to the country at the present time and the benefit to the farmers from the sale of the food produced on this acreage.

A Ford car also saves the farmer a week or more of valuable time each year, which can be used for further productive work. The Ford travels three times as fast as a horse and rig—costs less to run and keep, and is far easier to take care of. With labor so scarce and high priced, time means money, so do not delay in getting your Ford.

CORP. PERCY NELSON TELLS OF "GOING OVER"

In a letter to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. Nelson, Corp. Percy Nelson, gives an interesting account of taking a certain position, the name of which the censor has deleted.

The letter is dated Sept. 4, and is as follows:

"Dear Mother:—I had a letter written before telling you I had been wounded, and thought I might tell you a little more about it now.

You know that on August 15th the Canadians took——. In the early hours of the morning we went out through the front line to where we were to kick off from. As we were very near to Fritz this was done as quietly as possible. Arriving in our position we began to dig little fox holes for ourselves. My position was in a small and very wet shell crater, and it was a hard job to dig in the wet clay

Fritzie was shelling all the time, and although we were so close to him we could see him every time he put up a flare, still he apparently did not know we were there, and his shells were falling harmlessly over our heads into our front line.

Having finished digging a little cover we lay down to await developments, and although cold and wet I manged to get sleep. The next thing I knew was when our officer shook me and said: 'Here, lad, here's your rum, and there are four minutes to go'"

Then the barrage commenced, and it was a wonderful sight. As we followed it over I found myself several times standing and watching the barrage. The ground had been wet, and had been shelled so thoroughly that it was like a newly tilled field.

In short order we reached our objective, and as I was going along the trench looking for dug outs to be bombed, I was wounded in the right side. I got it in the right knee, right upper arm and right side of my back. None of the wounds are dangerous, but the arm and the knee are painful.

To return to——again. I soon had my wounds dressed by a stretcher-bearer who was near, but as there were no stretchers, I was left there. As the ground was so cold and wet, I soon began shivering, and in a couple of hours I could stand it no longer, so I made an effort to get out. After a rest I tried again and after going a couple of hundred yards farther down the trench, I got into a German dug-out, and stayed there about six hours, altho it seemed like two days. By this time the Germans were shelling and men were dropping all around.

When two or three of us decided we would try the road again, I was too slow for the others, but we kept on. It is a miracle one of those shells did not get me, for they landed almost everywhere, except on me, and pieces of them whistled past me, as I stumbled along.

Just as I was about all in again, I reached another dugout, which had been made into a dressing station by one of our stretcher-bearers. He was able to fix me up and give me a place to lie down, and I succeded in getting warm.

From the dugout things were rosy. Four German prisoners carried me out to one of our regular dressing stations, where the four Germans were relayed by another four Germans, who were about to carry me farther, when the German guns planked a shell right on the corner of the dressing station, wounding the doctor in the leg. After while the doctor was dressing his wounds himself, "I heard him say: "Well, this will give me Blighty for the winter." When the shell hit I lost two of my Hun carriers, and from there on I only had two carriers. At the next dressing station I was put on the ambulance. From there things went fine. It was a short ride to the field hospital, where the shrapnel was taken out, and the wounds dressed up From there the train soon brought us to the base hospital. Here I got along fine until a week ago I had a slight hemorrhage in my arm, which put me back a little, but since then progress has been rapid, and this morning the doctor spoke of marking me for Blighty, so in a few day I shall likely be having a long holiday in England

Do not worry. I am improving nicely and having every attention, and am in no considerable pain."

Your loving son,
Percy

Pte. Stanley Harman Gets Warm Welcome

On only two hours notice Reeve Izzard and his councillors had a good crowd at the depot Monday noon to meet and welcome Stanley Harman, who has done his bit and returns home with some severe wounds in the right arm and shoulder.

Reeve Izzard, in a neat speech welcomed Stanley in behalf of the people, and three rousing cheers were given. He was escorted to his home where many friends and relatives were waiting him.

Jolly Time at Corn Roast

The White School Patriotic Society held a corn roast at Brown's flats on Monday night. It a was trifle cold, but a corn roast brings out the young people, for it's quite an event.

A big bon-fire made it comfortable and with the roasted and boiled corn, and lunch everyone enjoyed the event immensely. Eight dollars was made for patriotic work.

Town Council Has Busy Session

All the members of council were present Friday night at the regular meeting.

The first business was the discussion of the water rates to be charged for factory use. Meters have been installed and the rates charged in other towns are being received and considered.

The library board wrote asking for the balance of last year's grant. This grant was $119.03, the balance due being $19.03 which was ordered paid.

The plan of the new road at Paradise Grove was approved and passed, as well as plan of sub-divisions of John Ross and Chas. Guyer.

The trees are to be properly trimmed, and property owners are asked to co-operate.

Appeals were made by the Y. M. C. A. and the Navy League for funds, but no action was taken.

The matter of welcoming returned soldiers was discussed, and it was decided that the council would officially welcome all returned men, and they ask the co-operation of citizens.

FARM AND GARDEN

WINTER CROPS IN ONTARIO.

(Results of Experiments.)

The time between the harvesting and the seeding of winter crops is exceptionally short this year. Many farmers will be unable to thresh their wheat before it is time to sow for another crop. Farmers who have already threshed good, pure grain of standard varieties of winter wheat or of winter rye, might advertise their surplus for seed purposes to advantage, both to themselves and to others. Every effort should be made to increase the winter crop area as much as possible. The wheat is greatly needed, and the increased acreage sown with winter crops will lessen the labor required for spring seeding, and also extend the harvest over a longer period next year. Let us aim for one million acres of winter crops for 1918.

Experiments have been conducted at the Ontario Agricultural College and throughout Ontario during the past year with winter wheat, winter rye, winter barley, winter emmer and hairy vetches. The autumn of 1916 was comparatively dry, and the spring and early summer of 1917, exceptionally wet. There was more rainfall in June and July of this year than in any two consecutive months in the past seventeen years.

About two hundred and ninety varieties of winter wheat, and many selections and cross have been grown under experiment at the Agricultural College within the past twenty-eight years. Of the named varieties fourteen have been grown in each of the twenty-two years, and the results of these are of special value. The following gives the average for twenty-two years in yield of both grain and straw per acre, and in weight per measured bushel of a few of the leading varieties: Dawson's Golden Chaff, 50.2 bushels, 2.9 tons, and 69.9 pounds; Imperial Amber, 47.3 bushels, 3.1 tons, and 61.1 pounds; Early Genesee Giant, 45.9 bushels, 3.0 tons, and 60.1 pounds, and Egyptian Amber, 45.5 bushels, 3.1 tons, and 61.5 pounds.

The average results of the fourteen varieties are as follows: Yield of grain per acre, 25.6 bushels for 1917, and 44.2 bushels for the twenty-two year period; yield of straw per acre, 1.9 tons for 1917, and 2.9 tons for the twenty-two year period; and weight per measured bushel, 56.7 pounds, for 1917, and 60.9 pounds for the twenty-two year period.

Of the thirty-four varieties of winter wheat which have been tested for the past five years the highest yields in bushels per acre have been produced by Imperial Amber, 45.8, Kharkov, 45.6, Gillespie Red, 45.2; McBean's Dawson, 45.1; Tuscan Island, 44.9; Grand Prize, 44.7, and American Banner, 44.6.

Those varieties of winter wheat which have produced the largest loaves of bread from equal quantities of flour in the average tests of ten years made in the Bakery branch of the Chemical Department of the college are as follows: Yaroslaf, Banatka, Crimean Red, Tuscan Island, Buda Pesth, Tasmania Red, Egyptian Amber, Kentucky Giant, Rudy, Treadwell, Bulgarian, Geneva and Turkey Red; and those which produced the smallest loaves of bread are the Early Red Clawson and the Abundance.

A cross between the Dawson's Golden Chaff and the Bulgarian has furnished a new variety which in the last five years has surpassed both its parents in average yield per acre, and is about equal to the Bulgarian in bread production. This variety was distributed over Ontario in connection with the co-operative experiments in the autumn of 1916 for the first time under the name of O.A.C. No. 104, and is not yet grown in sufficient quantity in Ontario to be sold commercially. In the co-operative experiments throughout Ontario in the past year, in which five leading varieties were tested the O.A.C. No. 104 proved to be the most popular with the farmers, the improved Imperial Amber coming second in this respect.

The Petkus variety of winter rye has made the highest record both at the college and in the co-operative experiments throughout Ontario. Winter Barley which has been grown at the college in each of the past twenty-four years gave a yield per acre in 1917 of 32.2 bushels, the average for the whole period being about fifty bushels per acre.

Distribution of material for experiments in autumn of 1917—As long as the supply lasts, material will be distributed free of charge in the order in which the applications are received from Ontario farmers wishing to experiment and to report the results of any one of the following tests:

1—Three varieties of winter wheat.
2—One variety of winter rye and one of winter wheat.
3—Spring applications of five fertilizers with winter wheat.
4—Autumn and spring applications of nitrate of soda and common salt with winter wheat.
5—Winter emmer and winter barley
6—Hairy vetches and winter rye as fodder crops.

The size of each plot is to be one rod wide by two rods long. Fertilizers will be sent by express for number 4 this autumn and for number 3 next spring. All seed will be sent by mail except that for number 4, which will accompany the fertilizers.

CLOVER SEED—WHY NOT GROW YOUR OWN?

In average seasons red clover, that has not been pastured after the first hay crop has been removed, will produce a crop of well-matured seed. Instead of cutting the second crop for hay, pasturing it, or, as it frequently happens, plowing it under, why not allow this crop to mature, why not aseed from it?

By raising your own clover seed, you are obtaining seed from plants which, by their very existence have demonstrated their adaptation to the conditions prevailing on your farm, and in your immediate locality. Such seed, it is quite reasonable to suppose, will produce plants which are equally well adapted to local conditions. For this reason, home-grown clover seed is really more valuable than most of the seed obtainable through ordinary channels of commerce.

Quite often very poor-looking fields of second growth red clover will produce a profitable crop of seed. In many cases fields where the clover is quite thin and say only eight or ten inches high, will yield over one hundred pounds of clean, well-matured seed per acre. Usually, however, an average second growth will produce anywhere from 150 to 250 pounds of seed per acre.

The red clover seed crop should be cut when the heads are dark brown in color, and contain hard, well-developed seed. In harvesting all unnecessary handling should be avoided. Rough handling, frequent turning, etc., will thresh off or break off the most mature heads, thus wasting a portion of the most valuable seed.

Where the crop is less than one foot high it may be cut with an ordinary mowing machine. It is usually advisable to have two men follow the machine with hand rakes, and move each swath out from the standing crop a few feet, so that, on the next round, the cut clover will be out of the way of the horses and machine. By following this practice with short clover, a great deal of seed will be saved that would have otherwise be threshed by the horses' feet and thereafter left in the field.

Where clover is one foot or more in height the most satisfactory implement to use for cutting is the binder. The cord should be removed, and the spring on the knotter slackened so that it will trip continuously. Usually there are two boards that hold the sheaf; these should also be slackened so that the clover will have a free course to the ground. In dropping to the ground, the seed will not shell, and the crop will be left in loose windows, where it will dry quickly, and can be easily gathered with a barley fork.

The length of time that the clover should remain in the field would depend upon the weather. Generally speaking, the crop should be placed in the mow or stack when dry enough to keep well. It can then be threshed when convenient.

RUST OF WHEAT.

Some time ago the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa issued a very timely card-poster with wide descriptive colored border on "Black or Stem Rust of Wheat." The poster in succinct plain language tersely gave advice on the best course to pursue in the preparation of land and seeding to prevent approach of the dread disease which entailed the loss of many millions of dollars to Canada in 1916. A bulletin has now been issued, and can be obtained free by addressing the Publications Branch of the Department at Ottawa, amplifying the advice given in the poster. It is also designed to answer many inquiries that have been received and that prove that the theories possessed regarding the disease are frequently astray. The bulletin explains that there are several distinct kinds of rust and defines them. It tells of the cause of rust and of the infection of the wheat plant; gives particulars of the red summer stage and of the black or winter stage of the disease, details the action of the fungus on the host plant, and makes a specialty of describing the relation of stem rust to the barberry. "We regard the barberry in Canada," say the authors of the bulletin, "as a known contributory factor to grain rust. In this attitude we are supported by practically every scientific observer on this continent, and we, therefore, would strongly recommend the complete extermination of this shrub, at any rate throughout the regions of the Dominion principally devoted to grain growing. There are other factors contributory to the severity of grain rust over which we have no control—weather conditions for one—but the question of the barberry is one that might easily be overcome. It is one of the principal precautionary measures that should be taken in the interest of the grain-producing regions throughout the Continent of America." The bulletin proceeds to tell in detail of precautions that can be taken to reduce losses from grain rust.

MEDICAL SCIENCE

DISEASES OF THE WAR.

Of course, in the manufacture of—for example—high explosives, several dangerous substances have to be handled, and the industrial risks are greatly increased, while the fact that a large proportion of munition workers are drawn from classes previously quite unaccustomed to factory work of any kind makes the probability of ill effects still greater.

The diseases incident to what are called the "dangerous trades" arise from the handling or inhaling of a variety of poisonous or irritating substances, the over-use or over-strain of certain nerves or muscles in the use of the special machinery, over-concentration and, in general, exposure to unusual physical conditions.

A number of the metals are poisonous at some stage of their manipulation, amongst them antimony, used in burnishing rifle barrels, as well as in making many alloys, and in the cleansing of red rubber; arsenic, very widely employed in such different industries as tanning hides and making shot, making paints and oilcloth, plating dark metal and dyeing; brass, which is poisonous both in the fumes given off from it in its manufacture and by the mechanical action of its particles in lathe work. Gold and silver are among the harmless metals in themselves, but many of the processes connected with the use of gold are dangerous from the other materials used. Sulphuric acid, benzene, mercury, lead, and cyanide of pottassium are all used in various combinations with gold.

Lead, phosphorus and mercury are perhaps, the three most dangerous of the metals

The poisonous fumes, gases and vapours are very many, and the same substance may appear as a solid, a dust or a fume and in the state of fume or gas it may affect the worker at home as well as in the factory if he lives in the near vicinity of his work.

The Russian Debacle. A steadfast Russian soldier uses his rifle on runaways. He caught them in the act.

COOL ROOMS.

Unless there is a free current of air in the room the atmosphere will always be stuffy and unpleasant, even though by the thermometer it may be low in temperature. But in very hot weather a certain amount of care should be taken to admit—so far as possible—only the coolest of the outer air, and to this end it is desirable to keep the windows and outer doors on the shady side of the house thrown wide open, while those on the sunny side should only be open (in the case of windows) at the top or bottom for a short distance. The sunny windows should be screened from the direct sun-rays by blinds, preferably outside "sun blinds," which leave a space between blind and glass. Where inner blinds or curtains are the only ones practicable a frequent spraying or sprinkling of them with cold water will help to keep the air in the room cool and fresh. Of course, as the day goes on and the sun gets round, the windows and doors must be adjusted to suit it, the above principles being followed throughout.

THE SICK CHILD'S NURSERY

It is of great importance that the room in which a child lies ill or convalescent should be suited to its purpose. The child is more impressionable, both mentally and physically than the adult, and it must have the most favorable surroundings if it is to make good progress.

The room should be bright and cheerful, but not crowded with furniture or draperies. It should be prepared or distempered a light color, and should have plenty of ventilation. It should be quiet, and therefore, other things being equal, it is usually best placed at the back of the house. If its aspect is sunny, arrangement must be made by means of curtains and blinds to be able to subdue or altogether exclude the light. But in convalescence sun and air are more helpful than medicines, and the sun will seldom need to be shut out altogether.

Light, cheerfully patterned curtains and draperies should be used, all of which must not only be washable but frequently washed. A fireplace is essential, and a coal or wood fire is much to be preferred to a gas stove.

The child's room is best at or near the top of the house, away from household noises and traffic. The little patient will get a great deal of its quiet-sleep when the house is still busy and noisy, and it is important that this sleep should be undisturbed. It should, however, never be out of earshot of some person at any time of the day or night. If no one actually sleeps in the same room an attendant should occupy the next room, and the doors of both rooms should be left open.

CHILDREN'S JOINTS.

People who have to do with children will do well always to bear in mind that a child is not exactly like a small-sized adult. The child is a creature in process of formation; his bones are soft and "green," easily warped and made crooked; his joints are loose fitting and his cartilages elastic. It is dangerously easy to injure a child by playing with him roughly, and especially dangerous is it to lift children by the limbs. A favorite trick with some people is to catch a child by its hands and swing it in the air, and it is easy in this way to dislocate the small weak wrist. If the child must be lifted by the arms at all it should be grasped round the forearms below the wrist, the strain being thus divided between the shoulders and elbow—both better fitted for it than the wrist. Better still is it not to do the trick at all.

It is of grave importance that all young children should have plenty of of suitable active exercise whilst their bones, cartilages and joints are forming and knitting. Exercise and strain of a natural kind are necessary to stimulate the process. If this stimulus is withheld it slackens and diminishes, But the strain should never be excessive, nor should it be confined in its application, but should, as far as possible, call on the whole frame in turn.

INSECT BITES.

Many people are troubled with septic wounds and acute inflammations which started but as the merest bite or sting of some mosquito or stinging fly. In all these cases the trouble is not the actual wound inflicted, but the poison injected, being either the natural secretion of the insect or some contamination of which the insect is but the carrier. Once the bite or sting has occurred the best treatment consists in the immediate application of a piece of lint or linen squeezed out in a strong hot solution of bicarbonate of soda, or of a few drops of diluted ammonia with a hot fomentation on top of it. Afterwards the part should be repeatedly fomented, and under no circumstances rubbed or scratched. Far better, however, than treatment after the event, is prevention, where that is possible. Many substances, especially certain essential oils, are very distasteful to insects and will generally keep them off.

Three useful mixtures for dabbing on the face, neck, ankles, hands and wrists, are the following, the recipes for which recently appeared in "Topical Therapy": Mix together half-an-ounce of oil of cedar, 2 drachms of kerosene, 1 drachm of camphor, 1 drop of oil of birch tar, and 4 ounces of rectified spirit. To this mixture add two ounces of concentrated compound infusion of quassia.

Another useful application consists of a mixture of 3 drachms of glycerine, 5 drachms of camphor water, and half a drachm of hydro-chloride of quinine. A third mixture consists of 20 minims of oil of eucalyptus, 10 10 grains of salicylic acid, 2 drachms of spirits of camphor, half an ounce of solution of ammonia, and one and a half ounces of soap liniment.

SUNLIGHT AND THE EYES.

Strong sunlight, especially when reflected from a light-colored surface, is often extremely trying to the eyes, and if the latter are already weak great discomfort may be caused by it. Of course, if we all lived an outdoor life all the year round our eyes and other organs would probably become used to more extreme conditions, but life within the semi-darkness of the house is quite certain to upset the natural adaptation. In consequence we often have to follow up an unnatural habit of life with another unnatural precaution, and against the glare of a strong sun some such protection as slightly tinted glasses, a dark veil, or at least a wide and shady hat is usually necessary.

Where the conditions are severe in the extreme, as in the Alps and in the Arctic regions, where the fierce sun shines down on unbroken snow, actual blindness occurs, and is known by the name of snow blindness. It is usually only temporary, and may be avoided by the use of dark glasses, but it is one of the dangers against which mountain climbers have to provide.

SUNDAY AT HOME

IT'S SUNSHINE AND MUSIC.

A laugh is just like sunshine,
It freshens all the day,
It tips the peak of life with light,
And drives the clouds away;
The soul grows glad that hears it,
And feels its courage strong—
A laugh is just like sunshine
For cheering folks along!

A laugh is just like music,
It lingers in my heart,
And where its melody is heard
The ills of life depart;
And happy thoughts come crowding
Its joyful tones to greet—
A laugh is just like music
For making living sweet.

WE ARE THE LORD'S.

I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day.—I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.—Those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost.

The Lord taketh pleasure in his people.—My delights were with the sons of men.—His great love wherewith he loved us.—Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.

Ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's.—Whether we live, we live unto the Lord: whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's.

HO! TO THE LAND!

The walls of the synagogue resounded His voice, the Sabbaths beheld the feeding of famished crowds, the treasures of wisdom were unfolded by the unwearied beneficence of the Son of Man. Lo! His greatness shines through His humility. The voice of Jonah, like a blast from the trumpet of God, pealed through the streets of Nineveh, and made its palaces tremble. Jonah impressed his greatness in the minds of the people. But, behold! a greater than Jonah is here. Solomon was a name for glory, the temple blazoned forth his name—but, behold, a greater than Solomon is here.

In the synagogue one day, He opened the roll where it is written, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me." The literature of the old prophet tells the story of the young prophet. All eyes were fastened upon Him. He robed Himself in splendor that poverty could not hide, in power that demons could not thwart, in beauty that drew the weary to Him, in majesty that made Him conqueror.

Come, let us sit at His feet. When we see power, we accord not a few facilities, and feel safe. His discourse is high. He speaks of the Highest and All Power, the Absolute the I am what I am. He speaks of Himself. "I am the Light of the World, I am the Good Shepherd, I am the Bread of Life, Filled with the fulness of joy."

We read distinctly that He taught with authority. "The Father hath given to the Son to have life in Himself and hath given Him authority to execute judgment, because He is the Son of Man. All things are delivered unto Him. By [illegible] date, He virtually annulled the Jewish ritual, and repealed the whole economy, casting it back among the things that were. Great signs followed; what they asked in His name, "That will I do." The mastery of Jesus was freedom; slavery to Him was liberty. No task too hard, no difficulty too great no sorrow too heavy, too low down, too far gone.

Ho! To the land! Shadowed by the wings of angels, sacred to the residence of God. Is it not holy? Did He not do all His mighty works there? It is the glory of all lands. "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning." We mark His footsteps on the sand: we muse with

"It is not that the wild gazelle
Him on the beach, and the fish and bread are sweet. O, far-famed Galilee!
Comes down to drink thy tide,
But that 'twas He who saves from hell,
Oft wandered by thy side."

FORGIVE AND FORGET.

Forgive and forget—it is better
To fling every feeling aside,
Than allow the deep cankering fetter
Of revenge in thy breast to abide.
For thy step through life's path shall be lighter
When the load from thy bosom is cast,
And the sky that's above thee be brighter
When the cloud of displeasure has passed.
Though the spirit swell high with emotion
To give back an injustice again,
Let it sink in oblivion's ocean,
For remembrance increases the pain.
—Ilion.

SHE HATH DONE WHAT SHE COULD.

This poor widow hath cast in more than they all.—Whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward. If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not.

Let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth.—If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled, notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body, what doth it profit?—He which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver.

When ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do.

INQUIRY.

(By the late Rev. H. F. Miller.)

I inquire in His temple, full of strength and beauty. I ask now far is the knowledge of God from the love of God; do oceans roll between, or are they joined as continents are joined? I inquire of man, and ask, whence? Yesterday I was nothing; now I am colossal, limited and weak. "Too much noise deafens, to much light dazzles, distance or nearness impede the sight, excessive length or brevity of speech renders it obscure, too much truth appals."—Man is in a sempiternal despair of ever knowing either the beginning or the end.

I may come into a congregation and be counted an addition of one; nay, I may have potentialities which make me an important factor in the mission and meaning of life. But when I come into the presence of God, I am in the measureless infinity. I join His company, but I add nothing to Him. I am absorbed, encompassed, enveloped, all functions are suspended, there is no faith, no hope, no prayer, no praise, but the end of all these has been reached. The moon reflects the light of the sun, but I do more—I felicitate, I correspond, I am a child at home. I become simply a receiver; a revel in the fulness of inconceivable delight.

I stand at the door and ask why is my knowledge, stature, powers, numbers limited? I stand at the door of the universe and wonder at the infinity of world, each having its own firmament, its planets, its earth, in due proportion. I am lost in these wonders, astounded alike at the smallness of man and the greatness of God. I am nothing in respect of infinity, everything in respect of non-existence. I don't exist, I live, I am from God! This one fact lifts me among the immortals. In my true mission I occupy a small space. Who placed me here, by whose order, by whose management has the place and time been destined to me?

I have learned what the sages never knew. Jesus Christ is the aim of all and centre of all. He who knows him knows the reason of all things, and the quality of all things. Sea water is salt, the air is fresh, the rose is sweet, and joy is of God!

I grasp Thy strength, make it mine own,
My heart with peace is blest;
I lose my hold, and then comes down
Darkness and cold unrest.
Let me no more my comfort draw
From my frail hold of Thee,
In this alone rejoice with awe,
Thy mighty grasp of me.
H. T. Miller.

Useful Curtain Suggestion.

The small metal office clips so handy for keeping papers pinned together will be found exceedingly useful for clipping up the curtains at night. The advantage over pins in preventing curtains from blowing out the screenless windows at night is that the clips leave no telltale holes.

Happy is the man who can strike a happy medium between being as good as he thinks he is, and as bad as his wife thinks him.

Double Stars.

A double star is one which consists of two stars lying close together and revolving in an orbit. For some time Professor Comstock, astronomer of the University of Wisconsin, has made a particular study of this feature in the heavens.

A new phenomenon is a double star which he noticed was that two bright stars "wobbled" and did not have the usual steady appearance. At length the conclusion was reached that this condition was caused by a dark star in close proximity to the two bright stars. Such a situation was considered impossible at first, but analysis revealed that the two bright stars could thus exist with a dark star without breaking down. Although the dark star has never been seen, there is sufficient proof to justify the belief that it is the cause of this double star's peculiar behavior. It revolves about the double star about once in a little less than twelve years.

Tiny and Tireless.

Heat is not a substance. It is merely the vibration of the molecules composing the material heated. Every material is made up of molecules, and each molecule is composed of atoms. Molecules of matter are held together by a force called "cohesion."

At absolute zero, colder yet than liquid air, or minus 273 degrees, all molecules are at rest. As the temperature rises the molecules begin to move to and fro. The higher the temperature is raised the faster and faster swing the molecules.

Molecules are so minute that there are about one sextillion of them in a cubic inch of air. Those at freezing temperature oscillate back and forth at the rate of 1,466 feet a second. The average length of their path between oscillations is about one two hundred and seventy-seven thousandth of an inch. Each comes into collision with its fellows about [illegible] times a second.

Through Many Trials

"Well, if he is going about circulating a vile slander on the memory of poor, dear sister, Miriam, I should think you would take poor Dick's cause against him, however little you may like him!" Miss Proude says, passionately. "I told Miss Brown a viler slander was never uttered; and told her plain and straight that Dick Dumaresq's mother was my own dead darling sister, Katharine Proude, who was lawfully married to Harold Dumaresq—the younger brother of Viscount Dumaresq, thirty years ago, when she wasn't scarce eighteen years of age, and I saw her marriage certificate many a time with my own eyes!"

"Ah!" Miriam Lilly says, drawing a long breath, "that explains something Sir Philip hinted at. Then says this 'Miss Brown'—I think the name is false, Jane, if thy friend was not false, too—had heard this slander from Captain Dumaresq—or through him?"

"Yes, she did!" Miss Proude says, vehemently still; "but she soon believed my story, and took it up quite warmly, and spoke quite beautifully, and said she believed if that was the case Dick Dumaresq was a cruelly wronged man! And she said, too: 'Perhaps,' she said, 'we could explain a great deal of his uncle's enmity toward him in the same way. He may have a secret enemy,' she said, 'and that enemy may be his cousin, Richard Dumaresq, only,' she said, 'they are such great friends.'

"'Yes,' I said, 'I know they are,'" continues Miss Proude, flattered by her sister's almost breathless attention. "From the time they were children together, Dick loved his cousin like a brother, and all the more because his uncle didn't like Richard, his sister's son; she married a cousin, and so kept the same name, you know——"

"Tell me what thy friend, Miss Brown, said," interrupts Miriam Kelly, nipping the discursiveness in the bud.

"'They are such great friends,' she said—Miss Brown said," Miss Proude says, getting rather foggy in her relation, "and I thought she must have been making some mistake, and I told her so. For, I said, said I, 'to my certain knowledge Dick Dumaresq is hundreds of miles away from London,' and of course what you say now, Miriam, explains it all, and I thought it was altogether wrong when she said, 'Captain Dumaresq had his cousin with him—this young man we are speaking of,' she said, 'I saw them both together one evening in London lately, and they were together next day—went down to the docks together. I suppose the cousin is going abroad somewhere, for it was not Captain Dumaresq who went,' she said, 'I saw him next morning, and he is in London now.'

"And I said again, quite positive, 'My dear, you must be mistaken; Dick Dumaresq would not have left England without telling me.'"

"No, she was not mistaken," Miriam Lilly says, slowly; "he was in London for [illegible] days, I know; but Captain Dumaresq denies having seen him. And they went down to the docks together, and one returned and the other has disappeared for more than three weeks. There has been some foul play," she says, closing her hands tightly, "or Dick Dumaresq would not have left his situation abruptly in that fashion without a leave-taking. Don't thee get hysterical, Jane," she adds, with icy rebuke; "it will not help matters in the least. I wish I could discover thy 'Miss Brown.' Without her, I cannot disprove Captain Dumaresq's assertion, though I know it to be a falsehood."

And then she rises and takes her leave, resolutely refusing all Miss Proude's entreaties to stay and rest or eat and drink. On the doorstep she wavers, however.

"If thee should see Richard Dumaresq, Jane," she says, "thee will be sure to tell him to come to me, even if he does not intend returning to Portdreath. Say I wish to see him particularly—he will not fail to come if thee tell him so. And if thee should see thy mysterious friend 'Miss Brown,' endeavor to obtain an address to which we could write to her."

To both of which requests Miss Proude gives her promise of performance, rather vexed and jealous at the tone of her sister's assumption of influence over her beloved nephew, and by her persistent sweet concealing her charming new-made friend, "Miss Brown."

"I wish poor darling Dick had his rights, and that he and that lovely girl met," Miss Proude mutters, maliciously to herself, watching Mrs. Lilly's tall, straight figure disappearing in the distance; "we could soon do without sister Miriam's help, or patronage either! Miriam always did think she knew more than any one else, and that every one else was a fool compared to her."

And so this little source of sisterly jealousy springs up into a stream of the waters of bitterness, which begins to flow in devious ways before the sun has set.

Some four hours later, when Miriam Lilly is many miles on her journey homeward, Miss Proude is sitting with calm complacence doing fancy work by the open window of her freshly adorned drawing-room—now a perfect bower of white lace curtains, glittering ornaments, and flashing mirrors, and bouquets of flowers—attired with unusual elegance also in her second-best silk and best cap—atoning to herself for the mishap of the morning, and just as she has given Hennie special directions about making a strong cup of tea and toasting a teacake.

"There never was anything so lucky," Miss Proude thinks afterward, parenthetically, when the little front garden gate clicks once more behind a visitor, whom Miss Proude and her little handmaid recognize at a glance.

Truth to tell, they had never seen any one in their lives to equal in beauty or grace—or face, form, or attire—their visitor.

The visitor who calls herself "Miss Brown," and who has the loveliness of Venus Aphrodite and the grace of a princess, a perfect face, a perfect form, attired in the simple perfection which has the cachet of a master-hand in every seam and fold. Miss Proude is in raptures with her visitor arriving at this opportune moment, looking lovely, smiling sweetly, and greeting Miss Proude as if she were a sister; and the second cup of afternoon tea has not been drunk, when Miss Proude herself introduces the subject of her nephew, and after a prudential pause and hesitation, Miss Brown's pretty confidential questions entirely overcome, she tells her of her sister, Mrs. Lilly's visit, in full detail, omitting nothing, even to her parting injunction.

To all of which Miss Brown hearkens with great interest, her cheek resting on one pretty pink palm, and on the other dainty little white hand, toying with her teaspoon, Miss Proude notices a superb ring of large emeralds set with small fine brilliants.

"How very odd!" she says, opening her lovely eyes, "that your sister should ask for my address, when I actually called here this afternoon, not only to see you, dear Miss Proude, but to ask you to write to me if you hear anything of your nephew!"

But when Miss Proude mentions her promise to request Dick Dumaresq to call on Mrs. Lilly, Miss Brown's fair face flushes with earnestness.

"Oh, dear!" she exclaims, distressedly, "I was afraid of that! She lives down in Cornwall, doesn't she—near where your nephew lives? I can guess what she wants to see him for—Captain Dumaresq's stories again, Miss Proude—something about—about a young lady—quite a child, you know," and Miss Brown's sweet, girlish face flushes deeply in maiden confusion; "but he, Mr. Richard, your nephew, made love to her—or she made love to him, and her father was in a terrible rage about it, and I dare say Mrs. Lilly wants to bring the poor fellow to book about it! Captain Dumaresq has been making quite a piece of mischief out of it."

"And did Dick—was there anything really, I mean, about this young lady?" Miss Proude asks, [illegible] with spinster-like anxiety for a bit of scandal.

"Nothing whatever," Miss Brown answers, sharply and decidedly, "only a little bit of harmless gallantry or good nature, I feel sure, and the young lady is a mere child—a girl in short frocks. But some one has made mischief out of it, I fear, Miss Proude—Captain Dumaresq, perhaps, or some one else. I would not care for poor Dick Dumaresq to be catechised by Mrs. Lilly! You say yourself she was never friendly to him all his life long; she is hardly likely to be now."

"I don't believe Miriam is a bit friendly to him," Miss Proude says, giving herself great credit for sudden astute perception. "It's just as you say, Miss Brown, dear. She just wants to bring him to book, and I shall not say a word to him of her request."

Eating for Health and Strength calls for intelligent food selection. It is easy to keep in top-notch vigor of mind and body at low cost if you know Shredded Wheat Biscuit. It is 100 per cent. whole wheat—nothing wasted, nothing thrown away — contains more real body-building nutriment than meat, eggs or potatoes and costs much less. Full of nutriment, tasty and toothsome. Most people like the nutty aroma of the baked wheat, especially when served with hot milk. Delicious with sliced peaches, bananas and other fresh fruits.

Made in Canada.

CHAPTER XVIII.

It is a hot afternoon in the last week in July and Mrs. Lilly, in the large, shady kitchen of her own large, airy, handsome house at Perrantowers, is busy making jam and jelly.

"I wonder how long it would have taken poor Jane to preserve sixty pounds of fruit," she thinks, with a sarcastic smile reverting to the contretemps of her visit, and the "turning out" of Miss Proude's drawing-room. "Poor Jane always muddled any long job, I remember."

And from her sister, Jane Proude, Mrs. Lilly's thoughts go back painfully to the occasion of her visit, and the mystery and silence of Dick Dumaresq's disappearance, unsolved and unbroken as yet, though another fortnight has slipped by without even a word of news. Miss Proude has not even written to her to tell her if she has had a visit yet from the charming, mysterious "Miss Brown," and she knows nothing of what is going on at Portdreath, except for the rumors that reach her respecting the approaching marriage of Miss Trefusis, which is to take place before the young lady leaves town.

"She's to be married to a wonnerful rich gen-leman up to Lunnon, I hear tell, ma'am," Mrs. Lilly's dairymaid tells her, watching her mistress inquisitively, "and Sir Philip and they are goin' up to the weddin'."

Mrs. Lilly's proud, cold face grows prouder and colder at the gossip, but she makes no reply, for she knows that the girl is anxious on the score of the lack of all information about the Trefusis family which her mistress seems to have, and notices, in common with others, the fact that all intercourse between Perrantowers and Portdreath seems to be at an end.

And it certainly is truth that, since the afternoon of Captain Dumaresq's visit, when, by a strange fatality, she missed seeing him, as he missed seeing her, or hearing her name, and an hour after he had taken his departure, she found Imogene, pale and trembling, with eyelids dark and swollen from heavy weeping, sitting alone in her own little bower-chamber. Since that afternoon Miriam Lilly had declined to remain a day longer in Portdreath, after a brief conference between herself and Sir Philip, during which it was hard to say which was the prouder or colder, or more intensely wrathful, of the two.

And so they were parted, although Miriam Lilly has been the friend, warmly attached and deeply trusted although in a different station to theirs—of Sir Philip Trefusis, and his wife and children, for twenty years. Not that she could glean much from Imogene's low-spoken answers, choked in utterance ever and anon by a suppressed sob.

There was much more to be inferred from the trembling of the grieved, rosy lips, and the downcast eyes and heightened color, though she strives hard, poor, little, lily-like girl, to maintain her maidenly dignity as Imogene Trefusis.

She briefly alludes to "the absurdity, the unkindness, and indelicacy" of Captain Dumaresq having discussed her name in the manner he has done, even though it was with her own father.

"And papa has been very cruel, and offended me very deeply by not having more confidence in me as his daughter!" she adds, drawing her slender figure up, and her eyes flashing through tear-wet lashes. "I am very sorry Captain Dumaresq is going to marry Evelyn, as papa says," she concludes, with quiet sternness that contains suggestions of hidden resources of strength and resolution in that girlish character, "for I shall never like him—I shall never try to like him or pretend to do so. His conduct seems to me treacherous and ungentlemanly all through."

"Perhaps he will not marry Evelyn," answers Mrs. Lilly, quietly. "There is an old proverb, thee knows, about the 'slip between the cup and the lip.'"

Something tantamount to this she has said to Sir Philip, when the baronet formally alluded to Captain Dumaresq as his future son-in-law, and so provoked him in thereby saying, that his irritated temper and disgust got beyond control, and he, in his turn, has almost hinted at Captain Dumaresq's vile insinuation regarding his cousin's birth.

And the moment that he has uttered the words and sees that she perceived their meaning, he wishes them unsaid, though he forfeited a year of his life to do so. He has good cause to know how faithful and generous a friend Miriam Lilly can be, and how utterly unyielding and implacable a foe.

Read in the light of her sister Jane's words, and the apocryphal "Miss Brown's" statements, Miriam Lilly detects the meaning of the covert insult, and her cold, hard nature beats with wrath as a flint beats—slow, and dull, and enduring.

"I have already told thee," she says, her stern eyes making poor old Sir Philip tremble, "that this young man, Richard Dumaresq, thy son's tutor, was my sister's son. I will not remind thee of the fact a third time, Sir Philip, as thy memory is so short, and I regret to see there is likely to be so much enmity of feeling and opinion between thee and thy would-be son-in-law that it is impossible that thou and I should not disagree. I came hither to make myself useful to thee and thy children during Lady Althea's absence, but, as all things in the household are in order, and my presence here would certainly not add to the harmony of the family circle, I shall [illegible] turn home this afternoon."

"Thou must be quite aware, Mrs. Lilly, that I intended nothing in [illegible]," the baronet [illegible] with a frigid attempt at conciliation, [illegible] she interposes, briefly, with [illegible] sternness.

"I am only aware, Sir Philip, that thou hast ventured to slander [illegible] a name as good as thine own. I give one caution in friendship to thee," she adds, with a cold, dry smile. "Do thee take heed that thee are not treasuring the husk and throwing the kernel away—letting the good run through thy fingers, and holding tight the dross."

And having said this, she says no more nor does Sir Philip ever see her again. Quietly as she has come, quietly she goes away, leaving Lionel and Imogene under the impression that she is but going home for a few hours' stay, until her letter written to Sir Philip on the following day undeceives them.

It is a deliberate, lengthy letter, but written in all kindness and courtesy, to ask Sir Philip if he objects to Lionel coming to stay at Perrantowers until such time as his late tutor's place be supplied. And as Sir Philip is worried and grieved beyond endurance with fears and anxieties regarding his son, whose temper and conduct are both noticeably worse since Dumaresq's departure—and as staying at Perrantowers means attaining to the seventh heaven of delight to poor Lionel—Sir Philip gladly gives his consent in a most frigidly courteous letter to Mrs. Lilly, and tries to make himself believe he is not under weighty obligation to her as the pecuniary recompense for trouble and expense which she asks he pays.

Lionel has been a week at Perrantowers on this July afternoon, and Mrs. Lilly has found that she has almost miscalculated her ability to keep safe and strict watch and ward over him, and is anxiously debating with herself some new measures to be taken for the welfare of her troublesome inmate, not faltering, however, for a moment in her intention to keep Lionel as long as his father will permit him to stay.

"And if Captain Richard Dumaresq becomes a member of his family, I think it were better I should keep the poor lad altogether by me," she says to herself with clouding brow. "I fear Captain Dumaresq would not be scrupulous about ridding himself of a person who was in his way and who interfered with his schemes; nor I fear too truly would Evelyn Trefusis say him nay in doing a selfish deed."

And from the elder sister, whose character she knows, or thinks she knows, full well—but there are depths in those liquid violet eyes deeper than any one has fathomed as yet — her thoughts revert to the younger sister, the child that Miriam Lilly loved with almost maternal fondness, and from her, with a sigh to her nephew, Dick Dumaresq.

"And the poor lad acted with an honorable discretion in all things as far as I could learn," she mutters, frowning angrily, "and he had no thought in going away, but to return. I feel sure he failed or was duped, or betrayed, in some way, as the substance of his confidential letters have been treacherously repeated—in the same way as my letter was silenced or suppressed. I did not think I should ever write to Francis Dumaresq in vain."

A flush of pride, and some deeper feeling, rises to her pale brow, and her usually calm breast is so astir with angered, troubled feelings that she does not notice the slender figure that flits by the open window; nor until she is fairly startled by Imogene's voice does she look up from stirring her second batch of boiling preserves.

She looks fresh and pure, and cool, on this dusty, scorching July afternoon, as a young white rose, in her white cambric dress, and her pale-tan gloves, and her white straw hat lined with pale-yellow satin.

Fragile as fair, for there are telltale signs in the transparent skin, and the violet shadows under the great, soft, limpid, gray eyes that should not be in a face which has seen but seventeen summers; but there is a delicate pink color of pleasure and animation in her face now, and her eyes of gladness.

"I have such news for you, Mrs. Lilly!" she says, kissing her delightedly. "And how are you, and how is Mr. Lilly, and how is dear Lionel?" And [illegible]

The Surprise.

"The trouble with scientific management, as the employee understands it," said Samuel Gompers at a labor banquet in New York, "is that it's all to the employer's advantage and all to the disadvantage of the employee.

"The employee is like the lady whose husband said:

"'Learn to cook, darling, and I'll give you a surprise.'

"She took a six-months' cooking course and then brought home her diploma proudly. She could now cook like an angel.

"'Bring on my surprise,' she said.

"'This is it,' said her husband, smiling, and he rang for the cook and discharged her then and there."—Washington Star.

A Wise Provision.

Did you ever notice when a man smites his thumb with a hammer while putting down a carpet under his wife's supervision how quickly he thrusts the bruised and throbbing member into his mouth? People think it is because the application is soothing. But the movement is purely involuntarily, like winking. The man cannot help it. The fact is that nature knows what a man is apt to say under such circumstances, and has so provided him with an automatic stopper. Whenever he hits his thumb hard enough to hurt—and it doesn't take a very hard blow almost to kill a man when he is doing something he doesn't like to do—by a sort of interlocking system his thumb flies into his mouth, and for the critical moment speech is cut off.

Taste and Temperature.

The sense of taste resides in little flask shaped pockets imbedded in the skin of the surface of the tongue and in the upper part of the [illegible]. Each of these clubs has a fibre of a nerve connecting it with a larger nerve of the region. Anything to be tasted must be in a dissolved or gaseous condition so as to reach the interior of the bulbs, and difference in taste depend upon the varying intensity with which the impression is transmitted through the nerves. It is not surprising, then, that taste is much influenced by temperature and may temporarily be stopped altogether by extreme heat or cold. The sense of taste is, it appears, stronger at a temperature between 50 and 90 degrees F.

A PERFECT MEDICINE FOR LITTLE ONES

Baby's Own Tablets are a perfect medicine for little ones. They regulate the bowels, sweeten the stomach, thus drive out constipation, indigestion, break up colds and simple fevers, and make teething easy. Concerning them Mrs. John Babineau, Brest, N. B., writes: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets and have found them a perfect medicine for little ones." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

EVERY DISABLED MAN SHOULD KNOW

The Military Hospitals Commission has issued a pocket card entitled "What Every Disabled Soldier Should Know." Here are the things in detail:

That there is no such word as "impossible" in his dictionary.

That his natural ambition to earn a good living can be fulfilled.

That he can either get rid of his disability or acquire a new ability to offset it.

That the whole object of doctors, nurses, and instructors, is to help him in doing that very thing.

That he must help them to help him.

That he will have the most careful and effectual treatment known to science.

That interesting and useful occupations for a most valuable part of the treatment in Convalescent Hospitals and Sanatoria.

That if he cannot carry out his first duty by rejoining his comrades at the front, and if there is no light duty for him with the Canadian forces overseas, he is taken home to Canada, as soon as his condition and the shipping facilities make this possible.

That his strength and earning capacity will be restored there to the highest degree possible, through the Military Hospitals Commission.

That if he requires an artificial limb or kindred appliance it will be supplied free.

That every man disabled by service will receive a pension or gratuity in proportion to his disability.

That his pension cannot be reduced by his undertaking work or perfecting himself in some form of industry.

That his pay and allowance continue till he is cured or till his pension begins.

That the Dominion and Provincial Governments, the Municipal authorities, and all sorts of employers, give the returned soldier preference in filling vacant positions.

Bends In Big Guns

The newest American dreadnoughts are to be armed with sixteen-inch rifles, and the layman takes it as a matter of course that these monster weapons are merely bigger brothers of the fourteen-inch gun. But this offhand conclusion is decidedly at fault. The sixteen-inch gun is a more exacting engineering problem than the fourteen-inch weapon, and just because of its greater length and girth and weight it is a more difficult piece to make precise in its action. The bigger the gun the more it is prone to develop troublesome characteristics, and the ordnance engineer has his cunning heavily taxed in order to neutralize or to minimize these inherent tendencies.

To begin with, the sixteen-inch gun, without its mount, represents an outlay of $175,000, that being the price paid for the materials used and the skilled workmanship. Unless fabricated with exquisite regard to accuracy the weapon is neither safe to fire nor capable of standing up to its work during a relatively short active career, measured by something like a couple of hundred rounds.

It must be remembered that a sixteen inch shell weighs about a ton—to be exact, 2,100 pounds—and the powder impulse exerts sufficient energy back of the projectile to start it from a standstill and to send it hurtling from the weapon's muzzle at a velocity of 2,800 feet a second. It would not do to have that speeding shell jam in the bore of the rifle, because if suddenly arrested it would probably fracture the weapon if it did not cause a graver disaster. Therefore the ordnance engineer must see that the path represented by the bore is as nearly a straight line as it is mechanically and physically possible to make it.

A twelve-inch gun of 45 calibre is fifty-five feet long, and except at the single supporting point the heavy mass of the extended weapon is without any sustaining help. These monster pieces of ordnance are virtually single pivoted girders, and their power to resist bending or deformation depends essentially upon the strength of the materials employed and the distribution of the mass. Clearly, then, the bigger the rifle the greater becomes the disposition to droop toward the muzzle, and not only does this impair the shooting accuracy, but in time the weapon becomes a source of danger to its own people.

The weight of some of the big guns now in use in the navy causes them to droop at their muzzles as much as half or three-quarters of an inch, and this, if not realized and allowed for in sighting, will make the shooting inaccurate, the inaccuracy increasing with the length of range. In fact, the projectile on leaving the gun is directed by the last six feet of the muzzle. That is to say that if the rifle has a droop the shell follows the curvature instead of taking the line measured by the gun pointed at the telescope sight.

The bureau of ordnance in Washington has been working at this problem as guns have grown in length and diameter of bore. At the present time the great fourteen-inch weapons have an appreciable droop of only .28 of an inch. This droop is not enough to endanger the life of the gun or to impair its range, provided the sights are adjusted to it. But there is another influence at work which tends to affect this droop and to cause it to vary some hundredths of an inch from time to time. This is the weather. For instance, a gun will droop when the sun shines fiercely upon its upper side, while the under side is shaded. But so long as this total deflection does not exceed half an inch there is no danger of the shell jamming in passing along the slightly curved bore.

In the latest of our big naval weapons this droop has been still further reduced by extending the jacket or hoops further out over the forward part of the gun. This serves to stiffen the gun so that the sun has not as much deforming effect as heretofore. It may be asked, "What about the other guns now in service that have not been so reinforced to check drooping?" The bureau of ordnance has resorted to a very simple expedient in correcting this curvature.

The deformed weapon is simply rotated in the recoil sleeve of the mount until the underside of the rifle is uppermost. The muzzle then, instead of dipping actually, is curved skyward. In time the natural elasticity of the metal asserts itself, and the over hanging weight of the outstretched muzzle gradually presses the chase downward and straightens out the piece.—New York Sun.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

The garbage collectors of Toronto have called a strike. This won't matter. There will be no waste in Toronto since the food pledge canvass.

Walkerton Telescope boasts that its town has 3000 population and seven churches, which is quite plenty. However, we shouldn't say anything. Port Elgin has 1330 people and eight churches.

Owen Sound gave the Empire's greatest airman, Major Bishop, a royal welcome home last week. The town rose to the occasion splendidly, and in honoring the great aviator, has done honor to every man who serves the Empire's cause.

The woods are full of win-the-war candidates, but it is not said which war they want to win, the one in Europe or the election war. If the former, then we are safe in saying they have done and are doing very little. Slogans are all light, but the one called "win-the war" and bawled about by a lot of profiteering politicians, both grit and tory, gives one a headache.

Major Bishop, in reciting some stories of the front, gives one which has a grim humor to it as follows: "In company with another officer he was walking over a part of the ground that had recently been a battle field and hundreds of Germans, yet unburied, dotted the ground. The two of them decided to take one of the dead Germans into the mess as a surprise to the others and picked on one that was apparently sitting up. They went over to him and were surprised to find that he had been buried to the waist and when touched he fell apart." Needless to say they did not bring a German to mess that day.

Several local women are asking why they are not granted the vote at the same time as the mothers, sisters and wives of the soldiers. One lady who has been an indefatigable worker in Red Cross work ever since the war broke out, has no sons, and her husband is well over military age. She asks is it fair that she should be denied the vote. So far as The Times can see, it is not fair but manifestly unfair. We are quite in accord with the giving of the vote to the wives, mothers and sisters of the brave boys who have gone to the front, never to return, but we failed to understand why the government stopped there, when there had been such noble service rendered by fully 50 per cent of the women of our land in connection with the war. The female relatives of our soldiers have made great sacrifices but many thousands of women, who through no fault of their own have no relative of military age, have done great service in Red Cross work and on the farms. We believe the government has made a great mistake in not recognizing this.

We have have just been looking over a big sheet of menus sent out by the Food Controller's office. They look good, but are rather luxurious for the average Canadian. What's needed is a woman or two in that office who have raised families and kept the home going on the $12 or $15 per week their husbands earned.

Because they had heard that the Food Controller had ordered the confiscation of all canned fruit and vegetables over fifty pint jars per family, the people of Hanover Ont have refused to do any canning under the circumstances. This is a serious misunderstanding of the Food Controller's order, which prohibited the sale and purchase of certain canned vegetables. There had never been any suggestion of confiscation, the idea being to compel the use of fresh vegetables. The regulation does not affect the use of canned goods other than vegetables. Jumping at conclusions is unfair to the Food Controller, and mischievous in the extreme.

Denounces Methods of Food Controller

The Owen Sound Sun publishes a denunciation of the methods used to save food in Canada, from the pen of Dr Thurlow Fraser, who has only recently returned from service in England.

The clipping is sent to The Times by one of its subscribers who believes it a good plan to give as much publicity to Dr. Fraser's denunciation as possible.

After acknowledging that Britain eats war bread, and that he himself has eaten war bread and that Britain is in serious need of food, the Doctor says:

There are other truths which the public should now. While the people of Britain are hungry, and are asking us to stint ourselves to feed them, food sufficient to give the people of Britain enough and to spare, is being wasted in the manufacture of intoxicating drink. From the beginning of the war up to the time I left England in April of this year, an average of 4 000 tons per day of food grains were being used by the brewers and distillers. In that way they have wasted sufficient food to supply the whole population of England, Scotland and Ireland for a period of ten months.

We were almost without sugar there. Yet from the beginning of the war to that date an average of 240 tons of sugar a day was being wasted by the brewers. Cargoes of sugar, bought and paid for by merchants, caterers and others, were not allowed to be unloaded at the docks, unless they were delivered to brewers. Sugar sent by post by patriotic and philanthropic persons in Owen Sound to acquaintances and friends in Britain has been refused delivery to those to whom it was addressed, presumably that it might go to the same purpose.

That waste still goes on after three years of war and privations on the part of the people of Britain. Mr. Hanna tells us: "You betray your country's cause when you waste food." What of these men who have wasted enough to feed their countrymen for a year while their countrymen are facing starvation!

We have a measure of the same thing in Canada. The Food Controller urges us to use corn, rye, barley, as substitutes for wheat. But so far as I can learn, no restriction whatever has been put on the waste of corn, rye and barley in the manufacture of intoxicants. Wheat indeed was prohibited; but the amount thereby saved was almost negligible.

I am as willing as any man to deny myself for his country, for the Old Land, and for the cause of liberty. But I am not willing to be made a fool of in this fashion. I am not willing to stint myself and family of the little, in order that the brewers and distillers should destroy the much, and declare 32 per cent dividend on their stock, as some of them have done this year.

An Appreciation

(Port Arthur Chronicle)

A very keen sense of personal loss was felt in the hearts of many people when it became known Saturday morning that Mrs. Alex. Ross had passed away. All week, as she hovered on the borderland, the sadness was reflected by her friends, for those who knew her best loved her most, and all felt that her place in our midst would be empty indeed. Coming here a bride twenty-five years ago, she won her way by her sweet disposition and bright personality. Her thoughtfulness for the happiness of others, and her sociability were outstanding qualities. She was never so happy as when dispensing hospitality in her beautiful home, and especially was it her delight to entertain her former friends as they passed through the city, extending the invitation to mutual acquaintances, thereby creating many happy and lasting impressions. It was in her own home where her virtues as wife and mother, homemaker and housekeeper, shone forth very distinctly, and here she will be most missed, but the light of her influence will live on. Port Arthur sustains a deep loss in the early demise of this estimable woman, but her memory will ever be cherished by those who knew her intimately and enjoyed her friendship which was sincere and lasting: "As good as gold as true as steel."

THE PROFITEER

The following lines were composed by Rev. J. T. Stapleton of Arkwright, and were recited by the author with great effect at a gathering in honor of a returned soldier. The lines have especial merit, and will be appreciated by Times readers:

There is a day that's yet to be
A day of light and liberty;
When all that's vile and mean and wrong,
Shall pass from this Dominion
And we shall nobler be.

What to my land that day shall bring
But getting quickly after him
Whose only thought is profiting,
Amid the war's most awful din—
He's only traitor, full of sin,

There is a life we all can live,
A life of blessing, and to give
The best we have that good may reign
In this dear link in Empire's chain,
And we may grander be.

Quiet Wedding

One of Port Elgin's most popular young ladies was quietly married on Thanksgiving Day. Miss Dossie Wankel, the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Wankel, was united in wedlock to Mr. Ernest G. Arens, manager of the munition works at Orillia.

The house was prettily decorated with flowers and ferns, and the wedding ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Mann. The bride looked exceedingly charming in a handsome blue tailored suit and large black picture hat, and was assisted by Miss Grace McPherson. The groom was supported by Mr. Roy Wankel. Miss McDowell, of Owen Sound, played the wedding music.

After the ceremony a buffet lunch was served, and congratulations extended. The happy couple left in their motor car for Orillia, and were given receptions on the way by friends at Owen Sound, Collingwood and Orillia. The bride's going away gown was of blue and gray with black and green coat. The groom's gift to the bride was a valuable pearl pin, and mink furs. The Times joins with hosts of friends in town and district in extending best wishes for much joy and prosperity to Mr. and Mrs Arens.

Mr. George Henry was in Owen Sound Sunday attending the funeral of his brother Charles. On Sunday last he took the services in a mission connected with the Presbyterian church, and after the service he was taken ill and sent to the hospital. It was found appendicitis had gone too far for operation. He did not rally and passed away on Friday morning. He was a much respected citizen of Owen Sound, and his death was greatly regretted by all citizens.

EBENEZER

Mr. C. A. Thomas attended the S. S. convention at Wiarton last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Garrett, of Peterbourgh, are visiting friends here.

Mrs. Sergison, of Detroit, is visiting her mother and other members of the family.

The Ladies Aid will meet this Wed. at Mrs. J. Sieffert's.

Southampton has the Keystone trophy.

Among those home for thanksgiving were: Bert Cottrill, of Toronto; Edwin Atkinson, of Walkerton; Margaret Rushton, of Toronto; Wm. Robertson of Toronto.

Mrs. Schell has received word that her son Clifford has arrived in France. He gave up a captaincy to go. This makes the second time, as he give it up to go to England but it was restored last spring.

Hogs dropped to $17 this week.

Miss Lola Darling has returned from a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Currier in Ottawa.

Eric McGillivray is home from a trip west.

Andrew McTavish, of Teeswater spent the week-end with Clarence Nelson. Misses Reta Bell and Winnie George visited Miss Ruby Nelson.

Mrs. (Capt.) McPherson left Tuesday to spend the winter with her son at Newcastle, New Hampshire.

Mrs. Chadwick and Miss Osborne of Sutton west, are spending a month with Mrs. Wyant.

The marriage was celebrated quietly at noon Tuesday by Rev. Mr. Mann, of Miss Nettie Cumming, daughter of Mrs. R. Cumming, to Mr. Wm. Restall of Toronto. After a wedding dinner the happy couple left for their future home in Toronto. Congratulations will be extended by many friends, the bride being very popular in Port Elgin and Saugeen.

"Let Me Help You Carry the Burden, Mother"

"If Canada fails us in October, we must curtail many of our activities."
Sir ARTHUR STANLEY, Chairman, Executive Committee, British Red Cross.

It now costs $300,000.00 a week to carry on the work of the British Red Cross, or $16,000,000.00 a year.

Every minute of the day and night it costs $30 to minister to the sick and wounded and dying.

Last year Ontario's magnificent contribution paid for the entire work of the British Red Cross for nearly six weeks.

This year, in view of the greater need, it is earnestly and confidently hoped that Ontario's contributions will be as great proportionately as the magnificent offering of last year.

Our trust is, that the Citizens of Ontario will give generously to this noble cause on—

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON IX.—JUNE 2, 1912.

Hypocrisy and Sincerity.—Matt. 6: 1-18.

Commentary.—I. How to give (vs. 1-4.) 1. Take heed—Even in so solemn a matter as almsgiving and other religious exercises, there is danger of performing them with a wrong spirit. Alms—The Greek word which is translated alms in this verse is a more general term than the one rendered alms in v. 2; there it means righteousness as in R. V. It includes almsgiving, prayer and fasting, the ordinary religious acts of that time. Before men—The motive in performing these acts must not be to win the applause of others. No reward of your Father—The motive was "to be seen of men," and that end was gained, but there was no reward from God. 2. When thou doest thine alms—Jesus recognized the fact that the Pharisees practised charity. It was a part of their religion and commendable in itself, and incumbent upon every child of God. Alms includes all acts of kindness to the poor, as providing food, clothing, shelter and whatever is necessary to prevent suffering. Almsgiving does not make one a Christian, but a true Christian does not neglect this duty. Do not sound a trumpet—It may be that the Pharisees were accustomed to call the attention of the people to the gifts they were bestowing by sounding trumpets, but it is more probable that the expression which the Saviour here uses warns against ostentation in the act of almsgiving.

3. Let not thy left hand know—A symbol of secrecy in striking contrast to the display made by hypocrites. 4. Thine alms may be in secret—The great Jewish teachers taught secrecy in giving, but the Pharisees in practise violated their own teachings. Seeth in secret—Although the alms are in secret, the Father knows all about them. Reward thee openly—The reward will be peace and approval of conscience, the satisfaction of having aided another, and a nobility of character unknown to the selfish and sordid, or to those who seek the applause of men.

II. How to pray (vs. 5-15.) 5. When thou prayest—It is taken for granted that God's people pray. Jesus approaches a very vital part of the religious life. Prayer implies the existence of a being who has wisdom, power and compassion, and it implies dependence and faith on the part of the one praying. As the hypocrites—Jesus gives directions regarding prayer first negatively. The motive must not be for show. Standing—This was the usual posture of the Jews in prayer. "The early Christians followed a more uniform practise of kneeling. See Acts 9: 40; 20: 36. The posture is not essential. So far as the act is significant, kneeling is naturally the more reverential."—Whedon. In the synagogues—This was a proper place for prayer, but no place to vaunt one's own piety. They prayed to attract attention, standing apart from the rest as if deeply engaged in prayer, yet glancing around to see if they were noticed.

6. shut thy door—In contrast to the practise of the Pharisees. All spectators are excluded. to thy Father—The prayer is intended to reach only the ear of God. which is in secret—He is the invisible God, but we can realize his presence. seeth in secret—He is everywhere present and knows all things. He looks into the deepest recesses of the heart. He knows our needs and the sincerity of our requests. shall recompense thee (R.V.—The prayer will be answered by granting the request made or by withholding what we ask and giving something that is better for us. 7. vain repetitions, as the heathen—This forbids the practise of repeating set forms of prayer over and over in a mechanical way. much speaking—The Jews had a saying, "Every one that multiplies prayer is heard," but Jesus taught differently. 8. your Father knoweth—Although he knows, he delights to hear his children ask in sincerity and faith.

9. after this manner—The Lord's prayer, as it is usually called, is both a form for us to use (Luke 11:2), and a model for all prayer. It contains all the elements of true prayer. our Father—The opening word of the prayer indicates that all of us have an interest in God. Here is an intimacy of relation that is an inspiration to everyone that loves God. which art in heaven—"Which" formally expressed quality, and the words, "which art in heaven," mean, who art of such a nature as to be in heaven." While God is everywhere, yet we speak of His abode. hallowed be thy name—Thy name be held sacred, revered. 10. thy kingdom come—This petition asks for the coming of Christ's kingdom of grace, love, power and peace in the hearts of men and among men.

11. give us—God is our Father, hence we may reasonably and with expectation look to him for the things we need. daily bread—What we need for to-day, of temporal good and spiritual as well. We labor to earn our bread, yet it all comes from God. 12. forgive us our debts—Sin is represented as a debt, which God alone can forgive. Henry says, "Sin is an old debt, a just debt, a great and growing debt." We are utterly unable to discharge the debt, and can do nothing but throw ourselves upon the divine mercy. as we forgive—This petition is a plea for forgiveness with the measure of forgiveness expressed, "As we also have forgiven our debtors" (R. V.) 13. lead us not into temptation—Trials await God's children, and this petition asks that we be not permitted to enter those tests that will try us beyond our power to endure. deliver us from evil—The deliverance asked for is from all evil, temporal and spiritual. We can pray this prayer in faith that God will hear the answer. 14. if ye forgive—If you have a forgiving spirit towards us. trespasses—Offences. your ... Father will also forgive. This emphasizes and explains the petition in the prayer for forgiveness. 15. neither will your Father forgive—Much is involved in praying the Lord's prayer in sincerity. We shall be unforgiven unless we forgive.

III. How to fast (vs. 16-18). 16. When ye fast—The Jews fasted twice each week. Disfigure their faces—In their attempts to express penitence of heart the Pharisees either veiled their faces or left them unwashed in token of grief. Their reward—Simply to be seen of men. 17. Anoint...wash—This was the customary, daily course of the Jews, hence Jesus told them to follow it when fasting. 18. Not unto men—Religious acts performed to be observed by others are hollow mockery. The sincere in heart perform their duties with God's glory in view.

Questions.—What religious duties are treated in this lesson? What does the word "alms" in the first lesson mean? What is the meaning in the second verse? What reward has the hypocrite for his alms and prayers? What are the directions for true almsgiving? What was wrong about the praying of the hypocrites? What is the method of true prayer? Name the petitions in the Lord's prayer. What are the conditions of our being forgiven? What directions are given as to fasting?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Genuine and spurious piety.

I. Defined in the practice of religion.
II. Defined in the heart devotions.
III. Defined in the personal life.

I. Defined in the practice of religion. Jesus ever sought in his instructions and by reproof to enable his hearers to see the contrast between the false and true in matters of religion, and thus to lead them to the higher life and to his standing of true piety. The first radical perversion of religious life set forth here, consisted in the desire to appear religious before men. The practice of almsgiving was commendable and belonged to the duties which were prescribed in the law as touching man's duty to man. It was a deed of justice as well as of mercy. The best works become sin if done only for the sake of appearance. The Pharisees performed these religious duties in a loud, ostentatious and unprofitable manner. In comparison they were like the "noisy, foaming torrent which, with a rock for its bed and barrenness on its banks, makes itself seen and heard," quite in contrast with the genuine, gracious piety, affluent in blessings, but retiring from observation. Reward comes to both; to the former, the applause of men, which they sought, but the disapprobation of God whom they mocked; to the latter, a reward suited to their devotion and bestowed by the heavenly Father.

II. Defined in the heart devotions. It is the test of a man, what he is when alone with God. Prayer is intended to remind him that his Father, his home and his eternal inheritance are above. In God all the noblest aspirations are above. In God all the noblest aspirations of men are met. Secret prayer is indispensable to the development of spiritual life because of the needs which can be presented in no other way. Its privacy promotes meditation and heart scrutiny. Its object is to be alone with God, to cultivate heart religion and to obtain needed supplies of grace. The secret life of the Christian is the most important, and the silent influences of secret prayer the most productive. Prayer is an act of the heart and not of the lips. The Lord's prayer contains the essence of the Old Testament. In this prayer we are taught to depend upon and confide in God as children. What faith says, "Father," love says, "Our." The same spirit of adoption dwells alike in all the children of God. The Lord's prayer is an intercession for others, as well as for ourselves. Fatherhood indicates personality. Our sonship has its duties. The heart grows so full of God that it can hold nothing else, and its contemplations expand to the limits of the whole earth. Doing God's will dignifies the humblest lot. This shows us with what meek acquiescence we should pray, for we have made mistakes enough by following our own will. Growing in the knowledge of His will, we are guided in our desire for its accomplishment. He ever wills our present and everlasting welfare. The prayer for daily bread is the language of personal need, and conscious dependence. Earthly interests have an appropriate place in our prayer. God's providence is our surest estate, his bounty our best treasure, and his fatherly care our most certain support. There can be no genuine prayer for forgiveness without a forgiving spirit.

III. Defined in the personal life. The proper and genuine tendency of religion is inward, for God rules the secret sanctuary of spiritual life. It can not be true piety which primarily tends to externalism and show. Sinful intentions in the heart destroy the merit of holy outward acts. Outward appearances when fasting should betoken spiritual triumph and rest. Let sincere fasting be concealed under the cheerful garb of holy festivity. Christ urged the importance of this matter in alms-giving, in prayer and in fasting. The gospel points out the great life that lies beyond and charges man so to conduct himself in this life that he may gain the higher. This prayer points heavenward.

WHITE MOURNING

That Is What Astor's Young Widow Will Wear.

New York, May 27.—Mrs. John Jacob Astor, who at nineteen was widowed by the Titanic disaster, will wear white—not black—as mourning for her husband. Mrs. Astor wished—indeed, felt it obligatory on her—to wear the deepest mourning. But Mrs Force, her mother, believes she is too young to drape herself with black cloth and black crepe. Such funeral trappings might depress her spirits, even affect her health, at this the most important time of her life.

So Mrs. Force has overruled her daughter's wish, and has ordered widow's weeds of white for her. The gowns are cut on the simplest lines and, like the millinery, are being made at a fashionable Fifth avenue mourning clothes store.

At the shop where the Astors white mourning is being made, it is said that white mourning robes are being more and more worn.

The Chinese wear white as emblematic of the purified spirit of the departed.

For generations purple has been the hue of royal and official mourning. In Venice the funeral gondolas are red.

Violet or purple is the Turk's mourning color. He wears it because it is the hue of the earliest flowers of spring and to him symbolizes hope on the one side and sorrow on the other.

Yellow is worn as mourning by many orientals.

FARM AND GARDEN

MONEY IN RAISING COLTS.

I will contribute a little of my experience with brood mares. The first team I ever owned, nine years ago, was mules. At the suggestion of my landlord I exchanged the mules for a pair of good mares and began to raise colts. In the last eight years I have raised thirteen colts, some fillies, some horses, but most of them mules, writes W. R. Cockrell, in Farm and Ranch.

I sold some of these colts at weaning time, but have kept most of them until old enough to work. I have sold eleven for which I received $1,050, and have two fillies yet, two and three years old, that are well worth $250. More than this, in the last six years I have raised and sold six good cows. I never sell a heifer, and if the calf happens to be a bull, I sell it and buy a heifer, raise it, breed it, and when it comes in sell it for $30.

One can scarcely miss the expense. Five years ago (at the suggestion of this same landlord) I bought 83 acres of land, paying $63 per acre, and only paying down $625. While this land is not entirely paid out, yet I am proud to say I see the end. We have been improving our home little by little all the while and enjoy it more each year.

I am thankful for the suggestions of a good landlord and the help of good brood mares. Let us all remember that life is just what we make it.

MORE INTEREST IN HOGS.

It is very clear that the interest in hog breeding in this country is on the increase. A gentleman who attended a prominent state fair in the west says there was always a crowd among the live stock, but there was a throng of interested people, mostly farmers and their wives, where the hogs were on exhibition. One farmer told him that he had always raised hogs, more or less, but he had done so with the idea that a hog is a hog. He looked at it differently now, and was at the fair determined to learn what a good hog is. That, he says, was the general sentiment, and similar sentiments come to us from other directions—from everywhere, in fact. We are glad of it, for it is just as easy to raise good stock as bad, and the good stock brings most money—we sincerely believe great profits. If you can do nothing else, breed only to good males.

GRAPES ON THE FARM.

Every farmer in the grape-growing section may have a profitable bit of ground to grapes—a small vineyard. Not only the local but the shipping demand is growing and prices are remunerative. Besides, grapes are a very useful fruit in the family. No fruit is more healthful, and it may be put up in many easy and cheap ways.

Grape vines require very little attention. They must be staked in a way to keep them off the ground, and in the very early spring should be cut back and pruned closely. That is about all there is to it. The grapes are borne on entirely new growth and close pruning increases their growth, and admits the needed sunshine.

ALFALFA TRUTHS.

Alfalfa may be successfully raised on almost any type of soil, provided that it is well drained, sweet, free of weeds and well supplied with organic matter and mineral plant food.

Good drainage must be provided.

The ground must be free of weed seeds.

If the soil is sour, it must be limed before alfalfa can do well.

Soils lacking in fertility should be well manured, as alfalfa requires large amounts of plant food.

Inoculation of the soil will generally be necessary, and must not be neglected. Soil from a good alfalfa field or from a place where sweet clover is growing should be used for inoculating.

The best land on the farm should be used for the first trial of alfalfa. If successful, it will pay better than any other crop.

Alfalfa is an excellent feed for all kinds of live stock.

It is rich in flesh forming and milk producing nutrients.

It is more digestible than red clover and is not far behind such materials as wheat bran in feeding value.

Alfalfa will yield from three to six tons of hay per acre per season, according to the fertility of the soil.

FARM FURROWS.

All good bolts and nuts should be removed from old machinery that is to be disposed of as scrap iron. It often happens that a single nut or bolt is worth more to a busy farmer than the whole amount received from the sale of an old binder.

We quite often hear some farmers say that when a gas tractor is made that will successfully handle all farm machinery they will sell their horses and buy one. Their theory is sound, but who are they going to sell their horses to when gas tractors are made as perfect as that.

It is a pleasure to sit by and watch the work horses pick up the first green grass that appears in the spring. No doubt it tastes about the same to them as the first "garden sass" does to the human being.

Our friends, the song birds, are with us again for another long season, and the man who would kill or injure a single one intentionally is but little better than a brute. What could be more desolate than a summer without song birds?

The diameter of the silo should be regulated according to the size of the herd, as to the material to be used in its construction much will depend on where a man lives and the size of his bank account. The hollow brick silo having two air spaces is, perhaps, the best that can be built, but the first cost is greater than most of the others.

It is not a wise farmer who scratches a disc over a muddy field just because he has a disc that will not cling and horses that are able to pull it. The work done by the horses is hard enough but the work done to the field is worse than worthless.

A very good seed bed may be made in the stalk field by going over it twice with a sharp disc. The second discing is the one that does the finest work, the first one merely breaks down the stalks and scratches the earth.

Hen manure is an excellent fertilizer, but it is not the thing for potato ground. Well-rotted cow manure is better and does the best service if applied after the potatoes are planted. If it starts the weeds, so much the better. Kill the weeds by frequent cultivation.

Flax used to be more extensively grown than it is now. The linseed mills have been conducting campaigns to get more farmers to try flax growing, since they are finding their raw material shorter every year. Flax is now high in price, and all flax products are consequently high accordingly.

In the Poultry World

"You bet," said the man, "I've certainly got some dandy chickens. They are all pedigreed but three, and I couldn't catch them."

Both parties are evidently sincere in their belief that it is the legband that makes the fowl a show bird. Neither of them will make a successful poultryman until he learns that the band merely carries the name of the individual fowl, and cuts no more ice than the name Smith, Robinson or Snodgrass has to do with the real worth of the man who bears it.

ANCESTRAL QUALITY FIRST.

In selecting a bird for the breeding pen the first thing to consider is the quality of the bird's ancestors. This comes before the real merit of the individual specimen, since the high scoring bird may be worth almost any price for exhibition purposes, but not be worth a dollar as a breeder. When we can trace a bird's lineage back through several generations and find that in each one the same desirable points come out good and strong, we can be reasonably sure that these same good points will continue to appear if the other half of the pen does not counteract them, and the longer these features have been bred in line the surer the bird will be to transmit them to his progeny.

"BLOOD WILL TELL."

To illustrate, a few years ago we paid what was then considered a high price for a sitting of Rose Comb Red eggs. Only one cockerel was hatched from the lot, and he was no more than a fair specimen of what a Red should be. His sire, grandsire and great-grandsire were among the best of their day in both shape and color, and for this reason we mated him to a pen of choice pullets. The result was highly satisfactory, as he gave us better stock than we secured from birds that were his superior in general appearance, but his inferiors in breeding. The strong points of his sire and grandsire and great-grandsire came out strong in this mating. When he was one year old he was better than when he was a cockerel, and when two years old he had improved so much more that we considered him good enough to show. We won third prize, the first place going to one of his sons. Birds of poorer breeding that outshone him as cockerels deteriorated with each succeeding year.

We have at the present time a cock bird who won second as cock in two of Michigan's best shows. He is a good bird, but we do not use him in our special matings as we know nothing about his pedigree. It may be of the best, while on the other hand perhaps he was the only good bird in an ordinary scrub flock. As we do not care to run the risk incurred in using a bird of unknown ancestry in our breeding pens we have put him in one of our range flocks. A few years ago a man started in with some good stock, good enough so that he won more than his share of ribbons at the local shows where the competition was pretty strong. Every year since then he has "swapped roosters," consequence of which he has not advanced a step, while his competitors have shut him out of the field entirely.

BREEDING AND INDIVIDUALITY REQUIRED.

In an article in one of the poultry journals a month or two ago I spoke of "putting as much importance in the breeding behind the bird as in the bird himself." Shortly afterward I received a letter from a fancier who asked: "Do you mean that breeders will pay well for good stock, even if the birds themselves are not as perfect as those of unknown pedigree? I do not understand you, and you know you are writing for a few people, at least, who know as little about the poultry business as I do."

That is just what I do mean, and what I have tried to make clear in this article. The first question asked by the fancier of experience when buying a bird for his breeding pens is, "What is his ancestry?" Of course there are other questions which must be answered to his satisfaction before he will close the deal, but a careful breeder will not risk destroying the results of years of scientific mating by the introduction among his breeders of a bird without pride of ancestry. C. N. Whitaker.

Green bone, when properly ground, is absolutely the best food for fowls. It provides all the elements for producing the egg and some to spare for the maintenance of the bird. Green bone contains meat, blood and a large amount of phosphate of lime, together with other nutritious mineral substances in partial solution.

As a matter of fact, the word "strain" doesn't mean very much these days in most cases.

While these old hens are doing the incubator act so faithfully do not forget that they must have some grit and charcoal. These two articles are very important items in keeping the bowels in order, and if she does her work properly she has no time to run all over the place to pick up these necessities of nature and it is not likely they can be found if chickens have been kept long on the same ground.

If you want to raise chicks to maturity, make them work hard for their food, but be sure that they get enough.

It will be noticed that hens on the farm range in spring are very active in securing green grass and worms. In the same manner, if the hens can be kept actively engaged in winter in securing their feeds they will be healthier and lay more.

Do not leave a pail of water standing in the yard, or the chicks may fall into it to drink.

YOUNG LADY SUICIDED.

North Battleford, Sask., May 27.—Miss Devine, North Battleford, daughter of one of the most prominent families in the Northwest, committed suicide last night by taking poison. Her action was prompted, it is thought, by her engagement being broken off on Sunday with the man with whom she was to be married.

Says one of Georgia's philosophers: "So long as I'm a-livin' and have groceries and firewood, and warm clothes, and tax money, and good health, any weather the Lord sends is the right weather for me!"—Atlanta Constitution.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

Montreal—At the Canadian Pacific live stock market the receipts of live stock for the week amounted to eighty cattle, 250 sheep and lambs, 1,000 hogs and 1,250 calves. The offerings on the market this morning consisted of 200 cattle, 200 sheep and lambs, 1,000 hogs and 1,000 calves.

An active trade was done in cattle, there being a good demand from both butchers and packers, as they were all short of supplies, and the market in consequence was cleaned up early at firm prices. Top quality steers sold at $8; good at $7.50 to $7.75, and the lower grades from that down to $6 to $6.50 per 100 lbs. There was a brisk demand for butchers' cows and sales were made freely at from $4 to $6.75, and the bulls offered brought from $4.50 to $6.25 per 100 pounds.

The demand for sheep and lambs was brisk, and prices ruled firm, with sales of sheep at from $5 to $6 each, and spring lambs at from $4 to $6 each, while calves sold freely at from $3 to $5 each. The tone of the market for hogs was strong, and prices were firmly maintained with an active trade in selected lots, at $9.00 per 100 pounds, weighed off cars.

THE ITALIANS

Will Go to Tripoli Instead of Coming to America.

Philadelphia, May 27.—Commander Luigi Luiggia, inspector general of the Royal Italian Engineers and professor of harbor engineering at the Royal University of Rome, who is here as one of Italy's delegates to the international navigation congress, which opens here on Thursday, asserts that emigration from Italy to America is about to end. Instead of coming to this country, the surplus population of Italy is to be diverted to Tripoli.

"The Italian Government," says Commander Luiggia, "is making plans to stop the outflow to America and shortly the government will take care of these subjects in Tripoli. We are able to take care of all of them in Tripoli and we are able to offer them inducements such as will prevent their coming to the United States."

HIT BY BOLT

Struck Tower and Tied Up Toronto Cars.

Toronto despatch: An electrical phenomena, occurring in the heavy electrical storm that swept over the Niagara peninsula yesterday morning, plunged the stores and offices using the Toronto Power Company's light into the darkness of the murky, rainy morning, and stalled the street cars for more than two hours.

At about 10.50 o'clock a large, round ball of greenish fire descended from the sky and struck one of the Electrical Development Company's transmission towers. Immediately the surrounding country was startled by the sharp rattle of the electrical artillery and illuminated by the piercing, blue-greenish light that enveloped the tower.

BOY DROWNED

Lad Gave His Life to Save His Bible.

Brampton, Ont., despatch: Archie McKechney, 8 years age, the only son of Mrs. A. McKechney, a local widow, lost his life this evening through trying to recover an old Bible which had fallen into the creek.

Endeavoring to draw the big book out of the swollen stream, opposite St. Paul's Church, by means of a pole, the lad lost his balance, and tumbled into the muddy water. A long pole was extended to him from the shore as soon as he rose to the surface, but he had not sufficient strength to cling to it. His rubber boots and sweater also weighed him down, and although he rose a second time, ten yards downstream and struggled for a moment, no adequate assistance was near, and he sank again in a few moments.

The body has not been recovered.

DEFEATED REBELS.

Torreon, Mexico, May 27.—A federal column under General Blanquet, with artillery, defeated a band of rebels near Aviles, in the state of Durango, ten miles east of Torreon, in a three-hour battle yesterday. The rebel losses are said to be heavy, while the federals report no killed.

Secure & Profitable Bonds Paying 6

¶ Price Bros. & Company have been in business in Quebec over 100 years. It is the largest industry in Quebec Province. Their holdings of pulp and timber lands are 6,000 miles in extent, and have been valued by experts at over $13,000,000. The net earnings in 1910 were $448,000,000. The new pulp mill now under construction will double these earnings. Timber limits are insured with Lloyds of England against fire.

¶ Price Bros. & Company First Mortgage Bonds pay 6 per cent. interest on their present price. They will assuredly appreciate in value. Considering interest return, security, and future increase in value, they are an unusually attractive investment.

On application we will send you literature fully describing these bonds.

CLIP THIS AND PIN ON WIFE'S DRESSER

Cincinnati man tells how to shrivel up corns or calluses so they lift off with fingers.

Ouch ! ! ! ! ! ! This kind of rough talk will be heard less here in town if people troubled with corns will follow the simple advice of this Cincinnati authority, who claims that a few drops of a drug called freezone when applied to a tender, aching corn or hardened callus stops soreness at once, and soon the corn or callus dries up and lifts right out without pain.

He says freezone dries immediately and never inflames or even irritates the surrounding skin. A small bottle of freezone will cost very little at any drug store, but will positively remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet. Millions of American women will welcome this announcement since the inauguration of the high heels. If your druggist doesn't have freezone tell him to order a small bottle for you.

HAVE YOU WEAK LUNGS?

Do colds settle on your chest or in your bronchial tubes? Do coughs hang on, or are you subject to throat troubles?

Such troubles should have immediate treatment with the rare curative powers of Scott's Emulsion to guard against consumption which so easily follows.

Scott's Emulsion contains pure cod liver oil which peculiarly strengthens the respiratory tract and improves the quality of the blood; the glycerine in it soothes and heals the tender membranes of the throat.

Scott's is prescribed by the best specialists. You can get it at any drug store.

CANADA

Military Service Act, 1917

Explanatory Announcement by the Minister of Justice

THE MILITARY SERVICE ACT has received the assent of the Governor-General and is now part of the law of the land. It will be enforced accordingly, and the patriotism and good sense of the people can be relied upon to support it. Resistance to its enforcement, however, by word or act must and will be repressed, as resistance to any other law in force must be.

Reinforcements under the Military Service Act immediately required

It is the intention of the Government immediately to exercise the power which the Act confers and to call out men for military service in order to provide reinforcements for the Canadian forces. This is necessary since the military authorities report that the reserves available or in sight for reinforcement will shortly be exhausted unless this step be taken.

First call limited to men between 20 and 34 who were unmarried or widowers without children on July 6, 1917

The present call will be limited to men not in the schedule of exceptions who were unmarried or widowers without children on 6th July, 1917, are at least twenty years of age, and were born on or since January 1st, 1883. Of this Class all those will be entitled to conditional exemption whose services in their present occupations, agricultural, industrial or other, are essential in the national interest, and whose business or domestic responsibilities are such that serious hardship would ensue if their services be required. Conscientious scruples based upon a prohibition of combatant service by the articles of faith of the religious denomination to which men belong will also be respected. The men first required to serve will consequently be those who can be called upon with the least disturbance of the economic and social life of the country.

Civil Tribunals to deal with exemptions

Questions of exemption will be determined, not by the military authorities or by the Government, but by civil tribunals composed of representative men who are familiar with local conditions in the communities in which they serve, who will generally have personal knowledge of the economic and family reasons which those whose cases come before them have had for not volunteering their services and who will be able sympathetically to estimate the weight and importance of such reasons. Provincial Appellate Tribunals constituted from the existing Judiciary of the respective provinces will be provided to correct mistakes made by Local Tribunals, and a Central Appeal Tribunal for the whole of Canada, selected from among the present Judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, will be constituted in order that identical principles may be applied throughout the country. In this way every man may rest assured of the fair and full consideration of his circumstances and the national requirements both civil and military.

Proclamation will announce the day

A proclamation will issue calling out the bachelors and widowers referred to and fixing a day on or before which every man must report for service to the military authorities unless he has before that day made an application for exemption.

How to apply for exemption

Applications for exemption may be made by written notice on forms which will be available at every post office, and will be transmitted free of postage. They will not, however, be required to be made in this way; but may be presented by the applicants in person to the exemption tribunals. The cases of those who have given written notice in advance will take precedence, and appearance in person will therefore be likely to involve considerably more inconvenience and delay to the men concerned, so that it is recommended that advantage be generally taken of the facilities for written application.

Exemption Tribunals in all parts of Canada

The local exemption tribunals will be constituted with the least delay possible, consistent with the selection of representative individuals to compose them, and the instruction of the members in their duties. There will be more than one thousand of such tribunals throughout Canada, each consisting of two members, one of whom will be nominated by a Joint Committee of Parliament, and the other by one of the Judges of the existing Courts. Every effort will be made by the wide distribution of tribunals, and by provision where necessary for their sitting in more than one place, to minimise the inconvenience to which men will be put in obtaining the disposition of their cases.

A Registrar will be appointed in each Province, who will be named in the proclamation and to whom enquiries may be addressed. Each Provincial Registrar will transmit to the appropriate tribunal the applications for exemption which have been submitted in advance of the sittings, and men who have sent these in will not be required to attend the tribunals until notified to do so. Other applicants should attend personally on the tribunal without notice.

How to report for service

Men who do not desire to claim exemption will report to the military authorities for service either by mail or in person at any time after the issue of the proclamation. Forms of report by mail will be found in all post offices, and, like applications for exemption, will be transmitted free of postage.

Early report advantageous

No man who reports for service will, although he may be medically examined and passed as fit, be required to go into camp or join a battalion until after a day fixed by the proclamation sufficiently late to permit of the disposition by the local tribunals of most, if not all, of the applications for exemption which may come before them. Thus no advantage will be gained by delaying or disadvantage incurred by prompt report for service on the part of those who do not intend to apply for exemption.

Facilities for immediate medical examination

Immediately upon the issue of the proclamation, medical boards will sit at every mobilization centre for the examination of men who report for service or who, subject to their right within the time limited to apply for exemption, desire to have their physical fitness determined in order to allay any doubt as to their physical condition, or to know definitely and in advance whether there is a possibility of their services being required. Certificates of physical unfitness issued by these Medical Boards will be accepted without any further investigation by exemption tribunals when they sit. Men found physically fit who have not reported for service may nevertheless apply for exemption on any of the prescribed grounds, including even their physical condition if dissatisfied with the Medical Board's conclusion.

Notice to join the colors

As reinforcements are required, notice to report to the nearest mobilization centre will be given from time to time to the men found liable and passed as fit for service. Disobedience of such notice will render the offender liable to punishment, but punishment for failure to report for military service, or to report subsequently for duty when called upon, will be imposed ordinarily by the civil magistrates; offenders, however, will remain liable for the performance of their military duties notwithstanding any civil punishment which may be imposed and will be liable to military punishment in cases in which civil proceedings are not taken.

Watch for the Proclamation

Notice of the day appointed for the making of a claim for exemption or for report for military service will be published as widely as possible, but, as no personal notice can be given until the individuals called out have so reported themselves or claimed exemption, men possibly concerned are warned to inform themselves with regard to the day fixed, since neglect may involve the loss by them of important privileges and rights.

Ottawa, September 11, 1917.

CHAS. J. DOHERTY,
Minister of Justice.

The Greatest Foe Disaster

On Sunday the Tribune printed an article discussing the casualty lists of the war on their military side. But there is another and even more illuminating aspect to this discussion of losses during the conflict—that which bears upon the lists of battle. It is an examination of this phase which demonstrates the extent of the disaster to Germany of the present war.

The German permanent losses—that is, the number of Germans killed, crippled and permanently removed from the battle line—amounted for the first three years of war to 4,000,000. The figures are those of the French general staff, but there is no reason to question them, as the sources of information of all general staffs permit them to know the losses of their foes and their own losses serve as a guide. At the moment of war Germany had available, including the younger men who would reach military age before the end of 1918, a little more than 11,000,000. This figure represents the fit, not the aggregate male population.

For three years, then, the German loss has been rather more than a third of her able-bodied males—36 per cent. to be exact. If the German permanent loss for the current year should be what it was in each of the first two years—that is, 1,500,000 (the Russian collapse lessened it for last year, because it not only reduced casualties suffered from Russian armies, but slowed down the Allied offensive) — aggregate permanent loss of the Germans for four years would be 5,500,000—that is, 50 per cent. of their man power.

Now, in the first three years the British loss was somewhat around a million; it was less rather than more. This represents a 13 per cent. loss in a military population of 7,500,000, and this is just a third of the German loss. In other words the blood tax upon British manhood has just been a third what it has been upon the Germans in the first three years of war. Now, suppose the British should lose another million next year—an extreme estimate. The total loss would then be 2,000,000, or just over a quarter of the man power of Britain.

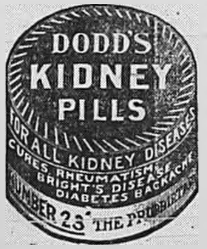
If you say that four years of war will cost Germany half of her able-bodied men, that it will remove them permanently from industry, while it removes only a quarter of the man power of her greatest commercial rival, you will state the probable truth, and you will indicate the real extent of German disaster. The British situation is, too, improved by the fact that Britain has nearly 15,000,000 whites in her colonies, which means a further population of able-bodied males of 2,500,000 in the empire, less the colonial casualties, which are not likely to pass the half-million mark in permanent losses.

At the present time Germany holds no British territory, while Britain holds a million square miles of German colonies. Britain has four German prisoners to one Briton held in Germany. Granted that the war restored the geographical conditions of 1914, the two great commercial rivals would face each other in far different posture than before the war. Of Germany's great wealth-producing population of males, half would be gone, as against a quarter for the British. Add this to the lost markets in enemy countries and, by contrast, the improved British position in countries now become allies, and there is a measure of the inevitable British victory.

Germany has only one other great commercial rival—the United States—and we shall end the fourth year of the war with a casualty list, at the greatest conceivable point, of not above a hundred thousand. This is less than 1 per cent., against 50 for the Germans.

The Germans have been able, by using their prisoners and by turning the populations in occupied districts into slaves, to put a far larger percentage of their male population upon the firing line than their western opponents. This has enabled them to hold out, and still enables them to hold out, but it means a vastly greater permanent loss in German men. All Americans recall that the South with its negro slave population, was able to mobilize almost its entire manhood in the civil war, but this manhood was ultimately well night destroyed, and the south has hardly recovered in half a century.

The real defeat of Germany must be measured by the death lists, by the numbers permanently removed from industry. Another year of war will mean not less than 50 per cent., and there is no certainty that next year will be the last year of the contest.—New York Tribune.



PRESERVING PEARS.

Here is an Excellent Old-Time Pennsylvania Recipe.

One and one-half pound of pears to one pound of sugar.

Pare the pears, cut them in half.

Put enough water on the sugar to cover it and boil it for 15 minutes.

Then put in the pears and boil them for three hours.

About an hour before they are cooked cut up lemons in thin slices and add in the proportion of two lemons to nine pounds of pears. Put up in air-tight jars.

This is an excellent method of using up the many rather tasteless pears that abound in the fall.

BAKED PEARS.

Peel ripe pears. Cut in half. Pack in layers in a stoneware jar. Strew each layer with sugar, adding now and then a mere pinch of grated nutmeg.

In the bottom of the jar place a small cup of water to prevent burning. Fit on a close cover and sit in a moderate oven and bake three hours. Leave unopened in the oven over night. Very good eaten cold with cream.

TO PRESERVE PEACHES WHOLE.

Make a syrup of five pounds of sugar and five cups of water and bring it to the boil. When boiling put in ten or twelve pounds of peaches—not pared.

Boil slowly for 20 minutes. Fill the jars with the fruit and then pour over them the boiling hot syrup. Overflow the jars, close quickly.

WEAK BOYS AND GIRLS

It is a mistake to think that anaemia is only a girl's complaint. Girls probably show the effect of weak, watery blood more plainly than boys. Delayed development, pale faces, headaches, palpitation, and a feeling of listlessness call attention to weak blood in the case of girls. But many boys in their teens grow thin and "weedy" and have pimples on the face, showing that they have not enough blood. The anaemic boy is just as likely to become a victim of consumption as the pale, breathless girl with her headaches and worn-out look. Let the boy in this condition catch cold and he will lose his strength and his health becomes precarious.

To prevent serious disaster to those of the rising generation, let both boys and girls be given the new rich blood which Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are famous the world over for making. When giving these pills watch how soon the appetite returns and how the languid girl or the weak boy becomes full of activity and high spirits. Remember that the boy has to develop, too, if he is to make a strong, hearty man. Give both the boys and girls a fair chance to develop strongly through the new, rich blood Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make. You will then see active boys and girls, instead of weakly children, around you.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all medicine dealers or may be obtained by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Surprises in Chinese.

"Some people," said an American consul to China, "live as long as twenty years in China and never learn more than a dozen Chinese expressions. But not so, my little girl. She used to meet me each evening with some new Chinese expression which she had learned during the day. Now, the Chinese language, like the Japanese, is full of honorifics, and I fondly imagined one evening, when my little girl greeted me with some entirely new expressions, that she was saying something like this, "Here comes the honorable personage, my father."

"To verify my guess I asked a little Chinese boy to translate. At first he was rather backward, but I urged him until he finally said:

"Your excellency, your daughter says, "Here comes the old 'wooden headed bottle.'" Yes, there are some surprises in Chinese."

GENERAL CADORNA.

Distinguished Record of Italian Army's Chief of Staff.

General Luigi Cadorna, the chief of the general staff of the Italian army, whose recent successes against the Austrians have made him one of the great outstanding figures of the war, reached his 67th birthday anniversary this week. It was in an old mansion at Pallanza that the now famous commander first saw the light of day on Sept. 4, 1850. His family belongs to the oldest Italian aristocracy and has long been celebrated in a military way. His father, who was a count as well as a brilliant general, led the Italians against the Austrians in the war of 1848, and had the honor of heading the troops which restored Rome to Italy in 1870.

At the age of ten the Gen. Cadorna of to-day entered the Cadet School of Milan, where he is said to have distinguished himself for his intelligence and vivacity of character. After several years of hard study he passed to the Military College at Turin, and from there entered the Italian army. He was graduated from the military college at the age of eighteen, standing first in his class, and began his active military career as a second lieutenant to the general staff. With this grade he entered upon a course of instruction at the Staff College and while a keen student of everything bearing on military matters, he spent his spare time in reading history and philosophy. During his term at the Staff College he served in both the infantry and the artillery.

Upon leaving the college he was appointed to the staff of the division of Florence, which was then commanded by his father. He was made a captain in 1875 and a major in 1883. During the ensuing ten years, until he attained the rank of colonel in 1892, there took place several important manoeuvres, in which Major Cadorna took a prominent part. It was during this period, also, that he acquired the exact knowledge of Italy's northern frontiers, which has proved him in such good stead during the present conflict. It is true his father, while in command of the army corps at Turin, had given some attention to these studies and had imparted the results to his son, but the latter has acquired such a perfect knowledge of all that pertained to the defence of the frontier as to amaze all of his colleagues in the army, being able to place with exactness every valley, pass, road and other strategic position, without even a reference to books or maps.

After serving six years as colonel of the famous Tenth Corps of Bersaglieri, Cadorna was raised to the rank of major general. At the time of his promotion he wrote an excellent pamphlet on tactics for the officers of his brigade. The book soon became known to all of the Italian military commanders and was much sought after, for it was recognized as embracing the fundamental rules for infantry training. In its later editions this pamphlet is acknowledged as an authority, and when General Cadorna became chief of the general staff of the army, soon after the outbreak of the present war, he had the satisfaction of seeing his little book, although written sixteen years ago, universally regarded as the best work on the subject.

General Cadorna has published several other military works, all of which are characterized by a clearness and lucidity which denote the great military knowledge of the writer.

The general has a reputation not only as a brilliant tactician, but as an able leader of men, in whom the soldiers have the fullest and most complete confidence. He has a tall and elegant figure, with an ease in his movement that indicates the practised horseman, and the quick eye of the soldier born to command.

Coupled with a keen and acute intelligence, Cadorna possesses a strong and tenacious character, to such an extent as to make his preconceptions inevitable in their results, in spite of all difficulties and obstacles.

Substitute for Alcohol.

The need of some stimulus has so far been a persistent force in the development of society and the instinct for association in a common place of meeting under exhilarating conditions is a part of man's nature. Alcohol drinks and the public house have proved to be easily accessible means to meet these ends. Where these social requirements have been over-looked or neglected, the enforcement of prohibitory laws against the saloon has been extremely difficult. Where they have been met or substantially ministered to by other agencies alcoholic excesses have been materially reduced.

It has long since been noticed that countries using liberally such infusions as tea, coffee or cocoa have been able to combat more successfully the excessive use of alcoholic liquors. It is, therefore, significant that the the recent meeting of the National Coffee Roasters' association announcement was made that the consumption of coffee had largely increased in those states which have in recent years gone into the prohibition column. The association considered the advisability of establishing coffee houses in the more thickly populated cities of the country in competition with the saloons.

The development of tea, coffee and cocoa houses, in connection with which might be found other accessories of social intercourse, would satisfy reasonably well some of the human cravings which operate powerfully in society and are not met by the moving picture shows, the recreational centres, the open forum, etc.—Independent.

The Larger Vote.

Last election night the leading bon vivant of a certain town proceeded joyously and faithfully to go in for strong drink on a larger scale than was for his own best interests. His travels then took him to the headquarters of the republican country committee, where he sat and listened to the election returns. All night long he heard the precinct figures counted off—so many for Hank Hicks and so many for Bill Jones for this or that office.

Then he started homeward, steering his course along a street that was rough, as it seemed to him, like a sea. As one great billow pushed him against the plate glass front of a restaurant, he glanced in at the signs that gave the prices of various food dishes offered in that caravansary. He read:

"Pork and apple sauce, 25. Ham and eggs, 35."

"Hurrah for ham and eggs," he shouted, as he continued on his way.—Everybody's Magazine.

GIRL ON THE FARM.

Why Not Give Her Some Attention as Well as the Boy?

In recent years the problem of keeping the boy on the farm has been thought serious enough to arouse considerable discussion.

The farmer has been told that he ought to provide the most modern agricultural machinery in order to obviate the hard labor of farming and of scientific agricultural, that he should send his boys to a good school keep the boys interested; that he should set aside a certain portion of the farm for the boy and permit him to keep the profit from his operation, and he has been told many other things, in all of which the importance of the boy to the farm was emphasized and plans suggested to make his lot a little easier and more promising. The county agent has interested himself in the problem by organizing boys' corn growing and other agricultural contests.

But how about keeping the girl on the farm? The girl does not ordinarily do the heavy field work, but her services in housekeeping, cooking and mending as well as in buttermaking, milking, caring for garden and chickens, which tasks usually fall to her lot, are surely valuable enough to warrant the greatest consideration. And yet discussion of the problem of keeping the girl on the farm is infrequent.—Indianapolis News.

Seven Bells.

Everybody who knows anything about nautical matters understands the methods of keeping time at sea—eight bells every eight hours. From 6 to 8 in the evening is the second dogwatch, but on British ships seven bells (half-past 7) of the second dogwatch are never struck. All other ships, even the American, strike these bells. During the Napoleonic wars there was a great mutiny in the British navy. The crews of the fleets lying at Spithead and the Nore agreed to rise simultaneously against their officers. The signal agreed upon was seven bells of the second dogwatch. The mutiny actually began at the arranged time, but failed, the ringleaders being executed. Ever since then seven bells of the second dogwatch has never been struck on British ships, naval or mercantile.

Enoch Arden.

"Briefly stated," we explained, "the story of Enoch Arden was about as follows: He went to sea and was shipwrecked on an inhabited island where he remained for several years. When at last he was rescued Mr. Arden put out for home with considerable rapidity, only to find that during his absence Mrs. Arden had married again. What do you suppose was his subsequent action?"

"Hard to figger," replied Mr. Gap Johnson, of Rumpus Ridge, Ark., who had listened with deep interest to the recital. "You can't tell which way a toad will jump when you poke him, and folks is just peculiar. Prob'ly he either took a shot at his wife's second husband or else borrowed enough money off'n him to get back to his uninhabited island and I wouldn't bet a nickel on either horn of what-d'ye-call it!"

A Fresh Water Manatee.

The New York Zoological society now has on exhibition at the aquarium in New York city the first fresh-water manatee of the Upper Amazon that has ever been shown in this country. The specimen is only five feet long, and therefore is considerably smaller than the thousand-pound brackish-water manatees from Florida that were brought to the aquarium several years ago. Two other characteristics that distinguish it from other species are the nailless flippers and the white breast. Like other manatees it turns on its back when the pool is drawn off for cleaning until the water again becomes deep enough to float it. The manatee is often called the sea cow because of its fondness for grass, at any rate the sort of grass that grows in the water. Its principal diet at the aquarium is eelgrass and a loaf of bread a day. The Amazon manatee is much more active than its Florida cousins, and often swims rapidly round its pool. It is also very sociable and will come to the edge of the pool any time to have its back rubbed.—Youth's Companion.

"Firebrand River."

The Colorado River was reached by two of the early Spanish explorers from Mexico in 1540. One of the explorers was Melchior Diaz, who came across country and went only a short distance above Yuma, and the other was Hernando de Alarcon, who came in boats from Western Mexico. Owing to the custom of the natives of carrying firebrands in winter with which to warm themselves, Diaz named the stream Rio del Tizon (Firebrand River), a name more distinctive than the present one, which often causes considerable confusion because no part of the river is in the State of Colorado.—Santa Fe Guide Book, Superintendent of Documents.

REPRISALS FOR FUTURE AIR RAIDS

(By R. T. Small, Staff Correspondent of the Associated Press.)

British Headquarters in France and Belgium Cable—The badly punished German troops east of Ypres to-day were largely resting on their arms after reverses suffered yesterday, when they attempted, in a series of fierce counter-attacks, to drive the British back. Possibly the designation "resting" is a misnomer, for the enemy was sitting under a terrific bombardment from hundreds of big guns which were deluging his back and forward areas with high explosives and turning his fastnesses into twisted masses of debris, which formed the graves of the defenders.

Any of the nerve-wracked, half-stunned German prisoners who have lived under these bombardments can tell of the tragedy now being enacted along the German front in this section of Belgium. Thanks to the German counter-attacks, there has been hardly a moment's cessation of the intense artillery work of the British since last Wednesday, when Field Marshal Haig's troops executed their latest offensive.

Captured Germans say that their forward defences have been greatly demoralized by this ceaseless pounding. Relief and ration parties venture out, to be turned back or to make their miserable way forward by circuitous routes to the men holding the advanced shell-holes, who have often been compelled to hold on without water or proper food. Badly needed ammunition has frequently never reached its destination.

Every approach to the German lines is covered by British guns, making the movement of enemy infantry an arduous process. Naturally, the question arises of what effect all this is having on the morale of the German troops. It is generally admitted among the prisoners that the morale of their men has deteriorated since the beginning of the battles in Flanders. Divisions which have been through one siege in the German front lines sometimes recent being used a second time in this position. This marks a striking change from the former attitude of the German troops, who have worked as unthinking machines to carry out unquestioned orders, issued by their officers.

Meanwhile the spirit of the British troops is daily climbing higher.

FIVE COUNTER-ATTACKS.

British Headquarters in France and Belgium Cable —Five counter-attacks have been attempted by the Germans against the new British lines between Polygon Wood and Tower Hamlets during the past twenty-four hours. All of them failed.

The powerful result of these bitter attacks has been the merciless shattering of his ranks and a still further advance over the front south of Polygon Wood by the British, who pushed their line forward some hundred yards in depth behind the fleeing Germans.

The first assault was delivered at 6.15 yesterday morning. The enemy advanced in three waves towards the British, but immediately met with such a fierce fire of rifles and artillery that he was compelled to retire. It was apparent, however, that the Germans were not through with the attempt, and the big British guns turned loose such an avalanche of shells as is seldom seen along the front. At 8.40 o'clock the Germans surged forward once more and, as in the earlier attack, were turned back by the intense fire from their opponents. Meanwhile the British artillery was hammering away with drumfire intensity, shaking the country miles back of the lines. The German guns were not silent, and in the midst of the war of the British artillery could be heard the detonations of heavy enemy shells.

It seemed impossible that another attempt would be made by the Germans in the face of such a hurricane of steel, but after a considerable rest they came forward once more. Again they broke, and this time ran, with the British in hot pursuit.

TWO MORE ATTACKS.

Two more counter-attacks were attempted by the Germans against the British lines between the north-east corner of Polygon Wood and the Menin Road last night, but, as in the case of three heavy assaults made during the day, the enemy was smashed by artillery and rifle fire. Hard local fighting occurred at the place known as Cameron House, where the Germans yesterday forced the British back slightly, but, with the exception of two small posts lost in this area, the British line was intact this morning.

The Germans also attacked during the night south of the Ypres-Roulers railway in the neighborhood of Zonnebeke, but were repulsed.

The past 24 hours have been bitter ones for the enemy along the Ypres battle front. Not only have the Germans suffered a stinging defeat, but this defeat has been accompanied by grievous losses in men. The tremendous fire to which they were subjected by the artillery, rifles and machine guns was a revelation even to those accustomed to watching the marvellous work of the great British war machine.

In the face of the immense strength of the British artillery, the Germans in their desperation essayed something which they must have known would result in reverses, unless some wholly unforeseen contingency arose. They gambled against great odds and they paid for it in lives.

South of the Menin Road, in the neighborhood of the Tower Hamlets battle-ground, it was quiet during the night. North of the Ypres-Roulers railway the German artillery played heavily on the British front areas. The correspondent visited Westhoek Ridge and the region near Zonnebeke, where the artillery activity was intense. British guns of all calibres were keeping up their ceaseless thunder and for every German shell landed in this zone were hurling back scores.

There is no doubt that the punishment being dealt out to the Germans is tremendous. Every prisoner taken admits that and appears to be glad to be in the hands of the British.

German air raiders were active again last night.

WELSH TROOPS' GALLANTRY.

London Cable — Reuter's correspondent at British headquarters in France telegraphs to-day:

"As a result of the fighting arising from the German counter-attack of yesterday, our position beyond Cameron House seems largely, if not quite restored, whilst elsewhere we advanced over 160 yards owing to the gallantry of the Welsh troops, who drove back the enemy.

"I learn that the ground in front of our line is strewn with German corpses. The enemy suffered frightfully in unsuccessful attempts to regain some shell holes in the area which he professes to regard as tactically valueless.

"There is a considerable proportion of Poles and Alsatians among the new troops which the Germans have hurried up to defend the Menin Ridge.

"The enemy are desperately anxious to impress their people at home with the extent of their 'victory' in Flanders, for which they are resorting to their old trick. The mere handful of prisoners they have taken in the recent fighting have been sent to a town where a number of prisoners previously taken had been assembled. The prisoners are marched through the town while they are cinematographed for the benefit of the Berlin public."

BRITISH REPORTS.

London Cable — The very meagre official statement from Field Marshal Haig Tuesday night on the operations in France and Belgium said:

"Beyond artillery activity on both sides of the battle front, there is nothing of special interest to report."

The afternoon statement said:

"The latest reports show that yesterday and last night five separate attacks were made or attempted by the enemy with fresh troops upon the portion of our new front between the Ypres-Menin road and the northeast corner of Polygon Wood. Another attack was made without success south of the Ypres-Roulers Railway against the positions on Zonnebeke.

"Except for the loss of the two small advanced posts already reported, all six attacks ended in complete failure. The enemy suffered severely in these attacks and gained no advantage.

"A hostile raiding party was repulsed with loss during the night, south of Lens."

"The enemy last night bombarded the country in the vicinity of Bar Le Duc, causing material damage and resulting in several victims.

"During the day of September 30th, five German aeroplanes were brought down in the course of aerial engagements, while seven other enemy machines fell in a damaged condition within their own lines.

"French bombing squadrons sprayed with projectiles the railroad station and barracks at Fresnoy Le Grande, where fierce fires were observed, and also dropped bombs on the railway stations of Thionville, Mezieres, and Dieuze, and on the factories of Hagondange.

"As a measure of reprisal for the German bombardment of the open town of Bar Le Duc, two French aviators on the night of September 30-October 1, threw down 200 kilograms of projectiles on the fortified town of Stuttgart.

"In Belgium we bombarded aviation grounds in the region of Roulers and Thielt and the railroad stations at Lichtervede, Staden and Cortemarck."

Stuttgart is the capital of the kingdom of Wurttemburg, and is located 50 miles west of Munich. It is at least 132 miles from the nearest part of the French battle line, in the Vosges. The city is one of the most picturesque of the German towns, and contains some ancient buildings.

PLOT AT REGINA.

Revealed by Woman Who Overheard Talk.

Regina, Sask., Report — A supposed plot to blow up the Parliament Buildings was discovered to-day when the police received a telephone message from the superintendent of the General Hospital asking for an investigation.

Detective-Sergeant Hays was sent and was told that yesterday one of the patients had overheard the plot discussed by the woman in the bed next to her with three or four persons who had come to see her.

The woman who overheard the plot speaks German, and the other woman is believed to be of Serbian extraction.

Yesterday, the woman, from the trend of the conversation, understood that a plot was on foot to blow up a a large building in Regina. She did not obtain sufficient information as to just what building was threatened, only a large building of gray-stone construction. As soon as possible she communicated what she had heard to the hospital authorities.

TERRIBLE TOLL FOR FUTILE ATTACKS

London Cable —It is generally assumed here now that air raids on German towns will begin as soon as possible, when conditions at the front permit of such use of the machines.

The Evening Standard states on the highest authority that the Government is paying special attention to the question of reprisals for German air attacks on London and other places. It says:

"There is no qualification about the decision of the Government to undertake very effective reprisals at the earliest moment consistent with the advice of the high military command."

The plan which the allies are likely to adopt is to notify German cities that after such a date bombs will be dropped, thus giving those cities and towns time to clear out the civilian population. Some twenty towns and cities will be warned at once, and the allies will please themselves which they will bomb first. It was in pursuance of this programme that the French airmen yesterday bombarded Coblenz, Stuttgart and Frankfort. That the Germans know of the contemplated raid, but not its particular objective, is shown by a despatch from Amsterdam, which reads:

"The Wilhelmshaven Zeitung on Thursday and Friday contained two prominently displayed full-page advertisements from the fortress commandant, the first warning the population how to behave in case of an air raid, while the second detailed police orders for darkening the district. It says: 'The best protection against night attacks is the permanent darkening of the fortress region. The order went into effect on Oct. 1.'"

A Swiss painter, who has been copying Dutch masters in the Cologne Museum and has just returned to Geneva, says that the Germans are now expecting aerial reprisals and are placing valuable paintings in places of security. The police of Cologne have issued instructions to the populace as to their conduct during raids. Most of the Rhine towns, following this example, are taking precautions.

NOT MERELY "REPRISALS."

There will be general satisfaction expressed that the allies have at last decided to grasp the real opportunity to carry on aerial war, not by mere reprisals or spectacular raids on Berlin or other political centres, but by striking the heart of Germany's defences.

Behind Germany's army lie the sources which feed it. A very big proportion of Germany's iron mines, blast furnaces, steel works, and armament factories, which make that army a real defence, lie within easy flying distance of the French eastern frontier. If these sources of supply are systematically destroyed, the German army will feel the want of munitions more quickly and more acutely than ever we are likely to feel want of food through Germany's submarines.

The moral effect in Germany must also be great. If the mines and workshops are shut down, hundreds of thousands of people will be thrown out of work.

WILL FORCE GOVERNMENT TO ACT.

While the London public is showing admirable calm and pluck there are increasing signs, as evidenced by the newspapers, that the public anger is rising rapidly, the principal cause of which has been the failure of the authorities to hit back at German towns. There is no sign of a cessation of the enemy night raids, nor is there any reason why there should be, certainly while the moonlight lasts till the early part of next week. The papers are now openly discussing the prospects of raids even when there is no moonlight. The best opinion appears to be there is no reason why such raids in the total darkness should not be made as they have been made almost nightly back of the line in France. Experience has shown that the Gothas are able to make the distance and return almost with impunity, considering the numbers used.

The Evening News expresses the general feeling probably correctly, in the following headline over a long editorial, "Latest from London front: All Serene in Essen." The introduction to the article reads: "Last night's air raid, the sixth within a week, has served at least one useful purpose. It has stiffened the national determination to pay the Huns back in their own coin without further official excuse or delay. This week's experiences have proved to a demonstration that while our new barrage fire makes it difficult for the Gothas to do exactly as they like, they nevertheless will soon be able to inflict a considerable amount of damage without apparent loss to themselves. London is in no mood to stand that sort of thing indefinitely. The question on everyone's lips this morning were to the following effect:

"When are we going to give them a taste of their own medicine? Why can't we bomb German towns now? (The word now is in big capitals.) Why can't we find machines for long distance raids since Germany can? The people of London have borne themselves bravely since the ordeal started, but there are signs that their tempers are giving way. The Mayors of the various boroughs are being urged to take action and undoubtedly there will be a protest of great dimensions and strength before long unless officialdom decides to take action."

LEAST EFFECTIVE OF ANY

London Cable—Ten killed and 29 injured was the toll of dead and maimed left behind by German air raiders in the sixth raid in eight days last night, official announcements stated to-day. Last night's raids were far less damaging than previous ones, despite much greater noise and excitement, a survey revealed to-day.

Lord French, in announcing the casualty list, declared that not a single British aeroplane had been lost in recent engagements where the British airmen fought the invaders.

All London expected another raid to-night, and thousands sought early cover in the underground tubes. Others stayed near shelter, ready to seek it at a moment's notice. Up to 12 o'clock, however, London was not raided. There is still a possibility, as the moon does not set until after daylight.

An official statement issued to-day on the aerial operations says: "In the aeroplane raids of the last eight days all of our pilots have landed safely."

The firing of guns and the occasional explosion of bombs are becoming matter of fact occurrences with Londoners in these days, and while they are heeding the official warnings to take to cover, there are no signs of panic or even of great excitement during the raids. The people have accommodated themselves to the enforced alterations in their method of living and are hurrying home from their offices or workshops at the close of their working hours to take an early dinner, and prepare to spend the evening in the security of their homes, or in the greater safety afforded by the protection of the subways, the basements and other underground refuges. Many take with them their wraps and food and make themselves as comfortable as the circumstances will permit in the corridors of the big hotels, which are becoming a favorite place for the residents, the walls affording protection against possible flying glass.

Through everything a large proportion of the people are continuing their useful work. Last night, for example, the delivery carts continued on their rounds, the drivers taking cover when the bombardment became intense, only to proceed on their way when the guns at intervals ceased firing.

Just as the guns began to roar an ambulance train, with wounded from France, arrived at the London station. Red Cross workers rapidly unloaded the train and carried the men to shelter, as glass, broken by shrapnel, commenced to fall on the platform.

Several bombs fell in the river in the southwest district, while the roof of a building in which a large number of people sough cover was damaged. No one was injured."

BRITAIN COOLS TOWARD JAPAN

Since U. S. Has Joined Entente Allies.

Jap. Magazine Makes This Inference.

Washington Report—The plain intimation that, with the entrance of the United States in the world war, the British Government, which has an offensive and defensive alliance with Japan, completely changed her attitude to one of greater stiffness toward Japan, is conveyed in a remarkable article, which has just appeared in the Taiyo, a magazine of high repute in Japan. A translation of this article, received in Washington to-day, does not mention Great Britain by name, but the inference is plain that this is the nation that is meant in connection with the matter.

It says in part:

"As an ally, Japan should do her best to help the Entente, but she has no obligation to go so far to their assistance as to risk her very existence. But from the viewpoint of that country, it seems preposterous that Japan, being a member of the Allies, should be reaping profits of the war, and that we should not do a bit more in sharing the burdens of the war. A communication sent to Japan in the late spring from that country was a most outspoken document, seldom to be seen in the unreserved communications of blood relatives, being discourteous in tone and arrogant in language. The young military and naval officers were indignant at hearing of this. they threatened at one time to bring up a problem of national disgrace, it is said."

GERMANY'S LAST CHANCE GONE

Even Victory Would Not Win Hun Peace

Says Viscount Grey of U. S. With Allies.

London Cable.—In discussing the entry of the United States into the war, Viscount Grey, former Foreign Secretary, in a preface to a collection of war statements by President Wilson, published in a pamphlet here, asserts it is now clear that the military and naval success of Germany in Europe could not secure a German peace. Viscount Grey's remarks are printed by the Daily News.

"Germany," he says, "cannot get peace except on the conditions that United States may consider essential to its own interests and to the future freedom of the world. It is impossible to get around this fact and it is not surprising that Germany dare not face it and turns her back upon it that she may not face it, for that is what the organized silence and contempt in German circles in the United States really means."

ONTARIO CROPS TURN OUT WELL

Say Reports to Department of Agriculture.

Fall Wheat Seeding Done, and Looks Well.

Toronto Report — Following is a summary of weekly crop reports made by district representatives to the Ontario Department of Agriculture:

Silo filling is receiving the chief attention of farmers at present, as early frosts, though not severe, have hastened cutting. Most of the corn, however, had reach a fair stage of maturity for making ensilage.

Fall wheat seeding is about completed. A large acreage has been got in despite the fact that the land has been so dry and hard. What has come up looks well, and there is a fair prospect of the crop meeting the winter in good condition. Winter rye is still being sown.

Threshing operations continue to show a good return for all classes of cereals.

In Kent, the chief bean raising district of the Province, the late crop has been caught by frost, which will prevent ripening more or less, and greatly lower the average yield per acre.

Potatoes are turning out at least an average yield, and are of good general quality.

Roots are still highly spoken of, more particularly mangels. Brant reports shipments of turnips at 21c a bushel.

Second growth and new clover both look well, as scattering showers have kept the fields growing nearly all fall. The yield of clover seed will be fair.

Most of the early apples have been marketed. The Duchess has borne better relatively than any other fall variety this year. In Dundas County, however, the Wealthy has netted the growers $4 a barrel. Winter varieties are late in maturing, and are light in yield.

Vegetables have had a most successful season, except in the case of tomatoes, which in both field and garden are ripening very slowly, with some rot.

Market values keep high, especially for hogs, which are quoted at $16.50 and $17 per cwt. Lambs are selling at from 11c to 14c per pound, according to quality and locality.

Pastures though good for the time of year, have thinned out considerably recently, and the flow of milk has correspondingly decreased. Referring to the dairy situation the Dundas representative says: "Milk at condensory and shipping centres has been advancing in price. The condensory at Chesterville is expecting to pay $[illegible] per 100 pounds for October milk. This firm is now getting 150,000 pounds of milk per day, and intends increasing its plant so that it can handle 250,000 pounds daily. Many farmers feel that the standard set by the British Government for cheese prices should be raised at this time of the year, as it costs more to produce milk, and the supply is less.'

The Middlesex report claims that fine harvest weather and women help nearly solved the labor problem this year. The dry, warm weather of the last three weeks of September has retarded fall plowing on clay soils, which are very hard. Even the tractors are meeting with difficulty in operating from this cause.

MARK HUN'S WORK FOR ALL TIME

Great Boulevard, North Sea to Alsace Planned

As Permanent Memorial of the War.

London Cable— An international boulevard, 400 miles long, stretching from the North sea to Alsace, is to be the great Belgian French memorial to the dead who have fallen in the present war, according to a British staff officer who writes to a London newspaper describing the plan, which he says has already received the endorsement of the Governments involved.

"Stretching down all that line from Alsace to the Flemish coast," he writes, "where for the last two years and more the tide of battle has broken [illegible] the face of the earth, a sacred road is to be built. Planted on either side with forests of trees it is to grow year by year, century by century, into an undying and perpetual monument which nature herself will raise in everlasting commemoration of the war.

"All the devastated villages through which it will make its way are to be preserved for all time as they exist to-day. A veritable street of Pompeii it will be, but a street 400 miles long, and a street not of death, but of everliving memory.

"Everywhere in the woods at either side the graves and cemeteries of graves of the men who have fallen will be scrupulously and beautifully preserved. For miles the forest may stretch without interruption, and then through a break in the trees a ruined village may be seen, a burned church, a broken Calvary, a small white wooden cross. The whole misery, the whole terror, the whole sacrifice and the whole abomination of war will for all time be kept in monument there for the eyes of all the world and all the future generations to look upon.

"The sacrilege and the barbarism of the invader will never be forgotten so long as those forests stand, and year by year they will grow in beauty and strength as nature builds up this monument to the dead."

PUNISH FIRST.

French League to Prevent Premature Peace.

Paris Cable—A new organization called the "Republican League for National Defence," with Antonin Dubost, President of the Senate; Paul Deschanel, President of the Chamber of Deputies, and Leon Bourgeois, Minister of State, as honorary presidents, is causing widespread comment in the press. The keynote programme of the league appears to be, "No peace with assassins before our victory and their chastisement," and the direct object of the organization is to fight against all tendencies toward a premature and inconclusive peace.

The membership of the league includes representatives of all political parties from Conservatives to Liberals of the Radical and Radical-Socialist parties, and comprises even some former Extremists, such as Leopold Lacour, who was once a contributor to the Anarchist organ, Libertaire.

FOE'S WASTAGE IS VERY HEAVY

Aisne Battle a Severe Blow to Hun Man-Power

Is U. S. War Department's Estimate.

Washington Report—Shaken, but still powerful, is the estimate of Germany's defensive strength on the western front, given in this week's official statement, [illegible] Department.

Of the fighting on the French front the statement says:

"The outstanding feature of the recent engagements is the wastage of the man power of the enemy. If we compare the combat front of Verdun in 1916, held by twelve German divisions, with the combat front along the Aisne in 1917, held by fourteen divisions, both of practically the same length, it is found that during the same period of time, from May to September, 1916 and 1917, respectively, the enemy engaged along the Verdun front twenty-five new divisions last year; along the Aisne thirty-five new divisions this year.

"So great has the wastage of enemy forces become, owing to the improved mechanical means of the allies and the perfection of their methods of combat, that the Germans are obliged to maintain in reserve as a minimum guarantee, for the safety of their battle line in the west at least forty divisions. The western front thus remains the principal battle front of the war. It is still strongly held by the enemy and his defensive strength, while shaken, remains powerful."

BRITISH FLIERS HAMMER THE HUN

Eleven Tons of Bombs Dropped—Heavy Damage.

Three Huge Gotha Planes Are Destroyed.

London Cable—The following official communication dealing with the aerial aspects of the attack [illegible] was issued to-night:

"The distinctly improved weather and a great deal of artillery and photographic work was accomplished by our aeroplanes. [illegible] without respite day and night, over eleven tons of bombs were dropped on enemy aerodromes at [illegible] and hostile billets and communications in the battle area, and on a dump and quarters near Cambrai. The enemy also carried out many bombing raids during the night, but did little damage of military importance.

"A photograph taken of the results of our bombing at the Contrade aerodrome shows that Saturday night one shed at the aerodrome was hit. The same photograph shows three large German machines which landed in a field five miles south of the Contrade aerodrome. Two of these machines [illegible] machines still lying in the field. A large airship shed which is now used for the accommodation of Gotha [illegible] of this aerodrome is reported to have been set on fire last night.

"The enemy aircraft were not very active yesterday, but a few large formations were encountered. Four German machines were downed and [illegible] driven down out of control. [illegible] of our aeroplanes are missing."

AUSTRIAN DESTROYERS DEFEATED.

Rome Cable — Italian destroyers last night "inflicted damage" on Austrian destroyers in a chase from near Ferara to Parenzo, an official statement declared to-day. The Austrian war vessels were supported by hydroplanes and were engaged in bombarding Ferara when the Italian squadron approached.

Necessary Farm Equipment

MORE and more the Ford car is looked upon by progressive farmers as necessary farm equipment, the same as the plow, the hay-rake, the drill, the mower, the harrow and other labor and time-saving machinery.

A farmer with a Ford car can dispense with one or two of his horses and make the trips to town, railway station, creamery, or to the neighbours in one-third the time. In fact there is no farm machine made that will save the busy farmer and his busy wife so much valuable time as a Ford. And it's so easy to take care of—far easier than a horse. No bed to make, or hay and oats to get, no harnessing and unharnessing, and no stables to clean. The Ford practically takes care of itself.

Ask any farmer who owns a Ford if he would ever again try to get along without it. His answer will hasten your decision to own one.

Organizing for the Big War Loan

The government, instead of allowing the brokers to handle the coming big war loan has decided upon the plan of having two canvassers for certain set districts go to the people and present the features of the new $150,000,000 loan.

For this reason David Robertson, K. C., who is chairman for Bruce county, was here on Saturday noon, accompanied by Mr. Barber, a government representative, organizing this district.

The following citizens met them at the library board room: Messrs. Izzard, Stevens, Hepner, Fenton, McCallum, Geddes, Wm. Brown, B. Hilker, Crowe, Sayles and Ranney.

Mr. Robertson and Mr. Barber explained the idea of getting all persons to take out war bonds, that they would be issued in lots as low as $50, and would be for 5, 10 and 20-year periods. The interest would be about 6%. The representatives here will be John McCallum and E. Roy Sayles.

Fuller particulars of the loan will appear in The Times. Meantime, everyone should plan to participate as far as they can. If Canada is to keep her industries going and be able to sell the produce of the farms the war loan, which is really credit for Great Britain, must be raised. The local representatives may be seen anytime at The Times office or at their homes, or will call on anyone.

Anyone who invests in this loan has a mortgage on Canada for his security, will receive his interest by cheque every six months payable at bank par, and can also sell his money for other purposes.

It is a patriotic duty for every one to invest in this loan, even if for only $50. Boys and girls, men and women have a great opportunity to get 6% on the greatest security in the world.

Miss Tena Schmidt, 6th Bruce, is visiting her sister, Mrs. Chas. Kay of St. Thomas.

Henry Hamilton, of Moorefield, visited relatives here last week.

A telegram was received by Reeve Izzard Monday at 10 a. m. notifying him "that one returned soldier will arrive at Port Elgin at noon." A crowd of citizens assembled, but no soldier came.

Auctioneer Cavin reports a successful sale of stock at Neil McDonald's Thursday. One cow sold for $137, while eight of them averaged $103 each, yearlings went for $66 and calves averaged $33. Cash was paid at this sale.

Saugeen Men Are Ready

On Saturday afternoon quite a number of men from Saugeen planned for their canvass for Red Cross on Thursday Oct. 18th.

As printed in Times last week, the canvassers are ready, and will make a whirlwind canvass of the township on Thursday.

"The aim is for at least $2000. All the people are urged to have their gift ready, and to make it generous.

Eight men at the meeting started the canvass off well by announcing gifts amounting to $175.

Reeve Christie asks The Times to print the following to the people of Saugeen:

"The British Red Cross has appealed to us once more for assistance in carrying out its beneficent work for our fighting forces. The total expense of the British Red Cross for the first year of the war was $8,500,000, for the second year over nine million, and to day it is $300,000 per week, or sixteen million per year. These figures give force to the statement of the chairman of the executive of the British Red Cross.

"If Canada fails us in October, we curtail many of our activities"

What will Saugeen's answer be? Is it our desire that any of these noble men should suffer through any lack of liberality on our part. Red Cross work in its every phase is a splendid manifestation of our broad sympathy with suffering. In 1915 Saugeen contributed $500, in 1916 it was $1,000. What will we say for 1917? We leave it to you, feeling confident of the result. On Thursday, October 18, you will be asked for a contribution. Give as in the Providence of God you have been blessed."

G. Christie, Reeve

Saugeen Council meets Saturday.

The Underwood Fair prize list was crowded out this week, on account of of the Saugeen and Bruce School fair prize lists appearing.

BURGOYNE AND DISTRICT

What with threshing, silo filling, potato digging and fall plowing, farmers have little time to note what the price controllers are doing, or who has been appointed lately in the union combination to run the affairs of the country, but no matter how city papers may talk there is no doubt that a great majority of the old-time liberals have still more faith in Sir Wilfrid Laurier than in any one else, and feel that all their, "Win the war" cry is only so much dust raised to hide the object of the players and blind the public.

Mr. Robt. Pierson had a business trip from St. Catharines last week to arrange for a shipment of potatoes.

Rev. C. C. Strachan was one of the speakers at the induction services at Tara.

The W.M.S. have an annual thankoffering and program next week.

Communion services Sunday. Rev. Dr. McDougall will preach Friday a.m.

Rev. Mr. Buckberrough is in Woodstock.

We are agents for Stratford steam laundry. Leave your laundry at Eby's Barber shop before Wednesday noon. H. Eby.

Port Elgin Tribunal Ready

The Exemption tribunal, which will preside over appeals for this district is now complete.

Dennis J. Izzard, reeve of the town and warden of the county, is the first named by Judge Klein.

Donald Gillies, a retired gentleman of Southampton, and member of the Southampton council, is the choice of the Ottawa selection board.

E. Roy Sayles, editor of The Times, is the appointee of the Military authorities at London to act as military representatives, when exemptions are put before the board. He is summoned to London for instructions to morrow.

Public Meeting Slimly Attended

Reeve Izzard, Town Clerk Geddes and Messrs. McCallum, Eidt, Wm. Brown, Sayles, Mitchell, Fisher, Ebert, Barber, Stevens, Hilker, Coulter, Dr. Power, Revs. Scanlan, Buckberrough and Gleichlar, were present at the public meeting called to consider Red Cause organization on Friday.

The reeve on taking the chair, regretted that there were not some of the ladies of the Red Cross present, and was extremely sorry that not more of the citizens took an interest in such a great cause. He asked for opinions as to what the town should do to enlarge the council's gift of $1000.

Mr. Geddes pointed to the greatness of the cause, and the need of funds. He also said that the taxes for Red Cross on the thousand dollars the town had given would be only $3.20 on each thousand dollars of assessment.

Mr. Sayles believed that a canvass could be made from the whole town. He also moved that this public meeting endorse the council's action of granting a thousand dollars. This was seconded by W. A. Mitchell and carried.

Mr. Stevens, said he felt that the citizens would take pride in doing something big for British Red Cross, and said that our givings should be greater than the $1600 of last year.

Mr. Mitchell asked if it would be wise to take on two thousand in taxes, and if it were thought unwise, then he favored going ahead with a canvass to raise it.

Councillor McCallum thought the citizens would be generous and would make up the amount in a canvass.

Messrs. Eidt, Coulter and Hilker favored a good organization for all the town, and a motion was accordingly made and carried, and a committee appointed, which met at The Times office and planned the work as outlined in another column.

G. McLaren has purchased 100 acres of land from N. E. Leeder Jr. There is considerable bush on the property. It is situated on the 2nd of Saugeen.

FALCONER BROS.

Agricultural Society Breaks Even

At a meeting of the fair board on Saturday there were present, President Henderson, Secretary Elliott, and Directors Scott, Christie, George, Sayles, Gowanlock, Webster, and Campbell.

The secretary reported that $125 more was spent in prizes this year than last, but that in spite of this the receipts were sufficient to break even, and thus not touch the surplus of other years.

The directors expressed their satisfaction with the idea of paying a little more in prize money each year. The idea of the board now is that the more interest in members, and attendance the more money they will spend on the prizes. Each year will likely see additions made to the prizes offered. This will prove a good basis. All money received will be spent.

There were a few corrections in the prize list, and the secretary-treasurer was authorized to pay the prizes.

Harvest Home Services Held

On Sunday the Methodists held most successful services. The speaker for the day and for the lecture, was Rev. (Capt.) Duncan, who was chaplain to the first division, and who has only recently returned from France.

The congregations were very large, the night service having a crowded church. The lecture was well attended. The auditorium was profusely decorated with the fruits of the garden and field, the decoration being well carried out. A feature was a huge loaf of brown bread, which was in the midst of flowers and fruit at the front of the altar.

The pastor Dr. Scanlan, and the officers were well pleased with the success of the services, and the liberality of the people. $200 was asked, about $300 was realized

The choir assisted with special music, which was much enjoyed.

Rev. Mr. Duncan's message were particularly pleasing, full of the old gospel, and impressed everyone deeply. His prayers were strong appeals for the power of God unto victory in the great crisis, and that men might acknowledge Him.

He chose for his text in the morning a portion in II. Samuel, where David longed for water from the well at Bethlehem that was at the gate. The story was eloquently told of how three mighty men of valor jeopardized their lives for the water, and after David had received it he could not drink of it but poured it out unto the Lord, because it represented the blood of worthy men. The speaker said that there was always appreciation of the past. War was not so terrible in itself. It was when it was contrasted with peace we once enjoyed that made it horrible. The missing of something we had lost had given us sorrow, and so the well by the gate at Bethlehem, had made David long for it. So, too, the lads in faraway France and Flanders and Mesopotamia were longing for a look at beautiful Canada. We do not think enough of the things about us until they are gone. We should compare the bountiful gifts of God, and inquire whether we had given to His service sufficient. "I wish the people of Canada could hear a shell dropped in their midst, to wake them to a sense of their responsibility and their duty, that they might give as they ought," said Rev. Mr. Duncan.

The tremendous cost of getting back what had been lost was impressively referred to. The peace we once had cost lives and would continue to cost lives and the sacrifice of much material things. What will it mean for Canadians to discipline themselves? What will it mean for the man who has grown selfish in his increased harvests of the fields and of industry? There is no bigger curse in Canada to-day, said the speaker, than materialism—abundant wealth without God. We had about ten thousand times more wealth than our fathers had, and yet we give only about as much as they gave. There was no land like Canada in the world for riches. We must come back to understand that we must fight and sacrifice for the things we had lost. We can get anything back by giving enough, and we must pay to get God. If we would evangelize the world we must support and send missionaries. We should be thankful for the Methodism of the early days. The men and women who blazed the trail. We should dedicate to God our possessions. Some men delight in claiming the wealth they had made. Whose is it, after all? The church is just what its members make it. Some contemptible persons go about saying the church is no good because someone has come short in their judgment. Don't be ashamed of what the church stands for, but be ashamed if you are not taking your part.

The preacher referred to the abundant harvests this year, and urged his hearers not to give the same gift as they gave in a lean year.

In the evening Capt. Duncan chose for his text Math. 16:24. "If any man shall come after me, let him take up his cross and follow me." In a splendid and eloquent address the speaker pointed to the necessity of making sacrifice. People were not listening to the call of Christ nor following him closely. This caused sorrow, dangers and defeat. There was a great call to the church just now for reconstruction after the war. Canada dare not hesitate. Boys who went to war were coming back stern men. The people at home must do away with their popular and well-loved sins. We must have a holy and righteous example for the men who come back, and who have gone through great trial and temptation.

There was special music by the choir, and a well-rendered solo by Mrs. Scanlan.

The church was filled for the lecture on Monday night, when Capt. Duncan, gave a description of life in the trenches, the work of the chaplain, and interesting sketches of the soldiers. After the lecture the Ladies Aid served lunch.

The people of the town and district were greatly pleased with the services and the lecture. Capt. Duncan made this Harvest Home occasion a memorable one. The Ladies Aid are especially thankful for the large attendance at the lecture

GLAMMIS

The B. Y. P. U. rally here last week was a great success. There were over 80 delegates from other churches registered. The delegates gathered from Wingham, Goderich, Mt Forest, Tiverton, Walkerton, Paisley, Port Elgin, North Bruce, Tara and Dobbinton. Wingham had 30 delegates and thereby won the pennant for largest delegation.

The sessions were largely attended, and the addresses by Rev. Janes of Ingersoll, Rev. Holmes of Goderich and McLeod of Mt. Forest were much enjoyed. The rallies are growing in interest and importance.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson III. Oct. 21, 1917.

The Temple Rebuilt and Dedicated. Ezra 3: 8-13; 6: 14-18.

Commentary.—I. The foundation laid (vs. 8-13). 8. Second year ...... second month—This was May, B. C. 535. Zerubbabel—The name indicates that he was born in Babylon. His Chaldean name was Sheshbazzar. He was the civil governor of Jerusalem. Jeshua—The high priest. He was the religious leader of the Jews. That were come out of captivity—About fifty thousand persons. To set forward the work—The Levites were given the oversight of the great work for which Cyrus had given the Jews permission to return to Jerusalem. 9. Jeshua—A Levite, not the priest mentioned in the preceding verse. An honor is placed upon those to whom was entrusted this important work, in that their names are preserved for all time. They were given the responsibility because of their fitness for the work. 10. Laid the foundation—This was an occasion for impressive ceremonies. It marked an epoch in Jewish history. It pointed backward to the dark past. It pointed forward to a bright future for God's chosen and restored people. Priests in their apparel—The priestly garments are described in Exod. 39. They denoted the consecration of the wearers to sacred service. With trumpets—These were used in calling the people together. Sons of Asaph—Descendants of Levi. They were prominent as singers in the temple service. To praise the Lord—It was an occasion which should call forth the strongest expressions of thankfulness. After the ordinance of David—See 1 Chron. 6: 31; 16: 16-21; 16: 4-6; 25: 1. 11. They sang together by course—"They sang one to another."—R. V.

12. Many .... that had seen the first house—It had been about fifty-two years since the destruction of the first temple, and the final deportation of the Jews to Babylon, and some of those who returned with Zerubbabel to Jerusalem could easily remember the former temple. When the foundation of this house was laid ......wept—The building of the new temple must have been well under way at this time for the people to be able to judge of its proportions and beauty. While this was larger than the temple built by Solomon, it could not be as costly, for there was not the wealth in the remnant of Israel to supply the rich furnishings that distinguished the first temple. The ark of the covenant and its contents were lacking, and the aged Jews realized that in an important sense the former glory was lacking. Not that this second temple was not a very grand and beautiful structure, but how great soever its material splendor, it was inferior in this respect to that of Solomon. Yet the glory of the second far outshone that of the first temple in another and more important point of view, namely, the receiving within the walls the Incarnate Saviour (Hag. 2. 9).—J., F. & B. Some have supposed that the weeping was for joy, but this is not probable. 13. Could not discern—In the East the people are very demonstrative in their expressions of joy and sorrow, and commonly the wails of grief are mistaken for shouts of joy. Sorrow and joy were closely mingled on this occasion, and both were in consequence of what God had done for his people, either in the past or at that time.

II. The building finished (vs. 14, 15). 14. the elders of the Jews builded—Between Ezra 3: 13 and this verse is given the account of the long delay in building the house of the Lord. The Samaritans wished to join with the Jews in the work, but the latter would not consent to this on the ground that the Samaritans were not true worshippers of Jehovah. Thereupon the Samaritans appealed to the king and secured an order from him that the Jews should cease their work upon the temple. After a delay of fifteen years King Darius issued a decree which gave the Jews full authority to build the house of the Lord. prospered through the prophesying—The Lord gave to his people two faithful prophets in Haggai and Zechariah to encourage them in the great work which they had undertaken for him. according to the commandment, etc.—The God of Israel planned for his people the restoration of the nation and the rebuilding of the temple, and the world-rulers, here mentioned, gave orders to have these plans carried out. 15. this house was finished—That which at the time seemed impossible was at last accomplished. month Adar—This corresponds nearly to our month of March.

III. The Temple dedicated (vs. 16-18). 16. children of Israel, etc.—From the mention of the different classes of persons it is evident that the people were united in the building and dedication of the temple. dedication of this house of God—The temple of Solomon had been dedicated solemn ceremony and the new temple was dedicated, or given over to God for devine service, with impressive ceremonies and with great joy. 17. offered—This verse describes different ceremonies of the dedication. sin offering—An atonement was made for all Israel twelve ......according to the number of tribes—Those who returned from captivity represented all the tribes of Israel. The twelve tribes had joined in the dedication of the former temple, and the restored temple was dedicated by a restored and reunited Israel. 18. set the priests in their divisions—The temple service was fully organized. The service was distributed by periods of a week each among the priests and Levites.

Questions.—How many years had passed since the temple was destroyed? What was the first step in religious work when the Jews reached Jerusalem? Who managed the building of the temple? How were their services conducted? Who among the people wept? Why? Who shouted for joy? How was the work of building delayed? When was the temple finished? Describe the dedication of the temple.

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic. The Temple Rebuilt.

I. A reminder of national sin.

II. The prospect of national peace.

I. A reminder of national sin. Once more, on the ruins of the ancient sanctuary, the new temple was to be erected. It was a new era in the nation's history. Patriotism and piety combined to ennoble and consecrate the scene. The whole remnant of Israel was enlisted in the undertaking. To God who had redeemed them from bondage and given back to them their old liberties and their beloved land, they owed the very best service they could offer. They set about their work methodically and carefully, directing it according to the law of the Lord. The prophets and builders worked harmoniously together. Each part was wrought by those who were especially adapted to it. The occasion was one which called forth the "fullest joy and the tenderest grief." Amid the joy of hope there was the sorrow of memory. There had been another house on that spot. There were men present who had seen it in all its glory. To these men the present foundation recalled years of shame and agony. That such magnificence should have been destroyed, that there ever should have been the pitiable necessity for their beginning again, filled them with profound humiliation. Such thoughts found expression in uncontrollable tears and outbursts of lamentations. There was a great contrast between Solomon's temple and the ruins which surrounded them; between the glorious past of Israel and the demoralized condition of the nation as it appeared after the captivity; between the flourishing condition of the land and the prospect it presented when a remnant of people were endeavoring to restore it to its former fruitfulness. Those who remembered the former days and the glory of the first temple and considered how far the second one was likely to be inferior to it, wept with loud voices. When those who knew only the sorrow of having no temple at all saw the foundation laid, they praised the Lord with shouts of joy. Though each expressed himself according to his sentiment, there was no disagreement, no retarding of the work.

II. The prospect of national peace. To the opened vision of God's prophet it was revealed that the glory of the latter house should be greater than the former. The people stood face to face with the work they had undertaken. Its difficulties were before them. They felt their inability to rise to the demands of the great occasion. They faced great obstacles through the oppression of their enemies. There was a faithful ministry in the midst of the people. The prophets Haggai and Zechariah urged them to remember God's special commission to them in that he had brought them out of captivity to do that special work. They were assured that his blessing must certainly crown their fidelity with success. They inspired the people with their own earnest spirit. The building of the temple was a visible and abiding testimony to their faith in the existence and power of the God of heaven. The temple was a testimony to the heathen nations and to all people of the worship and sacrifice due to Jehovah from His people Israel. The completion of the temple was a proof in itself that the "fierceness of God's anger" had been turned away and that He would again show mercy to His people. The wisdom of the leaders was evident in their pressing forward in the work, taking advantage of every favorable circumstance. They did not relax their efforts while waiting for a reply from Darius. Patriotism, wisdom and piety were manifested in their plans. The king's decree and the prophet's message together were like wings to their work. From the time of the arrival of the decree of Darius they looked upon the completion of the temple as only a question of time, and so at last regarded their condition of captivity as being practically at an end. Opposition to their cause was overruled for good. It brought the necessities occasioned by the neglect of the decree of Cyrus under the notice of Darius who regarded the Jewish nation with special favor so that the work was carried through without intermission after it was resumed. There was rejoicing over the finished work. It was the visible triumph of their faith and hope. They were thrilled with enthusiastic joy as they took possession of the new temple. With it they began a new life. At the dedication the ancient order of service was restored. T.R.A.

Macready's Caustic Reply.

A scapegrace baron pawned the coronet he had worn at the coronation of Queen Victoria. Having a slight acquaintance with Macready, the tragedian, he wrote to the actor offering to sell the pawn ticket and suggesting that the redeemed item of headgear would be an interesting theatrical "property." Macready replied with characteristic sarcasm that if the thing had been owned by a nobleman of mark who had got into straitened circumstances he would have favorably considered the application. But he did not think his stock of "properties" would be improved by the addition of a gilded coronet that had been worn by a numskull and pawned by a profligate.

A Hint for Young Romeos.

If the hero has no bad habits he should acquire some or at least lead her to believe that he has one or two. Courtship isn't complete unless the heroine can beg him to quit something that is destroying his sweet health or, worse still, something that makes him almost a bold, bad man. She used to beg and beg us to quit gambling, and a few years after the wedding she was cruel enough to tell us that she knew all the time that we were not a gambler. She was just humoring us.—Claude Callan in Fort Worth Star Telegram.

POINTERS ABOUT PLOWING--HOW AND WHEN TO DO IT

Most Important Operation in Tillage—Essentials Explained—

Second Article—By R. Summerby.

While it is true that good plowing under some conditions would not be considered good in others, many of the principles will hold in all cases. Good plowing of a given field implies that all land in that area should be plowed in such a way as to achieve the desired object most efficiently with the least further work. This means that not only must the type of furrow used be suited to the conditions and purpose, but also that the crown, the ridge itself, and the finish, be adapted to that purpose.

CROWN VERY IMPORTANT.

A score card is here inserted which embodies the important features to be considered in plowing. Percentage values have been placed opposite these points to show their relative importance. In this particular case, the figures are designed to relate to plowing done on sod land in the fall. Other conditions will require that different relative values be placed on each point, for more attention must be paid to some than to others, depending upon the time of year, the type of soil, and the object to be attained in doing the work.

Two different stages in the double scratch, double comb crown, a method that is used on heavy sod land and adapted to fancy plowing. By this method the two crown furrows are placed on two light scratch furrows, made by means of a high cutting share.

Finish	17
Style and evenness of furrow	18
Straightness	10

Ins and outs	7
Total	100

No part of the plowing operation requires more attention than the commencement, for not only is the crown itself important, but upon it also depends the degree of excellence of a large part of the remainder of the work. Evidences of neglect on this score are to be seen in many of our grain and hay fields, where the original commencement is marked by the presence of some of our worst weeds, such as couch grass, bladder campion, chicory, ox-eye daisies, etc. This part of the land, on account of its greater depth of soil and better conditions generally, should be producing the best part of the crop, instead of forming a stronghold for weeds.

An ideal crown is one that meets all the aims of plowing on that particular part of the land. This involves that all weeds should be destroyed, and that as far as possible the land should be cut and turned to the full depth of the rest of the plowing. When completed, the crown furrow or furrows should stand out slightly above the others, but no marked distinction should be possible. Further, when the soil settles after cultivation and seeding, it should do so evenly, without leaving an inverted V-shaped ridge where the commencement was made. Different types of crown are, of course, necessary to suit different conditions. A few of these in common use, including those that are considered the best ones are here discussed.

Probably the crown that approaches nearest to the ideal is one in which two full rounds are first thrown outwards, and then the whole is thrown together by a third one. This results in all the advantages mentioned above, but this type cannot well be used on sod land. Unfortunately, too, it requires much time, as it takes three full rounds before the crown is completed. This method is illustrated in Figure 2, which shows three different stages of the operation. The first figure will also serve to illustrate a second method, in which only one round is thrown out instead of two, and a strip about 6 inches wide is left. This is then cut off with the wing of the share but allowed to remain in place, and on it the crown is formed by turning the first furrows back by means of deeper ones. This is thus a modification of the first method and requires only two and a half rounds instead of three. A third method, which is also a modification of the above, is one in which one complete round is thrown out, without leaving a strip in the centre. These two furrows are then thrown in to form a crown by plowing more deeply, thus accomplishing the work in two full rounds. While neither of these latter methods are as efficient as the first one, both are more quickly done and are also efficient enough for ordinary work. Both are also best adapted to stubble land.

One stage of a fourth style is shown in Figure 1. Here a light single furrow has been turned out and then thrown back into its place by a deeper one. The crown is completed by setting up another furrow to meet this one. This method is one that can be used on either stubble or sod land. It requires only one round and a half to complete it, but, on the other hand, the surface of the land is not all cut, nor it is plowed to its full depth. It is one of the best types for sod land, but is excelled by the previous ones for stubble, where especially thorough work is desired.

One of the most common methods of setting a crown in either stubble or sod land is one in which a light furrow is thrown out and a heavier one is thrown against it. Under certain conditions this will prove satisfactory but too often results in this part of the land forming a starting point for weeds, through the land not being cut and turned. Again, on stubble land it sometimes happens that a plowman will attempt to start the land by throwing up two heavy furrows one against another, in the pretence of making a crown. This is the poorest method possible, in that there is a wide strip of land uncut and unplowed, and moreover it is difficult to plow the first furrows to their full depth. Any dangers experienced in the previous method, through grass and weeds becoming troublesome, are much more apt to occur here.

A type of commencement that is suited only to sod plowing and particularly to heavy soils plowed in the fall, is illustrated by Figure 3. Two light scratch furrows are thrown together by means of a high-cutting share, and on these the two crown furrows are placed, forming what is called a double comb crown. This method is used where the commencement is made in a previous dead furrow, and is in more common use at plowing matches than in general practice. It cannot be claimed that all the sod is cut, but the position of the crown furrows is such as to make conditions favorable to the smothering of the grass that still remains. It is also one of the most difficult ones to set, but when properly done lends itself well to a nicely shaped land and, moreover, the soil settles evenly in such a case.

WHAT THE FINISH MEANS.

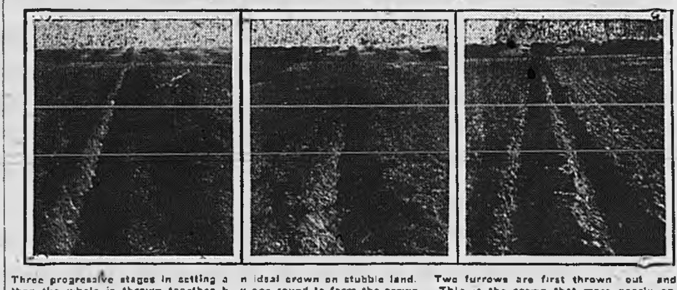
Of the seven methods mentioned above, the first six are used in stubble land and are discussed in order of efficiency for thorough work. The fourth, fifth and seventh are adapted to sod plowing, and of these the fourth one is probably the best adapted for general work. No matter what method is used, however, the aims of the plowing should be kept in mind in this part of that operation.

With regard to the shape of land when plowed, it should be as level as possible, with a slight but gradual slope to the finish, and with no pronounced rise at the crown. If the land is heavy, and not well drained, this slope should be more distinct. Hollows and depressions in the land result in puddles of water after heavy rains and may thus cause much damage during the growing season, while in the fall and winter they are apt to cause winter-killing in grasses, clovers and fall sown crops through the formation of ice. Much can be done toward filling in such hollows by a good plowman, by changing the depth of the furrow as the plow enters and comes out of the same. Skill in this, however, can only be attained through much practice.

Just as there is no marked difference between the furrows of the crown and those of the land, there should be little difference between these and the furrows at the finish. If anything, the ones at the finish should be slightly smaller; for if heavier the result will be a broader, deeper finish, with higher edges, which may hold the water on the land after rains. A good finish must be adapted to the soil soil and subsoil. If the sub-surface soil is good, a deep, broad finishing furrow will result in a narrow dead furrow, which can easily be filled in with the discs, so as not to interfere with the growth of the crop, and the proper working of implements. Where the subsoil is poor, a narrower, shallower finishing furrow, followed by a couple of strokes of the disc harrows, or by a round with a plow when the land is being prepared for seeding, will give the best results; while where soil is poorly drained a deeper finish must be made to meet that condition.

The style of furrow should be suited to the conditions and aims, but as this has been discussed it is unnecessary to repeat it. It should, however, be as uniform as possible throughout. Gaps and flaps are serious objections in plowing, but if their prevention is impossible, such as would be the case on stoney ground, the plow should be got back to its proper depth and width as soon as possible. Evidences of poor plowing on this score are to be seen in many fields, and in such cases a poor crop and a prevalence of weeds is always the result.

Straightness of furrow is a desirable feature in plowing, but has not the relative importance that the inexperienced is apt to believe. As will be seen from the score-card, several other points are considered of greater importance. Its greatest value lies in its influence upon the type of furrow, and upon its bearing on the character of the finish. It is also desirable from an aesthetic standpoint, but this need not be emphasized here.



Three progressive stages in setting an ideal crown on stubble land. Two furrows are first thrown out and then the whole is thrown together by one round to form the crown. This is the crown that more nearly approaches the ideal, but requires three full rounds to complete it. A half round can be saved, as explained in the text, by working from the stage shown at the left.

In both sod and stubble land it is desirable that all grass, weeds or stubble be turned under. This is referred to as "covering." Its importance is due to the fact that when grass or weeds are left protruding from between the furrow slices, they are apt to start and grow if opportunity offers, whereas when turned under proper conditions are more favorable for their decomposition. Moreover, if the grass is abundant in the uncovered condition, it seriously hinders the best action of cultivators and harrows, and, therefore, more work is required in fitting the land for the purpose desired.

In the score-card above the heading "Ins and Outs" is included. Under this is considered the evenness, neatness and abruptness of the furrow ends. Each furrow slice should continue in its full size and shape to the head-land, and there be broken off abruptly. This is done by having the plowshare enter and come out of the soil as abruptly as possible along a straight line at the ends of the land. Unless this is done a considerable amount of land in this area will not be properly plowed.

Apart from the discussion relative to types of furrow, nothing has been said with regard to the time of plowing. Clay soils and land that is not properly drained require the action of the frost to pulverize them, and should, therefore, be plowed in the fall. Moreover, if left until spring, it is often impossible to get on them to work before most crops should be seeded. Neither of these facts hold true with regard to sandy or gravelly soils, and equally as good crops can often be grown when plowing is done in the spring, providing it is done early, and that the proper cultivation is given. Experiments with our most important grain crops, however, show so much advantage in favor of early seeding that it is advisable to do as much fall plowing as possible even on these soils, when intended for grain. Fall plowing, moreover, allows of the absorption and retention of moisture. When land is intended for corn, more time is available in spring before planting time and, under ordinary conditions, well drained land of a sandy or gravelly nature can, if necessary, be plowed to good advantage in the spring for this crop.

In a few cases only is it [illegible] to do away with plowing. [illegible] will hold true on well cultivated and light soils, after potatoes, roots, and, in some cases, corn. It may [illegible] be replaced by thorough and deep surface tillage. On the heavier soils, and on those that have not been thoroughly worked, plowing will prove the most efficient and economical method of preparing the land for grain crops. Light, well drained cornland that has been thoroughly cultivated, may be fitted for the following crop by running a furrow along each row, deep enough to turn out the corn roots. This should be done in the fall, and if followed by thorough cultivation in the spring, may be the best way of preparing the seed bed for grain and for seeding sown on this land.

Although present day conditions make it imperative that the operation of plowing be accelerated wherever possible by means of gang plows, and in some cases, that it be replaced by the more speedy methods of tillage, it still requires to be thoroughly done. It is yet the most important operation in cultivation, but must be followed by other implements to complete the work if its best results are to be realized. The slowness and expense of the operation makes this all the more necessary. Good plowing, followed by intelligent tillage to complete the work, would go a long way towards making "two blades of grass grow where one grew before," and would place agricultural production in Canada on a much higher level than it now is.

Through Many Trials

"Do thee take care of the jam ladle touching thy dress, my dear!" Miriam Lilly interposes, gravely, rescuing a snowy flounce more as a method of controlling her own excitement than anything else. But it will not be altogether repressed, for the next minute, with eager eyes and hurried breathing, she asks, in a low, repressed tone, husky with emotion:

"Richard Dumaresq has come back?"

Imogene crimsons swiftly, and her brows contract in a frown.

"No; oh, dear, no!" she answers, coldly, in astonished accents; "we have heard nothing about him. It is about Evelyn, Mrs. Lilly," she adds, looking nervously at her, for a swift change has passed over her friend's usually placid face that startles the girl.

"Well, what hast thee to tell me about Evelyn?" Mrs. Lilly asks briefly, pressing her lips tightly together as if to forcibly restrain the words that try to escape from them.

"She is going to be married the week after next," Imogene says, trying to keep up the flow of her spirits, and utterly failing before the stern, unsympathetic eyes that are bent on her; "and papa and I are going up to the wedding early to-morrow morning."

"It has been decided somewhat suddenly at the last, has it not?" Mrs. Lilly says, with a stern, cold smile. "I fancied that Evelyn would have thought well to tell me of such an important event in her life. I have a small gift for each of thee—kept for thy wedding-days these many years," she adds, with a softened look in her eyes as they turn on Imogene. "I trust Evelyn may know the full measure of earthly happiness," Miss Lilly continues, in an altered tone, but so gravely and coldly that Imogene feels constrained to cry out warmly:

"Oh! I think she will, Mrs. Lilly! She writes in such spirits, and seems so happy! She hasn't a wish left ungratified, she says, and the beautiful presents that he has absolutely showered on her, Evie says, would fill a catalogue."

"I sincerely hope, Imogene, that her happiness will continue. The enamoured lover has been known to become a cruel husband before now."

"No one need ever fear that Evelyn's husband would be cruel to her," Imogene says, proudly.

"No; truly I think no one need fear that," Mrs. Lilly says, with her brief, cold smile.

"Even if he did not love and idolize her, as Aunt Althea says he does," Imogene says, with indignant tears in her eyes, "no one would be cruel—would dare to be cruel—to Evelyn! much less a gentleman, and a man who loved her."

"Do thee not excite thyself, my dear," Mrs. Lilly says, caustically. "Thee art greatly pleased with thy new brother-in-law, it appears, Imogene."

"Of course I am," Imogene says, laughing. "I am prepared to love him with all my might, if he wants any one's love but Evelyn's, which I don't suppose he does."

"And yet, such a short time since thee said so positively thee should never, would never like him," Mrs. Lilly says, briefly.

"I said I would never like him!" repeats Imogene, amazedly.

"Ay, did thee," Miriam Lilly says, with a streak of red disfiguring each pale cheek in her intense anger, "but as he is to be thy sister's husband, thee doth wisely in letting bygones be bygones. But I tell thee plainly, Imogene Trefusis, I am urged by no such consideration. And as thee dost not know all the cause of my wrath, so thou need not know [illegible] ner. But I shall never, can never, like him; and the injury he has wrought my sister's son shall not be reckoned amongst bygones with me until the day comes when he shall atone for it!"

"Injury! Where did he injure?" Imogene interrupts, gazing astonished.

"Richard Dumaresq, my sister's son, as I have said before!" Miriam Lilly says, briefly and resentfully, not pausing to weigh her words in the rush of her excited feelings. "It is a light thing, I dareasy, to a girl like thee," she adds, almost bitterly, "that he has suffered all this blame and misfortune because he was foolish enough to love thee, and whilst I cannot blame thee, who art as innocent of fault in the matter as he was, I tell thee plainly, Imogene, that the part that thy new brother-in-law, Captain Dumaresq, has taken in this matter is deserving of a punishment which——"

"Captain Dumaresq!" interrupts Imogene. "Dear Mrs. Lilly, you are altogether mistaken!"

"I am not mistaken, I tell thee," Mrs. Lilly says, rigidly, although she is at cross purposes and "wrong-headed" as ever a strong-minded woman of fifty can be. "I am speaking of Richard Heneage Dumaresq, the cousin of my nephew, Richard Dumaresq, whom thy father has dismissed from his service for what Sir Philip describes as 'exceeding audacity of conduct'——"

"I am very sorry," Imogene says, hurriedly, holding up her hand as if to ward off the next words, her eyes filling with tears, and a distressed color burning in her soft cheeks, "that papa was so influenced by that bad man to speak and act as he has done! Evelyn is not going to marry him, Mrs. Lilly! How could you think she would? She was exceedingly displeased at his having come down here at all to propose for her without her knowledge or permission, she says. She is going to marry Sir William Petherick."

"Evelyn! to marry William Petherick? He was married to his first wife before Evelyn was born," gasps Mrs. Lilly, looking so utterly shocked and amazed that Imogene pauses abruptly, pale and quivering with alarm and mortification, and Miriam Lilly, the [illegible] compassion, hastens to add: "But his age is no reason why he should not make thy sister a good husband, my dear child. I know nothing against Sir William's character for honesty and probity of life, and if Evelyn does not object to a husband thirty-eight years older than herself, no one else should find fault. He is a very rich man, I have been told."

"Thirty-eight years older than herself!" Imogene repeats, in blank dismay. "Oh! how can Evelyn have fallen in love with him?"

But the caustic reply on Miriam's lips she does not utter to destroy the girl's pure faith that love must of necessity play a part in Evelyn's choice of a husband.

"And I am most thankful," she adds, earnestly, "that Richard Dumaresq—I mean Richard Heneage Dumaresq—is not to be of kith or kin to thee. It may be that it is brought to pass that in the pit which he has digged for others he has fallen himself. My mind sorely misgives me that he has acted a base and cruel part by his cousin."

There is utter silence for a few minutes, while Miriam Lilly gazes—all unseeing in her troubled thoughts—out through the open doorway into the sunny brightness, resting its golden warmth on the well swept farmyard, with its cool tree shadows, and the dark, still pond in the corner, over which the branches of the water-loving sycamore droop, and on whose surface a white flock of ducks are sleeping.

She is gazing still, when Imogene's voice, in low, unsteady accents, asks:

"Mrs. Lilly, did—did you say they were cousins—Mr. Dumaresq and Captain Dumaresq?"

"Yes, Imogene, they assuredly are. Captain Dumaresq's father was [illegible]," the [illegible] answers briefly.

"And—equals?" Imogene asks, in the same hurried, uncertain way, stirring one of her little white fingers in a heap of black currants.

"If thee mean in social position, thee cannot require to be told there is a difference between a military dandy and a man of fashion, a gentleman who moves in the best society," Miriam Lilly says, with slow, dry sarcasm, "and a man who has served in the ranks, and who has to work for his bread, and is treated with somewhat less consideration than any ordinary man-servant!"—this with an unforgiving memory of Sir Philip's deeds and words. "If thee mean are they equal by birth," she adds, as a scornful afterthought, "they are assuredly, being the sons of a brother and sister—cousins in the first degree. In every other respect my nephew, Richard Dumaresq, is mentally and morally the superior."

And again Imogene stands quite silent for several moments, until Mrs. Lilly withdraws her gaze from outdoor objects, and fixes it curiously on the girl, when Imogene swiftly averts her face, over which a conscious rose-red flush is spreading from her white brow to her smooth creamy neck.

"I think I will go now and look for Lionel!" she says, hurriedly.

CHAPTER XIX.

Imogene walks on slowly, despite her haste in quitting Mrs. Lilly's presence, through the gardens and orchards, full of tender, golden lights and quivering shadows now at this sunlit hour, forgetful almost whither her feet are straying, forgetful even of Lionel for the time being; dimly conscious only of the soft rustle of the grass beneath her feet, the low, happy warbling of some birds' even-song, and the fresh, exquisite perfume of some flowering lavender, a perfect hedge of which grows at one side of the orchard, overhung by the apple-tree boughs, and behind the lavender bushes is the boundary wall of the orchard, which is not a wall, after all, but a veritable live and mossy green hedge, some ten feet high, massed with the fibrous roots of grasses, and climbing plants, wild strawberry suckers, wild pansies, violets and primroses, and crowned above all with a thicket of young hazel bushes which are parted in the middle by a narrow footpath which runs the whole length of the hedge, skirting a wide meadow of pasture-land, which slopes down to the lane and the brook at the foot of the hill, or, rather, gentle acclivity, at the summit of which Perrantowers nestles among its orchards.

The path on the top of the hedge, in which one walks on the level of the boughs of the apple trees in the orchard, within easy arms-length of ripe apples in the golden autumn-time with a screen of green hazel leaves sheltering one on each side as one walks; able to survey the landscape in peeps through the interlacing branches, to walk downhill by the meadow, where the cows are grazing or ruminating in the shadow, and along by the lane, discerning each chance passer-by, all the time invisible one's self up among the boughs and the glistening green leaves, as if one were a faun or a dryad; this hidden green walk is one of the chiefest charms in charming Perrantowers to the Trefusis boys and their sister Imogene since their early childhood.

Evelyn, an infantile beauty and nursery queen, in short frocks, long black silk stockings, and Hessian boots, never cared for the hazel walk on the top of the hedge; there was no one to admire her up there, so where was the pleasure in walking a long, narrow pathway by one's self, not to speak of the risk of being scratched or having one's frock spoiled.

But to Imogene it is a pleasure ever new, never old—a bewitching, fascinating pleasure, from the first time of the thick, rustling hazel foliage, until the sere leaves flit away in the October winds, to mount the hedge in the orchard, and walk along the whole narrow green avenue, with the murmuring and rustling of leaves making soft music as she passes—and greatest of pleasure, to walk there alone; the society of the boys, her brothers, delightful as it undoubtedly is, is not so conducive to the bliss of peaceful loneliness and reveries of airy fancy.

She gathers a few of the fragrant purple spikes of lavender as she enters the orchard by the wooden steps up to the top of the hedge, and fastens them in the bosom of her dress as she wanders along the narrow shaded aisle of hazel boughs, lost in a maze of thought—bewildering, vague, painful, and pleasant—beset by a troubled sea whose billows are rising tumultuously with the power of awaking passions.

But in the troubled sea there is at least this anchor cast, by which Imogene's thoughts hold themselves:

"Because he loved you."

And there is one far-away, misty isle of enchantment appearing ever and anon through troubled clouds and stormy billows.

"Cousins, equal in birth—in all things besides, Dick Dumaresq is the superior"—the superior of the man to whom haughty Sir Philip Trefusis gladly gave his consent to his wedding that daughter?

"Then, if papa knew—if Mr. Dumaresq came back again—and papa knew what a mistake he had made!" Mr. Dumaresq might have been detained on some important business—discovering a lost will, or clearing up a case of mistaken identity, or doing some other of the wonderful things people are always doing in melodrama until the supreme moment, when they appear on the stage with the lost will, or the stolen letter, or the hidden proofs of identity: flushed with victory, gallant, smiling, handsome, and craving the fair gift they have coveted, and receiving it with rapture.

But here the vague isle of enchantment fades away in mists, though Imogene sits down in the deep green grass of her bowery pathway to pursue her vision further. To pursue it, indeed, until the excitement of the glimpses that come swifter and swifter of that vague, far-off, mythical shore have flushed her fair cheeks and set her innocent, girlish heart beating madly, and made her gray eyes grow dark as night, burning as stars, until at last, with a frightened, maidenly shame of her thoughts, and her visions, and whither they are tending, Imogene starts up from the deep grass where she has been nestling, and hurries along through the hazel path to the point where it overhangs the lane.

But thither the bewildering visions and distracting glimpses follow her once more, and crouching down amid the hazel boughs commanding a view of the narrow, shaded, sultry lane below, Imogene lets herself drift away into the enchanted land for a few minutes, until an approaching sound, the "click-click" of a horse's hoofs trotting along the sheltered road—so deep in warm, whitish dust from the heavy wheels of hay wagons that the [illegible] beat of the hoofs is muffled—arouses her first to languid interest and curiosity as to whom the rider may be, and then, suddenly, to a tremulous, wordless, speechless excitement, for she is shivering from head to foot, and the throbbing of her own heart is plainly audible in the still summer air, ere he comes in sight around the bend in the lane, the rider, who sits in his saddle as only an English cavalryman can sit, each motion the perfection of ease and security; as harmonious as each movement of the animal he bestrides, each movement of the muscular, well-poised figure, the tall, shapely limbs.

The horse's slow trot subsides into a walk while its rider sits musing between the [illegible] of the narrow, sultry, green-hedged lane, looking nothing, seeing nothing, in truth, for he is beneath the hazel tree walk, and he sees not the white robed figure, or the small, fair face—white as her dress now with excitement, while her gray eyes are glittering with mingled fear and hope.

She cannot even speak when she tries, and he is passing, has passed, her post of espial, before she utters his name, hurriedly, in unsteady, half-frightened accents:

"Mr. Dumaresq!"

And she has no sooner spoken than she is seized with a terror that she has made a mistake—that the rider is not the Richard Dumaresq that she has known, for he is as strangely unlike as he is like the bright-eyed, genial, handsome Dick Dumaresq, who was Lionel's tutor and guardian.

He is paler, thinner, less sun-browned than he used to be; he is well and carefully dressed, in perfectly fitting, dark clothes, instead of the rough, light-brown tweeds he used to cherish a preference for. He looks—not more gentlemanly than he used to look—for Dick Dumaresq, to any but a most superficial observer, always carried the bearing, as he did the manners, of a well-born, well-bred man with him, wherever he went, in his wildest, roughest days—but an indefinable change has passed over him, which seems to remove him years distant, in age, and all things beside, from the careless, gay, bright-tempered, dare-devil fellow who took the rough with the smooth in his life, and found nothing so bad that it could not be borne cheerfully.

He looks older, beside the other strange alteration in his face—older, prouder, harder and handsomer; pride and resolution bring out the fairest characteristics of his features. He is strangely handsome, haughty, masterful, in eyes and voice and bearing, as he pulls up his horse and wheels him round as he discovers Imogene's sweet, young, eager face, looking down at him from among the green branches above the lane hedge, and he raises his hat to her in a formal acknowledgment of her presence.

A sudden light, a sudden light of joy, passion, delight, has transfigured the pale, proud, handsome face for a moment—so brief a moment that one could scarce perceive it ere it was gone, and then he sits on his horse, reined up in the middle of the lane, coldly unresponsive beyond a few formal words to Imogene's glad cry of recognition.

"You are going to Portdreath now at once, I suppose?" she asks, hurriedly, that something strange in his eyes and voice and manner bewildering her. "We are here—at least Lionel is staying here—I only came for the evening. Lionel will be so glad to see you again."

"Indeed, Miss Trefusis?" Dumaresq says, curtly. "Your brother stands alone, then."

"Well, I am glad, too," she says, shyly, but with a sweet friendliness that makes him look up swiftly at her for an instant with a half-sad, half-grateful smile; and immediately Miriam Lilly's words rush back to her memory:

"Because he loves you!"

She crimsons all over her lily fair face ere he can withdraw his eyes, and she is visibly shrinking from his sight behind the screen of rustling foliage, when he intercepts the movement with a slight gesture of adieu, and his horse moves a few yards onward.

"Good-by, Miss Trefusis," he says, quietly; and the setting sun glints on his uncovered bright-brown hair again as he raises his hat.

"Au revoir!" Imogene says, smiling brightly, but still shrinking behind those shading leaves.

"There is no use in looking forward to such a very distant period," Dumaresq answers, grimly, with the coldest possible smile. "Neither you nor I are likely to meet again, Miss Trefusis—certainly not on this side of the grave. What we shall do when we get to heaven I am not prepared to say."

(To Be Continued).

MEDICAL SCIENCE

GIDDINESS.

The sensation of giddiness, or swimming in the head is an indication of some derangement of the supply of blood to the brain. This may arise from a number of causes, and the sensation can be artificially produced by taking certain drugs, such as opium and alcohol, and—by those who are not accustomed to tobacco—smoking.

Vertigo is another name for giddiness, and is derived from the Latin "verto"—I turn. During an attack, objects appear to be moving round in an irregular manner, and the sensation experienced is similar to that produced by turning rapidly round and round and stopping suddenly. One of the chief causes of giddiness is temporary digestive disturbance, and the symptoms will probably disappear in these cases when the bowels have been regulated, and the patient is leading a normal healthy life with plenty of out door exercise.

Deranged circulation—and any complaint which produces a disturbance in the heart's action may have the same effect and cause an irregularly supply of blood to the brain, producing attacks of vertigo. Debility after severe illness is often accompanied by giddiness, and most of us will remember feeling our head swim on getting up for the first time after a comparatively short illness. This is nearly always due to the circulation being sluggish and out of order.

Violent attacks of coughing, especially in the case of weak persons, may occasion attacks of vertigo, and there are some forms of this complaint which are entirely due to nervousness and imagination. Patients having experienced the sensation on one or two occasions—continually fancy it to be coming on, and by this means actually do promote attacks. Vertigo may also be brought on by loss of blood, and it frequently occurs in anaemia.

Disturbances of vision occur in vertigo. Objects looked crooked, and the patient complains of only being able to see the upper half of a person without the lower half, and so on. This does not necessarily mean that the attack is due to anything more serious than temporary functional disturbances, and the sufferer would be wise to attend to his general health and diet before becoming alarmed.

DRY SKIN.

This annoying skin condition, in which the epidermis covering the face becomes dry and cracks into scales and flakes, is due either to a natural deficiency of the fatty secretions of the skin, or to the use of unsuitable soaps or "beauty washes." These latter often contain much spirits, which extracts the oils from the skin and leaves the latter dry and harsh. In such cases the face feels burning, while the skin too has a sensation of stretching and irritation.

Whatever may be the cause of the condition its treatment is the same. While the skin is very bad the soap and water must be abandoned, and in their place olive oil or sweet oil or almonds must be used. Swabs of soft lint or cotton wool should be dipped in the oil, and the skin thoroughly cleansed with them, the excess of oil being removed with clean cotton wool, and the face gently dabbed with a very soft old towel. At night a simple ointment such as boric or plain lsolin should be applied.

When the skin has been restored to its normal condition great care must be taken to keep it so. Hard water should never be used, but rain-water first boiled, to which a little borax, in the proportion of five per cent. to the bulk of the washing water, has been added. In addition to this, for a very tender skin a teaspoonful or two of bran or almonds may be put in the basin.

People with sensitive skins should beware of highly-scented soaps, as these latter practically always contain a considerable amount of volatile oils which irritate and inflame the skin. Soaps with an olive oil basis are suitable for such persons.

HOT FOMENTATIONS.

In certain cases of injury, septic burns, and wounds, whitlows, boils and abscesses, hot fomentations are used in order to convey and retain heat within the affected area. These applications are best prepared by dipping a piece of boracic lint into boiling water and wringing out as dry as possible, either by means of two sticks, or in a dry towel, the ends of which are twisted in opposite directions. Shake the lint and apply lightly and carefully to injury. Cover this with a piece of oiled silk, over which a layer of cotton wool should be placed, the whole kept in place by a bandage. In cases of swellings where there is no external abrasion coarse flannel may be used instead of lint. Fomentations should be renewed as soon as they become cold—but, if applied as directed above, the heat will be retained for quite an hour. In cases of open septic sores or wounds a fresh piece of lint should be used for each application, the soiled piece containing discharge being immediately burnt.

WOULD NOT BE WITHOUT BABY'S OWN TABLETS

Mrs. A. C. Smith, Goodwood, Ont., writes: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets for the past two years and have found them the best medicine a mother can give her little ones and I would not be without them." The Tablets never fail to banish the simple ailments of childhood. They regulate the bowels, sweeten the stomach and make the cross, sickly baby bright, healthy and happy. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Esquimaux Kayak.

The kayak, or skin canoe of the Esquimaux, was in use on the coast of Northern Russia two or three centuries ago, according to D. MacRitchie, F. S. A. (Scot.). Evidence of this is obtained from statements made by Burrough in 1556 and from the chronicles of a Danish expedition to Vaigats in 1653. It was further shown that three kayaks were captured off the northern coasts of Scotland about the end of the seventeenth century. One of these is still preserved in the museum of Marischal College, Aberdeen. An important fact is the occasional presence of a kayak-using race of "Finns" or "Finnmen" in the Orkney Islands during the last twenty years of the seventeenth century, as testified to by three writers of that period.—Exchange.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Geewhillikins, the frost was more than on the punkins last week.

It would be just common consistency if, when you have refused to sign the food pledge cards because the government doesn't stop the waste in whiskey, that you refuse to have a newspaper come into your home which advertises booze.

The fire marshal's report for Ontario for the month of August, shows Bruce county to have had 16 fires with a loss of only $7,724, which was covered by insurance. This is a good showing, but by using a little more vigilance even the reported light loss could have been prevented.

The large sum of $900,000 was received by the Ontario Govt., from the automobile licenses this year, and it is all to be spent on the good roads system. There are 75 000 autos in Ontario, an increase of 26,000 this year. The making of good roads is the proper way for this money to be spent, and now that Bruce county is in the system it will get its share.

The curfew bell for Port Elgin would be a good thing and the members of the W. C. T. U. should go farther than suggesting the idea at their meeting. They should wait upon the council. Anyone who looks around Port Elgin streets knows that too many children 14 years and under are loafing around late at nights. Boys or girls loitering on the streets at night seldom get anything for their good. Of course, the onus is on the parents and grown-ups. It is their business to protect the children, and the W. C. T. U. can do a great service by urging a curfew by-law, and seeing that it is enforced.

A new war loan will be asked of the people by Finance Minister White. Money is needed to carry out the heavy war expenditures and and to keep Canada's credit good. Whatever amount is asked will be over subscribed. It is understood the rate of interest will be nearly 6 per cent. To hold a Canadian government war bond is the safest security possible, and practically means a mortgage on Canada and all its resources. A little preparation now to participate in the new loan by all classes would be wise. Every Canadian should be pleased with the Finance Minister's plan of borrowing from the people.

The members of the Port Elgin branch of the W. C. T. U. went after things in a lively fashion at their last meeting. They don't propose to sign food pledge cards while wholesale waste is taking place in government offices and in distilleries. They also recommended that a tobaccoless day be observed. This will hit some men pretty hard, so hard in fact that some of them might do without food rather than their favorite chew or smoke.

Exemption boards will have instructions to exempt only in cases where reasons are according to the military law. There are 463,167 bachelors in Canada, between the ages of 20 and 34. The medical examination is very strict. The weeding out is being done by the doctors, and the majority of those placed in class A, will apparently be wanted for service. A feature worth considering is that any man who deliberately neglects to comply with the act, forfeits all right to exemption. If he reports voluntarily he can apply for exemption; if he has to be sent for, he loses his right to apply. Harriston is the nearest station for medical examination for this district. This is rather a hardship as men must go there from all over Bruce county. Bruce should have a medical examining board.

Liberals and Conservatives Unite

A union government has at last been formed by Sir Robert Borden. This won't suit partisan politicians of either stripe, but it will be a great worry off the minds of the average Canadian citizen

Sir Robert Borden has shown considerable liberality of purpose, and has taken into his confidence such liberals as Premier Sifton, of Alberta; Hon. J. A Calder, of Saskatchewan; T. A. Crerar of the Grain-Growers; F. B. Carvell of New Brunswick; N. W Rowell, of Ontario; Premier Murray of Nova Scotia. These men are outstanding Liberals and represent to a great degree the real Reformer. Mr. Ballantyne, and Mr. Guthrie can hardly be counted as Liberals, having broken with their party previous to the conscription issue.

That a union government has been formed will clear the atmosphere and help to smooth out a lot of rough spots which have gathered of late.

And now it may be expected that private citizens in great numbers will drop partisanship until after the war. Canada has lost time, money and character by having party government during this war crisis, and now that a real effort has been made to give to the Canadian people through union, an efficient handling of our affairs, minus the bickerings of party politicians, there is hope also that the people will fall in line with the union idea and lay aside the extreme party considerations

With the union government there is still plenty of room afforded to make choice of men who shall sit in parliament, but it should be done more with the view of electing men who will give to their constituents real service, rather than of serving a political clique or party.

On account of the teachers convention at Paisley, the scholars had two days holidays last week.

Bible Society Meeting

The annual meeting of the Port Elgin Bible society was held in The Times office Friday night. Those present were Revs. Mann, Buckborrough, Glachler, Scanlan, Messrs. H. Ebert and E. R. Sayles

The officers were re-elected, and it was decided to give those canvassers who did not receive Bibles last year, as well as the new canvassers this year, a Bible.

There will be a meeting held in Port Elgin, at the Presbyterian church, Wednesday Nov. 1, at 8 p. m., when Mr. Hazzard, of Toronto, will provide an interesting program. The meeting is free, and all welcome.

The canvassers are :

6th Concession—Emily Ewald, Muriel Eidt.

Southeast—Winnie George, Catherine McRae.

Northwest—Lila Chic, Margaret Stevens.

Southwest—Pearl Begg, Kate McArthur

Northwest—Kathleen McBride, M. McLaren.

River Road—Roby Thede, Vera Thede.

Southampton Road—Gertie Reinhart, Miss Schwass.

Narrow Escape

While Victor Kidd was driving the family home from Underwood fair after the concert their Ford car turned completely over with the wheels in the air. The accident happened just near the 4th of Bruce, when he turned to pass another car going the same way.

Fortunately none of the party of five were hurt, the top being up protected them. There was considerable damage done to the car

ELSINORE

The funeral of the late Miss Johnston, whose death was announced in The Times last week, took place on Thursday afternoon last and was largely attended. Nearly a year ago she was taken ill with some trouble affecting the spine and it developed into a serious illness, causing a partial paralysis. She fell about a month ago breaking her hip. She was sent by her brother to Toronto general hospital where it was hoped that she might receive treatment which would restore her to health, but she failed to rally. The late Miss Johnston was born and has always lived in Arran Tp., and until this summer lived with her brother Joseph on the homestead near Elsinore. Since then she has lived with her brother Robert. Besides her brothers, Joseph and Robert she is survived by three sisters, Mrs. Isaac Morrow of Arran Tp, Mrs. James Davidson of Skipness and Mrs. Adam Wilson of Port Elgin.

Rev. (Capt.) Duncan, of Port Credit, was a guest of Mr. Hugh McLaren during his visit here.

Death of aged Bruce Township Lady

The death occurred on Thursday morning of Mrs. Donald Gunn, in her 86th year. Deceased had been declining in health for some time. She was born in Scotland, and after her marriage in 1853 came direct to Canada, to Kincardine, she and her husband walking from there to lot 7 con 8 Bruce, where she has lived all her life. Mrs Gunn was a kindly disposed lady and made many friends who enjoyed the hospitality of her home on many occasions. She was a member of the Presbyterian church, and in the early days was very active in advancing the cause of her church and christianity. She is survived by one daughter, Mrs W. J. Roxton, who has lovingly cared for her mother for many years. The funeral on Saturday afternoon to Bale de Doro was largely attended. Services were conducted by Rev. McNabb.

W. C. T. U. Discusses Food Pledge Cards—Want a Curfew Bell in Port Elgin—Some Immorality to be reported

On Tuesday last a regular monthly meeting of the W. C. T. U. was held at the home of Mrs. Haubidge. The Bible study period was lead by Mrs. McLaren.

Owing to the resignation of the president, Mrs. Vanalyke, Mrs. McLaren was elected president for the remainder of year.

Flower and fruit department reported donation of six jars of marmalade to Port Elgin ward of Walkerton hospital Red Cross department reported the making of 31 suits pyjamas and a number of socks since August 1st, material for these being provided by the Red Cross society

Considerable interest was aroused by a discussion on the Food Card pledge, resulting in the following resolution "That this Union take no action in regard to the pledge until the Government give some assurance that no grain or sugar are wasted for distillery purposes; we recommend also that a weekly tobaccoless day be observed "

Other subjects discussed were : The advisability of a curfew bell to warn children off the street at night.

The objectionable feature of having gum boxes on street open on Sunday. Also cases of immorality were cited of which the Morality Department should be notified.

Coal Oil Heater

Is just the thing required to make a comfortable room before you start your big stove or furnace. Even after hard weather sets in, it is a grand thing to help warm up a room that isn't easily heated.

Brings real home comfort chases chills, and easily carried from room to room, is clean, odorless or smokeless.

McLAREN'S HARDWARE

WONDERFUL STUFF!
LIFT OUT YOUR CORNS

Apply a few drops then lift corns or callusee off with fingers—no pain.

No humbug! Any corn, whether hard, soft or between the toes, will loosen right up and lift out, without a particle of pain or soreness.

This drug is called freezone and is a compound of ether discovered by a Cincinnati man.

Ask at any drug store for a small bottle of freezone, which will cost but a trifle, but is sufficient to rid one's feet of every corn or callus.

Put a few drops directly upon any tender, aching corn or callus. Instantly the soreness disappears and shortly the corn or callus will loosen and can be lifted off with the fingers.

This drug freezone doesn't eat out the corns or calluses but shrivels them without even irritating the surrounding skin. Just think! No pain at all; no soreness or smarting when applying it or afterwards. If your druggist don't have freezone have him order it for you.

WHAT CATARRH IS

It has been said that every third person has catarrh in some form.

Science has shown that nasal catarrh often indicates a general weakness of the body; and local treatments in the form of snuffs and vapors do little, if any good.

To correct catarrh you should treat its cause by enriching your blood with the oil-food in Scott's Emulsion which is a medicinal food and a building-tonic, free from any harmful drugs. Try it.

These Men Will Help You Decide

Are you liable to be selected for service under the Military Service Act?

The answer to this question is being made readily available for you. Remember that the first class to be called includes only men between the ages of 20 and 34, both inclusive, who are unmarried or widowers without children, those married after July 6, 1917, being deemed single for the purposes of the Act.

Medical Boards are now being established throughout Canada. These Boards will examine, free of charge and obligation, all men who wish to be examined as to their physical fitness for military service. They will tell you in a very short time whether your physical condition absolves you from the call or makes you liable for selection.

It is important that you obtain this information as soon as possible. A certificate of unfitness from a Medical Board will secure for you freedom from responsibility under the Military Service Act from any Exemption Tribunal. A certificate of fitness will not preclude an appeal for exemption on any ground.

In order that you may be able to plan your future with certainty, visit a Medical Board as soon as possible and find out if you are liable to be selected. Your family and your employer are interested as well as yourself.

An advertisement by The Bell Telephone Co. of Canada to improve PARTY-LINE SERVICE

Co-operation: Each subscriber should co-operate to better the service on his line. The practices suggested below have been found to greatly improve party-line service:

1. Before calling, find out whether the line is in use. If it is, hang up your receiver promptly.
2. Emergencies will arise. If a party-line subscriber desires to make an emergency call, the persons using it should give up the line temporarily.
3. Do not allow children or others to listen or interrupt your neighbor's conversation when the line is in use.
4. Make your calls as brief as possible. Short talks will keep the line open and make the service of most value to everyone.
5. Answer promptly when you hear your ring.

ADVERTISING

As Old as the Ages, Says English Writer.

(By Joseph Greenaway.)

The human race is always striving to do something new—something strikingly original—something that will open up the eyes of this poor old globe of ours. But, believe me, it is a difficult job.

When, for instance, "Votes for Women" came into vogue a few years back quite a lot of folks thought something entirely novel had popped up this time. I remember reading somewhere a poem by the famous Ella Wheeler Wilcox that started off like this:

"So vain is the cry of the masters,
And vain the plea of the hearth,
As the ranks of the strange New Woman
Go sweeping across the earth."

There was really nothing strangely new about it all. Surely every schoolboy knows that there was once long ago a fine, sturdy race of women known by the name of Amazons, who left Mrs. Christabel Pankhurst and all the other window smashers—completely in the shade. They got far more than the mere vote—they ran the whole show.

And the Socialists are very fond of telling us that a New Age is upon us. When we first began to use steam, that was a New Age—electricity brought along another New Age—and the flying machine—well, that's going to turn things upside down. It will be even more than a New Age.

Candidly, I don't believe there is anything new under the sun. I may be wrong, and not being well enough posted up in ancient history, I won't argue.

But when people tell me that Advertising is a new profession, I kick. Last night, here in old London town, I attended a meeting of advertising men, and every one of the speakers emphasized the fact that ad. writing was something entirely new.

Advertising a new science? Why, it goes back to the dark ages, when our forefathers were cave men. Why, a couple of thousand years ago they were as well versed in the subtle art of publicity as even Teddy Roosevelt or Winston Churchill—and surely that's going some!

Ask any tourist who has been to Egypt for the name of an Egyptian King, and sure as fate he or she will at once tell you Xerxes. You can't escape him if you go to the dreary golden land of the Pharaohs. He wasn't content with his name being nailed over the doorways of the temples, but he had it stamped on every brick. Yes, every single brick you turn up you read this jolly old King's name. Xerxes—even though you cannot pronounce it, you remember it forever afterwards. It haunts you, and if you happen to be an ad. man you wake up in the middle of the night and think what valuable advertising space there is in a single New York sky-scraper, and what a chance Carnegie missed when he built his free libraries.

Advertising a new game, indeed?

Julius Caesar was another ancient who knew "the game" pretty well. In order to avoid his many adventures being wrongly reported, he did the job himself. And he took good care that nothing should be missed—how he stormed over Gaul and kicked our poor old noble ancestors the English. The Commentaries of Caesar—they have been read through the ages, and the name of Julius stands boldly out on the skyline of glory.

Napoleon Bonaparte also knew a little of the game. With his old green hat cocked on his head and his arms folded and legs apart—he was most careful about every detail. He was too busy to write up his own adventures, but no doubt if he had conquered the world he would have also had his whole history put up neatly in two volumes. Still, the records he left behind are pretty good. I suppose he takes up as much space as anyone in the news of the world.

But please don't misunderstand me. I believe firmly in advertising. After all, when you advertise you have to get busy. If you keep on telling the world that you can do something better than anyone else, there comes a time when you have to "make good." Advertising keeps things a-going—and it makes for honesty, for when a merchant advertises regularly it shows that he is willing for his name to be coupled with his goods. He is not afraid of anything. Advertising is far too expensive a way to sell bad stuff.

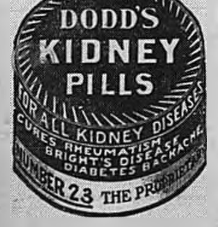
But it is not a new idea—they had trade marks and sign painters in the days of Pompeii.

Minard's Liniment Cures Garget in Cows.

EYE OF A HORSE.

The appearance of "white" in the eye of a horse indicates a vicious nature, because a high tempered horse constantly looks about, apprehensive of danger or desiring to do mischief. The quick motion of the eyeball in opposite directions exposes an unusually large surface of the white, which thus becomes an evidence of the temper of the animal.

Tell a girl she is an angel and she will want you to keep harping on the subject.



GOT HIS OWN BACK.

At a homeopathic convention a doctor told a story about a brother specialist who is an authority on the stomach.

"Blank," he said, "was traveling in the wild and woolly West, where they are all great jokers. At a country club a jovial-looking stranger accosted Blank and said:

"'Dr. Blank, I believe?'

"'Yes, sir; thank you.'

"'The great Dr. Blank?'

"'Well, er—I—well, yes. I have been called—er—by that name.'

"'The Dr. Blank who treats stomachs?'

"'Precisely, sir.'

"'Then, Dr. Blank, as it's the luncheon hour and our table d'hote is excellent, I wish you'd treat mine!' said the joker.

"Dr. Blank's veins run rich with generous sporting blood, and he treated the stranger—an amiable Western millionaire, as it turned out—to luncheon. But he got his revenge. Later on in the afternoon he approached a group of men, with a roll of small bills in his hand.

"'Has anybody here,' he asked, 'got ten dollars?'

"The Western joker promptly produced a ten-dollar note and handed it to Blank. Blank thanked him, thrust the note in his pocket and turned away.

"'Look here,' said the Westerner, 'What did you want that bill for?'

"'What did I want it for?' asked Blank, blandly. 'Why, for treating your stomach, of course. It's my usual fee.'"

TRIMMING.

It should trim.
It should enhance.
It must be in harmony.
It must add beauty to the dress.
It should not attract attention to itself.

No, by all means let trimming trim. If they don't, refuse them.

And also let them trim in pleasing fashion. A trimming suitable for a simple rig is unsuitable for a rich costume.

What quadrupeds frequent the opera?
A.—White kids.

Why is a girl not a noun?
A.—A girl is a lass and also is an interjection.

What has a mouth and never speaks, and a bed and never sleeps?
A.—A river.

Why are potatoes and corn like the Pharisees of the Bible?
A.—Because they have eyes and "see not" and ears and "hear not."

Up and down, up and down, touching neither earth nor sun. What is it?
A.—A pump handle.

Catarrh Brands Y— An "Undesirable"

So Loathsome is the Disease That Few Will Associate With a Catarrhal Victim.

IS YOUR TROUBLE CATARRH?

Poor remedies have given Catarrh the reputation of being incurable. But it is curable, easily and quickly, if the right method is employed. Snuffing a powder or ointment up the nose won't cure Catarrh, neither will tablets, douching, or stomach medicines cure. These treatments fail because they only affect local conditions; they do not remove the cause, which is germ life established in the lungs, bronchial tubes and nasal passages. Ordinary remedies do not reach these remote parts, but Catarrhozone does, for it is breathed through the inhaler into every air cell in the lungs, into every air passage in the head and throat. No matter where the Catarrh is Catarrhozone will reach it. It kills the germs, heals sore spots, clears the nose and throat instantly. Universally used; pleasant and clean; guaranteed to cure or money refunded.

Don't be an object of aversion to everyone you meet—get Catarrhozone today and use it regularly; it will cure your Catarrh, Bronchitis, Throat Trouble, spitting and gagging. Large size, 50c. All dealers or the Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Canada.

BIRDS AND FARM PESTS.

(Montreal Gazette.)

The fourth annual report of the Quebec Society for the Protection of Plants from Insects and Fungus Diseases contains a chapter devoted to the bird friends of the farmer and fruit grower. The attention which all that pertains to the production of food has received of late years has added much to the knowledge of plant disease and pests, and to the means of checking them. So far as insect pests are concerned, and there is no crop free from them, it would appear birds are nature's ever active check. The hawk, which occasionally steals a chicken, is a great devourer of rats and mice, which live by taxing the crops. The same is true of the owl. The woodpecker is an insect devourer; so is the kingbird, the flycatcher, the pewee, the jay, the blackbird, the native sparrow, the swallow, the robin, etc. Even the crow, while he eats what worries the farmer, destroys beetles, grasshoppers, weevils, cutworms, etc., and earns his board. When the wisdom begotten of the knowledge set out in the report has its effect, the cheap sport who shoots birds will be in greater disfavor than he is now even, and the farm which is chosen as a home by many feathered flyers will have something added to its value.

THE PRIVATE DETECTIVE.

(Toronto Star.)

A private detective has no more right to butt into your affairs and cross-examine than has the village barber. The law does not compel you to gratify the curiosity of either the one or the other.

The man who flashes the badge of a private detective agency, and makes it appear that he is possessed of authority as an agent of justice, is thereby imposing on the credulous. He is merely an agent employed by private interests.

But we agree with the Advocate that the operations of private detectives should be discouraged. They are becoming too numerous, and too active. People are "awed" by them, and the name detective has an alarming sound.

Any inventive genius who wants to confer a benefit on humanity and incidentally make a million dollars or so for himself, can do it by devising and patenting some material for sidewalk construction which will be as cheap and lasting as granolithic, but which will not transform itself into a skating rink every time there is a thaw and a subsequent change to freezing weather.

Many a man spends most of his time up in the clouds looking for some of those silver linings.

TREES AND PLANTS

Rules Governing Importation Into Canada.

All persons who are accustomed, or intend, to import trees, shrubs and plants, or other kinds of vegetation into Canada, or to ship such trees and plants from one province to another, should make themselves thoroughly familiar with the regulations of the Dominion and Provincial Governments in this matter. If this is not done inconvenience and possible loss may result owing to the neglect to comply with the requirements of Dominion or Provincial governments, which requirements are necessitated by the danger, always present, of the importation of dangerous pests into Canada or their spread from one province to another.

The regulations governing the importation of vegetation of various kinds into Canada and the Dominion and Provincial laws under which they have been passed have been collected in a convenient form and published as a bulletin, with explanatory notes by the Dominion Entomologist, Dr. C. Gordon Hewitt. This bulletin, entitled "Legislation in Canada to Prevent the Introduction and Spread of Insects, Pests and Diseases Destructive to Vegetation with Regulations Regarding the Importation of Vegetation Into Canada," is published as Bulletin No. 21, Second Series, of the Experimental Farms Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture. It also forms Entomological Bulletin No. 6 of the Division of Entomology. It may be obtained free on application to the publication Branch Department of Agriculture, Ottawa. The laws and regulations of the Dominion Government and of the Governments of those provinces possessing such legislation, namely, British Columbia, Nova Scotia, Ontario and Prince Edward Island, are given. A full explanation is given of the regulations which must be observed by persons importing nursery stock, which comprises trees, shrubs, plants, vines, etc., into Canada and into the Provinces mentioned.

SAVE THE BABY

Baby's Own Tablets are the one safe medicine to make baby well and keep him well. They are guaranteed by a government analyst to be free from all injurious drugs and are absolutely safe to give even to the newborn babe. Concerning them Mrs. Oscar Bedard, Maneau, Que., writes: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets and have to thank them that my little one is living today. I know of nothing to equal them as a children's medicine." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

WILL THERE BE TIME?

When man has harnessed lightning to his will,
And spanned the ocean's breadth with bows of steel;
When he has made the universe his mill,
And set the winds to work drive his wheel;
When he has scaled the skies with ghostly mirth
To rob the stars of their stupendous powers;
When he has probed the bowels of the earth
And gathered up the breath of all the flowers;
Will he then pause a while to count the dead
Whom poverty and steel have ground to dust?
Will he then heed the children's cry for bread?
Or hear the mother's wail for what is lost?
Will he then square himself with God and man?
Will he repudiate the vice and crime
That have endured since being first began?
God, can he do all this? Will there be time?
—Bell Fligleman in the Survey.

SIMPLY A QUESTION OF HONOR.

The charge that Senator Root is speaking for the railroad opposition to the Panama Canal when he suggests consideration of honor and faith to the United States Senate does not at all blur the fact that he is speaking for national honor and good faith.

We have other ways of regulating railroads than by reaching after them through the breach in a treaty and other ways than by giving unmerited subsidies at the expense of national reputation to a carrying trade whose aim is monopoly.

It is not Senator Root's good fortune to be constantly in position where he can be greatly esteemed for other than the ability he demonstrates in that position, but in his plea of the United States Senate to hold treaty obligations sacred he is wholly admirable.

Old Sayings About January.

January blossoms fill no man's cellar.

If birds begin to whistle in January, frost to come.

When gnats swarm in January the peasant becomes a beggar.

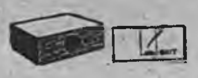
Much rain in January, no blessing to the fruit.

When oak trees bend with snow in January, good crops may be expected.

A cold January, a feverish February, a dusty March, a weeping April and a windy May presage a good year and gay.

Rhinestone buttons are still most liked for evening gowns.

Make Mouse Commit Suicide



A mouse trap that does not require setting and has no springs or other things to get out of order—and which at the same time is sure death to the unfortunate mouse that enters it—is made with a block of wood and a sharp nail.

The block is bored with a hole about four inches deep and an inch and a half in diameter. A nail with a sharp point is then driven into the block in the manner shown. All that is then necessary is to place the bait in the bottom of the hole and set the trap on the floor. The mouse impales himself on the nail when he attempts to get the bait.

This mouse trap never breaks or wears out.

A WARNING.

(Philadelphia Record.)

"A man," the doctors say, "is as old as his bloodvessels." Recent investigations have pretty conclusively shown that in spite of the great reduction in the general death rate due to improved social and sanitary conditions, the death-rate among men between the ages of 45 and 65 is increasing. This is due to the rapidly increasing aggregation of population in towns and cities where, under present industrial conditions of modern life, there is undue hustle and stress. The hustlers bring about premature degeneration of the animal system. The increasing number of deaths from heart disease gives startling statistical confirmation of the killing pace among middle-aged men. This is further proven by the contrary showing among women. There has been for many years past a continuing reduction of the female death rate between the ages of 45 and 65. Among active business men anxiety, worry and overwork put a constant mechanical strain on the heart and bloodvessels. Overfeeding and wrong and irregular feeding bring on toxic poisoning, especially where there is lack of physical outdoor exercise. Finally, the heart goes on a strike, and the end comes.

LEARN FROM LOVE LETTERS.

Dr. Arthur Holmes, who advocates the exchange of love letters between students as a means of acquiring the art of composition, might point to Samuel Richardson as a proof of the efficacy of his method. Richardson began by acting as scribe for a number of young women, for whose correspondence with their sweethearts he frequently supplied not only the words, but the sentiments. His reputation for this kind of composition led a firm of printers to propose that he should prepare a "complete letter writer" for the use of "those country readers who cannot indite for themselves." Two or three of the epistles written for this purpose suggested a separate story, "and thence," in Richardson's own phrase, "sprang 'Pamela.'"

"Eh—ah—er—," said the gentleman with the tawny moustache, making those preparatory sounds by which the Briton warns the world of his intention to speak, "jolly little place, this Canada—and all that sort of rot. Kindly feelings toward all you Colonials too—quite so. But have you a taproom or an inn where a chap can get a pint of ale and a finan haddie?"

The Canadian scratched his head.

"Well, now, I dunno. Up to the Washin'ton Hotel, though, you kin git some Chicago ham and Milwaukee beer and New York crackers. I'm from Ioway myself—just moved north last winter—but I'm glad to see you, even if you be English. Who's king over in your country now?"—Puck.

THE PROPER CENSOR.

(Philadelphia Record.)

The public can censor plays, and ought to. While the duty does not rest exclusively upon the woman, they constitute a good deal more than half of theatrical audiences, and most of the men present are there with their wives, sisters and daughters. One would naturally look first to the women for revolt against the "stigmatization of the stews of Paris." Nevertheless, the play which is announced as "swift, smart and saucy" draws plenty of ticket buyers, both men and women, whose conduct is correct and whose moral standards for their reading are at least respectable.

It ought to be unprofitable to produce plays reeking of the underworld, and it would if men and women, and especially fathers and mothers, exercised the censorship of the stage which is not only their privilege, but their bounden duty.

They came in last fall.
Now we are interested.
There were a few in velvet.
There is more in wool and in silk.
Many are likely to be thus made up.
They fasten at the left in very many ways.
Buttons and loops are among the approved fastenings.
The buttons may be in a row or they may be in clusters.
The Russian blouse coat reaches the knees and may be straight around, with fronts slightly rounded or even a trifle cutaway in effect.
The skirt of such a suit may be lightly draped and on cold days a fur band around the neck is the approved touch of coziness.

CANADA

GEORGE the FIFTH, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India.

To all to whom these presents shall come, or whom the same may in anywise concern—GREETING:

A Proclamation calling out the men comprised in Class 1 as described by the Military Service Act, 1917.

E. L. Newcombe.
The Deputy Minister of Justice, Canada.

WHEREAS it is provided by our Militia Act of Canada, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, chapter 41, Section 69, that our Governor-General of Canada in Council may place our Militia of Canada, or any part thereof, on active service anywhere in Canada, and also beyond Canada for the defence thereof, at any time when it appears advisable so to do by reason of emergency;

And Whereas that part of our militia of Canada known as the Canadian Expeditionary Force is now engaged in active service overseas for the defence and security of Canada, the preservation of our Empire and of human liberty; and it is necessary owing to the emergencies of the war to provide re-enforcements for our said Expeditionary Force in addition to those whose inclination or circumstances have permitted them to volunteer;

And Whereas by reason of the large number of men who have already left agricultural and industrial pursuits in our Dominion of Canada in order to join our Expeditionary Force as volunteers, and by reason of the necessity of maintaining under these conditions the productiveness or output of agriculture and industry in our said Dominion, we have determined by and with the advice and consent of our Senate and House of Commons of Canada that it is expedient to secure the men so required, not by ballot as provided by our said Militia Act, but by selective draft; such re-enforcement, under the provisions of the Military Service Act, 1917, hereinafter referred to, not to exceed one hundred thousand men;

And Whereas it is accordingly enacted in and by the provisions of an Act of our Parliament of Canada, holden in the 7th and 8th years of our reign, and known as the Military Service Act, 1917, that every one of our male subjects who comes within one of the classes described and intended by the said Act shall be liable to be called out on active service in our Canadian Expeditionary Force for the defence of Canada, either within or beyond Canada; and that his service shall be for the duration of the present war and demobilization after the conclusion of the war;

And Whereas the men who are, under the provisions of the said last mentioned Act, liable to be called out, are comprised in six classes of which Class 1 is, by the provisions of the said Act, defined to consist of all our male subjects, ordinarily, or at any time since the 4th day of August, 1914, resident in Canada, who have attained the age of twenty years, who were born not earlier than the year 1883, and were on the 6th day of July, 1917, unmarried, or are widowers but have no child, and who are not within any of the following enumerated

EXCEPTIONS:—

1. Members of our regular, or reserve, or auxiliary forces, as defined by our Army Act.
2. Members of our military forces raised by the Governments of any of our other dominions or by our Government of India.
3. Men serving in our Royal Navy, or in our Royal Marines, or in our Naval Service of Canada, and members of our Canadian Expeditionary Force.
4. Men who have since August 4th, 1914, served in our Military or Naval Forces, or in those of our allies, in any theatre of actual war, and have been honourably discharged therefrom.
5. Clergy, including members of any recognized order of an exclusively religious character, and ministers of all religious denominations existing in Canada at the date of the passing of our said Military Service Act.
6. Those persons exempted from military service by Order in Council of August 13th, 1873, and by Order in Council of December 6th, 1898;

And Whereas it is moreover provided by our said Military Service Act that our Governor-General of Canada in Council may from time to time by proclamation call out on active service as aforesaid any class of men in the said Act described, and that all men within the class so called out shall, from the date of such proclamation, be deemed to be soldiers enlisted in the military service of Canada and subject to military law, save as in the said Act otherwise provided; and that the men so called out shall report and shall be placed on active service in the Canadian Expeditionary Force as may be set out in such proclamation or in regulations; but that they shall, until so placed on active service, be deemed to be on leave of absence without pay;

And Whereas it is also provided by the said Act that at any time before a date to be fixed by proclamation an application may be made, by or in respect of any man in the class to be called out, to one of our local tribunals, established in the manner provided by the said Act in the province in which such man ordinarily resides, for a certificate of exemption from service upon any of the following

GROUNDS OF EXEMPTION:—

(a) That it is expedient in the national interest that the man should, instead of being employed in military service, be engaged in other work in which he is habitually engaged;

(b) That it is expedient in the national interest that the man should, instead of being employed in military service, be engaged in other work in which he wishes to be engaged and for which he has special qualifications;

(c) That it is expedient in the national interest that, instead of being employed in military service, he should continue to be educated or trained for any work for which he is then being educated or trained;

(d) That serious hardship would ensue, if the man were placed on active service, owing to his exceptional financial or business obligations or domestic position;

(e) Ill health or infirmity;

(f) That he conscientiously objects to the undertaking of combatant service, and is prohibited from so doing by the tenets and articles of faith in effect on the sixth day of July, 1917, of any organized religious denomination existing and well recognized in Canada at such date, and to which he in good faith belongs;

And that if any of the grounds of such application be established, a certificate of exemption shall be granted to such man.

And Whereas moreover it is enacted in and by the provisions of an Act of our Parliament of Canada holden in the 7th and 8th years of our reign and known as the War Time Elections Act that certain persons thereby disqualified from voting with such of their sons as on polling day are not of legal age, shall be exempt from combatant military and naval service;

And Whereas it is further provided by our said Military Service Act that applications for exemption from service shall be determined by our said local tribunals, subject to appeal as in the said Act provided, and that any man, by or in respect of whom an application for exemption from service is made, shall, so long as such application or any appeal in connection therewith is pending, and during the currency of any exemption granted him, be deemed to be on leave of absence without pay;

And Whereas our Governor-General of Canada in Council has determined to call out upon active service as aforesaid the men included in Class 1 as in the said Act and hereinbefore defined or described;

Now Therefore Know Ye that we do hereby call out the said Class 1, comprising the men in our said Military Service Act, 1917, and hereinbefore defined or described as to the said class belonging, on active service in our Canadian Expeditionary Force for the defence of Canada, either within or beyond Canada, as we may, in the command or direction of our Military Forces, hereafter order or direct.

And we do hereby strictly command, require and enjoin that each man who is a member of the said class shall, on or before the 10th day of November, 1917, in the prescribed form and manner, report himself for military service, unless application for his exemption shall then have been made by him or by another person entitled to apply on his behalf; wherein our loving subjects, members of the said class, are especially charged not to fail since not only do their loyalty and allegiance require and impose the obligation of careful and implicit obedience to these our strict commands and injunctions, but moreover, lest our loving subjects should be ignorant of the consequences which will ensue if they fail to report within the time limited as aforesaid, we do hereby forewarn and admonish them that any one who is hereby called out, and who without reasonable excuse fails to report as aforesaid, shall thereby commit an offence, for which he shall be liable on summary conviction to imprisonment for any term not exceeding five years with hard labour, and he shall nevertheless, if we so require, be compelled to serve immediately in our said Expeditionary Force.

And we do hereby proclaim and announce that for the greater convenience of our subjects, we have directed that prescribed forms, for reporting for service, and for application for exemption from service, may, at any time on or before the said 10th day of November, 1917, be obtained at any post office in our Dominion of Canada; and that reports for service and applications for exemption from service, if obtained at any of our said post offices and properly executed, shall be forwarded by our postmaster at the post office from which the same are obtained to their proper destinations as by our regulations prescribed, free of postage or any other charge.

And we do further inform and notify our loving subjects that local tribunals have been established in convenient localities throughout our Dominion of Canada for the hearing of applications for exemption from service upon any of the statutory grounds, as hereinbefore set out; that these our local tribunals so established will begin to sit in the discharge of their duties on the 8th day of November, 1917, and that they will continue to sit from day to day thereafter, as may be necessary or convenient, at such times and places as shall be duly notified, until all applications for exemption from service shall have been heard and disposed of; also that men belonging to the class hereby called out who have not previously to the said 8th day of November, 1917, reported for service, or forwarded applications for exemption through any of our post offices as aforesaid, may make applications in person for exemption from service to any of our said tribunals on the 8th, 9th or 10th day of November, 1917.

And we do hereby moreover notify and inform our loving subjects who are within the class hereby called out, that if, on or before the 10th day of November, 1917, they report themselves for military service, or if, on or before that day, application for exemption from service be made by them or on their behalf, they will not be required to report for duty, or be placed upon active service as aforesaid, until a day, not earlier than the 10th day of December, 1917, which will, by our registrar for the province in which they reported or applied, be notified to them in writing by registered post at their respective addresses as given in their reports for service, or applications for exemption from service, or at such substituted addresses as they may have respectively signified to our said registrar; and we do hereby inform, forewarn and admonish the men belonging to the class hereby called out that if any of them shall, without just and sufficient cause, fail to report for duty at the time and place required by notice in writing so posted, or shall fail to report for duty as otherwise by law required, he shall be subject to the procedure, pains and penalties by law prescribed as against military deserters.

Of all of which our loving subjects, and all others whom these presents may concern, are hereby required to take notice, rendering strict obedience to and compliance with all these our commands, directions and requirements, and governing themselves accordingly.

In Testimony Whereof We have caused these Our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of Canada to be hereunto affixed. WITNESS: Our Right Trusty and Right Entirely Beloved Cousin and Counsellor, Victor Christian William, Duke of Devonshire, Marquess of Hartington, Earl of Devonshire, Earl of Burlington, Baron Cavendish of Hardwicke, Baron Cavendish of Keighley, Knight of Our Most Noble Order of the Garter; One of Our Most Honourable Privy Council; Knight Grand Cross of Our Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George; Knight Grand Cross of Our Royal Victorian Order; Governor-General and Commander-in-Chief of Our Dominion of Canada.

At Our Government House, in Our City of OTTAWA, this TWELFTH day of OCTOBER, in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and seventeen, and in the eighth year of Our Reign.

By Command,

Thomas Mulvey
Under-Secretary of State.

Above and Beneath the Mediterranean

Here is an article of unusual interest narrating the experiences of an American correspondent both above and below the waters of the Mediterranean. The article, abridged here, is by Naboth Hedin, and is reprinted from the Brooklyn Eagle.

Toulon, Sept. 8.

Hydroplanes and submarines are the newest craft in naval warfare, and through the courtesy of the French Marine Department I have had the unusual opportunity of making a plunge under the Mediterranean in a submarine one day and a flight over the same sea in a hydroplane the next. While the hydroplane flight was the more thrilling, the submarine trip was the more interesting, especially as it was the first time a European navy had permitted alien newspaper correspondents to enter one of its submarines. The plunge was made in the light blue clear water off the leading French naval station at Toulon.

Externally a submarine is not beautiful. It may be described as a long, black tank, filled with machinery. Only a small portion of the tank is running along on the surface. What one sees from a distance is only scaffolding, or a raft, placed on its back so as to form a deck, surrounded by an iron railing. In the centre is a little turret, on the roof of which is a lid, and it is through this lid one enters the interior of the boat, just as one would climb through a manhole down into a sewer. There being no stairway or ladder, one climbs down on a series of iron handles, riveted to the interior of the turret. As a passenger boat, the submarine is not adapted to corpulent persons.

HOW IT RUNS.

Having taken a hasty glance at the construction of the boat, it is time to see how it runs. The electric motors are already purring softly, and throughout the entire aisle the members of the crew, alert young fellows, are busy turning valves, switches and wheels, while the officers are watching the dials. Evidently the boat is moving, though there is no way of making sure. In the "control" section the commander now stands on a circular little pedestal, peering through a pair of "opera" glasses, attached to the lower end of the periscope, which at first glance appears to be a slender metal tube, suggesting the piston under a hydraulic elevator. This piston, which is only about two inches in diameter, passes through a water-tight fitting in the ceiling, and then projects into the water above until it reaches the surface. It can be moved up and down, so as to not project too much. The boat can go down about 30 feet and yet be in touch with the world above through the periscope, which is its eye. In its interior are mirrors, which transfer the images on the water down to the "opera" glasses and from them into the commander's eyes. (This long, shiny tube, sliding up and down, suggests a water snake, sticking its head above the water, looking for prey. It is uncanny.)

THROUGH THE PERISCOPE.

"Take a look," says the commander, as he jumps down from the pedestal. I climb up and take a peep. It is amazing. I see the distant shores and the seagoing tug I just left as plainly as though I had stuck my own head above water. The light appears a little bit hazy, otherwise there is no difference. No wonder a submarine can torpedo a big ship while remaining hidden itself.

Still greater surprises are in store. As I jump down from the pedestal I find myself directly under the turret through which I had originally come down. I look up, and, knowing the boat is under water, I exclaim in surprise at seeing daylight filtering in through what I take to be little holes in the sides of the turret.

"Look out, the water will come down on us!" I burst out, pointing to the "holes."

"Those are not 'holes,'" says the ensign. "They are windows. Crawl up and look for yourself."

I remount the iron handles, and having assumed that Stygian darkness reigned under the surface of the sea, I am amazed to see the most beautiful light come streaming in through those little windows—oval little bits of thick glass, much like the eyes of a dolphin.

Bracing myself against the walls of the turret, I look out. Oh, wonder! What is this? We are moving through a world of sapphire blue of the most exquisite tint. I peer closer to the little window. As I look down, the blue gets darker and darker, and as I look up it gets lighter. I see a light foam swirling about. It must be the surface of the sea. As I look closer I can see the small waves rising, curling and dying. We appear to be about twenty feet below. Perhaps it is more.

Seeing the surface of the sea from below instead of from above is a novel experience. The only similar impression is that of the surface in the fish tanks of an aquarium when looked at through the glass in front. I also now understand better why the fish do not bite at any old hook, bait and sinker let down to them. To be sure, all water is not so transparent as that of the Mediterranean, but it has to be very dirty to be opaque. In the Atlantic, off the coast of France, the submarine crew said it is light green, and in the English Channel it is of a grayish-yellow hue. The Andromache had made the voyage from Brest to Toulon through the Straits of Gibraltar, all alone.

IN THE AIR.

My first air flight took place in a hydroplane off the coast of the French Riviera, near St. Raphael, where the French navy has an excellent aeronautical school, the special object of which is to train men who have already

It was while standing on the deck of a submarine coming into the harbor at Toulon, that I decided to ask for a trip over the Mediterranean as well as under it. The next morning I was less confident, but when the opportunity came during the afternoon I could not resist.

"Get into the togs," said the amiable commandment of the school, and out of a basket brought on the beach by an attendant I was dressed in a pair of leather trousers, a sweater, a canvas jacket, a wooden hood, a leather helmet, sheepskin-lined gloves and a pair of goggles, all of which was put on the outside of my ordinary clothes. I then felt more qualified to dive than to fly. A pair of waterproof boots would have completed the costume admirably. By the time I was ready I felt like a cross between a trained bear and a rag doll.

The hydroplanes had been launched while I dressed, and a small motorboat acted as a tender. When I was once on board it ran in front of the "hydro" and took it in tow, while I made the transfer.

The sea was pitchy and it was not without difficulty that I made the leap from the power boat to the hydroplane, handicapped as I was in my unaccustomed trappings. I started for the seat next to the pilot, but he motioned me to a circular hole in the prow.

A sailor comes across from the motor-boat, starts the two-winged propeller in back, setting the engine off, "crack-crack-crack," and leaps over my head, back to the power boat, which is already moving forward fast, towing the "hydro." The rope holding the two together is then released, the motorboat veers off sharply to the left, and ahead rushes the hydroplane toward the open sea.

So far it is very pleasant. The engines crackle more and more violently, enough to burst my ear drums had I not, as protection, the wooden hood and the leather helmet. The calender-winged boat glides over the water faster and faster. I look steadily ahead. I feel no temptation to look back. We cut the waves diagonally, and then at right angles. The foam flies about us. The engine in back becomes more and more vociferous, until the strokes of its cylinders become one continuous roar. We cut through the water with a zip.

IN THE HANDS OF A GIANT.

We sail out over the Mediterranean, always going up, up, up, as well as forward. We seem lifted into the sky by the hands of a giant. I feel small and insignificant, being in the grip of such a force. I now understand why it makes so little difference whether an aviator is big or little. This energy holds us like cotton puffs. I feel very light, and the pit in which I sit seems to become bigger and bigger. I am not dizzy. I feel rather comfortable, though no doubt I would be happier with a belt around me, if only for a reassuring moral effect. As the machine is absolutely steady, I do not even need to hold on to the edges of the pit any longer. There is but one motion. It is forward, and the wind driving against us, is forcing me against the back of my seat. The floor underneath me feels as solid as though founded on bedrock. There is no wavering.

But here we turn. The boat tips ever so slightly, but fearing it may suddenly tip over a great deal more, I once more grip the edges of the deck with my sheepskin gloved hands. I hold tight. My heart jumps, and my breath comes short. But nothing happens. The curve is made. I relax, and look about.

We have turned toward the land. I see under us the limestone colored town of Saint Raphael, its gardens in bloom. In the outskirts of the town I see dark green groves of orange trees, surrounding red-roofed villas; here and there a naked rock, and further from the shore the fresh plowed earth of the vineyards, the market gardens and still higher up toward the mountain range that protects this strip of paradise by the sea several dark green groups of long-needled scrub pine, with here and there a graceful parasol pine, suggesting Japan.

STRONG PEOPLE NEEDED

The need for people to be healthy is urgent. Those whom illness has put outside the ranks of robust men and women feel their position keenly. They are handicapped in every walk of life and weak men and nerve-worn women need more earnestly than ever to put their health right and become active and strong. Many who began "patching" months ago are ill now as on the day they began vainly tinkering with common drugs. Every ailing man and woman should remember that the ills of debility, nerve exhaustion, indigestion, sleeplessness, neuralgia and depression come from a faulty blood supply. Worry, over-work or other causes have impoverished the blood and left the life-stream impure. The nerves thereby are starving and the whole system is languishing for new blood. In this condition many thousands have won back strong nerves and new health and strength through the rich blood Dr. Williams Pink Pills actually makes. In a weak or bloodless condition it is not only a waste of time and money, but also a further menace to your health to tinker with common drugs. Follow the example of so many thousands by giving Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial, and they will transform you into healthy active men and women.

You can get these pills through any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Worth Knowing.

To cut hard-boiled eggs in smooth slices, dip the knife in water.

After cleaning brass or copper with salt and vinegar, rub with olive oil, and the metal will not tarnish for a long time.

Window glass should not be cleansed with soap, as this treatment renders the glass cloudy. A little borax or household ammonia may be added to warm water.

Soap jelly is made by shaving a bar of soap and letting it simmer in boiling water till it becomes thick like jelly. A teaspoonful of borax will soften it.

When the nickel chafing dish becomes dull, wipe it off with a soft cloth moistened with ammonia, and then polish with another soft rag.

Fat is easily clarified if a few pieces of raw potato are added to it and then it is heated slowly in the oven on top of the stove. When it ceases to bubble, strain through cheesecloth and let it stand till firm. Keep in a cool place.

Salt will remove a fresh ink stain from a carpet.

Foreign bodies in the eye, if they have not penetrated any part of the eyeball, are best removed by pulling the lid away from the eyeball with the finger, so that the tears will flow and wash the particle away. Never rub the eye. When the eyeball is penetrated you cannot see an oculist too quickly.

Japanned tea trays should not be washed in hot water. If greasy, a little flour rubbed on them will give them a new look. If they are scratched, rub with a little olive oil.

Wigg—That's a fine girl you introduced me to this morning. I should like to see more of her. Wagg—You're on; come down to the beach this afternoon about 3 o'clock; her bathing suit is a wonder.

Clear Your Complexion While You Sleep

On retiring gently smear the face with Cuticura Ointment. Wash off in five minutes with Cuticura Soap and hot water, using plenty of Soap and continue bathing a few minutes with Soap. Rinse with tepid water. The cleansing, soothing influence of this treatment on the pores extends through the night. It may be repeated on rising.

HEAT OF THE SUN.

Its Source of Supply is a Puzzling Problem to Science.

Probably the most puzzling problem we have in connection with the sun is to account for its tremendous output of heat, which we are told has varied no more than a few tenths of a degree in 50,000,000 years, the period generally given by geologists for the duration of life upon the earth.

If we accept the theory most generally advanced in the past that the sun was formerly a vast nebula extending at least as far as the planet Neptune and that its heat was maintained by slow contractions, computation shows us that only 25,000,000 times the present output would be maintained from this source—that is, if the heat were supplied by contraction alone it would have lasted only half as long as life has been known to exist upon the earth.

This is plainly impossible, and though contraction undoubtedly supplies part of the solar heat, there must be some other source of supply as well. The discovery of radio activity in recent years may have much to do with explaining this mystery.

It is interesting to consider that if the sun were composed of coal and its heat were kept up by the process of combustion, more than a ton of coal would be required per square foot of surface per hour to supply the present output of heat. The sun would be entirely burned up in 5,000 years if made of coal.—New York Sun.

To freshen salt fish, put in an earthen or granite pan, skin side up. Never put salted fish in tin.

A good furniture polish is made by taking equal parts of linseed oil, turpentine and vinegar and placing in a large mouthed bottle. Shake the bottle well each time you use it.

Arnica is always good for a bruised knee or a pounded thumb. Keep a bottle handy.

The juice of a lemon stirred thick with sugar and honey is excellent for hoarseness.

Eucalyptol, ammonia or salt and water will ease mosquito bites.

To remove spots from wash goods rub them with the yolk of an egg before washing.

Rub the nickel stove trimmings and the plated handles and hinges of doors with kerosene and whiting and polish with a dry cloth.

When making ginger cookies use cold coffee if milk is scarce.

Household Helps.

When frying doughnuts or oysters in deep fat, drop a pared potato into the fat to keep it from burning.

Try fastening a piece of cloth around the neck of the sewing machine for pins. It can be made removable, and is more handy than a pincushion.

To keep curtains from blowing, cover small tailor's weights with goods of the color of the curtains, and sew to the lower corners.

Save the 25-pound flour sacks, wash them then, rip them open and hem again. These make good dish towels, as they are soft and of convenient size.

If bottles of medicine are to be carried when traveling, dip the tops in melted paraffin to prevent leaking. Do not cork too tightly or the cork will "work up."

When baking a juicy pie, have ready a strip of muslin about an inch wide, dampen it slightly and press part of it along the edge of the pie and the other side on the pie tin. This helps to keep in the juice.

The Maple.

Oh, tenderly deepen the woodland glooms,
And merrily sway the beeches;
Breathe delicately the willow blooms,
And the pines rehearse new speeches;
The elms toss high till they brush the sky,
Pale catkins the yellow birch launches
But the tree I love all the greenwood above
Is the maple of sunny branches.

Let who will sing of the hawthorn in spring,
Or the late-leaved linden in summer;
There's a word may be for the locust tree,
That delicate, strange newcomer:
But the maple it glows with the tint of the rose
When pale are the spring-time regions,
And its towers of flame from afar proclaim
The advance of winter's legions.

And a greener shade there never was Made
Than its summer canopy sifted,
And many a day as beneath it I lay
Has my memory backward drifted
To a pleasant lane I may walk not again,
Leading over a fresh, green hill,
Where a maple stood just clear of the wood—
And oh, to be near it still!

OTHERS' AFFAIRS.

Unless You Have Real Tact Don't Try to Be Third Party.

Have you a reputation of being a third party where two persons are vainly trying to manage their own affairs? It is only the most tactful sort of persons who can successfully play the role of third party without doing more harm than good.

Don't try to fix things up between quarreling lovers unless you are absolutely sure that you can trust your tact and intuition to do the right and only thing. Don't intervene in the affairs of a newly established household. Let the young people work things out for themselves. Don't try to bring up other people's children. They won't thank you. Nobody thanks the meddler, no matter how well intentioned she may be.

Now, to the humane soul who hates to see things go wrong when a word or two will apparently set them right, this withholding of interest seems most selfish. But it really isn't. It is the most considerate thing you can do sometimes to shut your eyes and let things take their natural course. They will right themselves in time, and you will not jeopardize your friendship by good-natured meddling.

It is better to stand aside than to get mixed up as a third party in other people's troubles. Nobody loves a meddler.—Pittsburg Press.

LET a woman ease your suffering. I want you to write, and let me tell you of my simple method of home treatment, send you ten days' free trial, postpaid, and put you in touch with women in Canada who will gladly tell what my method has done for them.

A MESSAGE TO WOMEN!!

If you are troubled with weak, tired feelings, headache, backache, bearing down sensations, bladder weakness, constipation, catarrhal conditions, pain in the sides, regularly or irregularly, bloating, sense of falling or misplacement of internal organs, nervousness, desire to cry, palpitation, hot flashes, dark rings under the eyes, or a loss of interest in life, write to me to-day. Why Red Cross Workers Go Insane.

Dressy Old Lady—No, dearie, I've not begun knitting for the soldiers yet, but I may in the fall. Wool work is kinder sticky for warm weather."

Chairman of Down-State Auxiliary—"I don't approve of making socks. We should leave something for the government to do!"

Pompous Gentleman (bearing sample of khaki yarn)—Kindly match this accurately. My little girl needs more for her sweater." R. C. W. (in apologetic tones)—We're so sorry, we're out of just that shade, but she can piece it out with this. The soldiers won't mind a bit." P. G. (haughtily)—The soldiers may not be particular, but my daughter is. The sweater is for herself!"

Austere Husband (buying wool for wife)—My wife would never consent to knit on Sundays. She wasn't brought up that way. Besides, we always motor to the country for a picnic on Sundays.

Beautiful Blonde (clad in harmony with her knee-high white kid boots)—I might be willing to knit you a scarf, but my daughter is. The sweater is the yarn.

Ample Lady (aglow with benevolence)—No, I'm not doing any of this sort of work. You see, I've done my bit for the war. (Dramatic pause). I gave $5 to the Red Cross war fund.

At closing time woman bursts in with huge package of yarn. "I want to return all this light gray yarn, because the papers say you don't want any more socks." (Entire corps of workers faint, and the first aid is summoned.)—Chicago Tribune.

Uncalled for Courtesy.

The Vicomte Toussaint was formerly a colonel in the French army and mayor of Toulouse. He was a brave man and a dashing officer. During one of the hottest engagements of a terrible year of war, noticing that his troops were bending forward under a galling fire to escape the bullets of the enemy while he alone maintained an erect position, he exclaimed, "Since when, I should like to know, has so much politeness been shown to the enemy?" The sarcasm took instantaneous effect, for the soldiers rushed forward and carried everything before them.

OUR UNPAID LABORERS.

Birds Do Great Work, Yet We Do Not Properly Protect Them.

One form of national waste which is far more serious than the American people realize is a result of the deplorable neglect to conserve bird life in this heedless and ungrateful country.

Ornithologists and other intelligent observers of nature who have made a study of the subject say with the sanction of crop experts that insects destroy one-tenth of the products of agriculture in the United States. More than 100,000 kinds of insects have been enumerated in the fields, orchards, meadows, pastures, vineyards, gardens and woods of this chief agricultural country of the world. A very large proportion of these insects are injurious to crops. Birds are the insects' worst enemies.

Nearly all birds destroy insect life. The federal department of agriculture has examined the stomachs of forty kinds of birds to determine accurately what they consume. It was found that among the birds which most effectively aid the farmers are phoebes, kingbirds, catbirds, swallows, brown thrashers, rose breasted grosbeaks, house wrens, vireos, native sparrows, cuckoos, orioles, warblers, shore larks, loggerhead crow, and the crow blackbird, which have rested under suspicion so long, do more good than harm to the farmers.—Chicago News.

Animals Attack the Lungs.

Watch any flesh eating animal when it is attacking its prey, or watch two animals having a fight to the death. You will notice one remarkable fact, and that is that they strike for the lungs. Most people, of course, are well aware where their own lungs are, but they haven't the slightest idea about any other lungs. Animals instinctively know, however, the position of the lungs of almost every other animal. When a tiger or a lion attacks a man it does its best to get just below the shoulder blades. If it strikes without warning, you will always find that its powerful paws have torn right through to the lungs. A cat has just the same instinct. Watch it stalk a sparrow and you will see how cleverly it manoeuvres so as to get behind the unfortunate bird and pounce on its back, where the lungs are.—London Graphic.

White of an Egg.

The white of an egg is made up of cells filled with albumen. By beating the white these cells are ruptured and oxygen from the air is inclosed, which gives the white [illegible] light appearance of beaten eggs. The white of a stale egg will not inclose as much oxygen, will not be as light and as easily digested as that of the fresh egg and is, of course, less valuable. The importance of beating the egg in cold, pure air is readily seen.—Exchange.

KORNILOFF A PATRIOT WHO WAS BETRAYED

Accounts Just Reaching London Show Wisdom of His Plans.

THE BOLSHEVIKI,

Favoring Shameful Peace, Were Too Strong and Worsted Him.

London cable: The Times says: Accounts of the Korniloff movement hitherto have been entirely one-sided. No word has reached this country except through channels under control of Petrograd. We are able to place before our readers an interesting document, namely, the order of the day to the army on Sept. 10, which gives Korniloff's version of some events attended with the movement.

In this document Korniloff gives his reply to most, if not all, the charges that have been brought against him. Unfortunately for him and his supporters, this order of the day and most of the other appeals sent by him to the army and people never reached their destination. The Bolsheviki and their allies isolated him from his friends and misinformed the army of the intentions of their commander-in-chief.

When Korniloff realized that he had been traduced and could no longer help the country he surrendered himself to Kerensky, with whom he had been willing to loyally co-operate in the country's cause. He is still a prisoner, but his well-intentioned efforts have not been all in vain. The formation of a coalition Cabinet on the lines set forth by him may be regarded as an indirect result of his movement.

PLOT TO MAKE SHAMEFUL PEACE.

Extracts from Korniloff's order follow: "I have submitted to the Provisional Government conditions which are regarded as indispensable to the salvation of the army. Among these measures was the introduction of the death penalty in the rear.

"Time was precious. Every day lost threatened us with dire consequences, yet the Provisional Government could not decide, on the one hand, to carry my proposals into effect, and, on the other, permitted them to be subjected to criticism in the newspapers and various organizations. Simultaneously, with a view to achieve the final disruption of the army, a campaign was begun against the representatives of the high command.

"According to authentic information, preparations were being made at that time for an armed uprising of the Bolshevikis in Petrograd. There was clear indication that they intended to seize the Government if only for a few days in order to proclaim an armistice and take decisive and irrevocable steps for the conclusion of a shameful separate peace, and therefore destroy the issue.

"That such intention on the part of the Bolshevikis and certain irresponsible organizations was probable appeared from the fact, which was proved beyond all doubt, that among them were many traitors and spies working for the benefit of Germany for German money.

"Seeing the weakness of the Provisional Government and their lack of decision to take energetic measures against the persons and organizations who were clearly leading Russia to destruction, and desiring to forestall the catastrophe, I decided to concentrate four cavalry divisions at Petrograd, so, should the Bolsheviki uprising take place, it might be crushed in a most decisive and prompt manner, as it was necessary to make an end at one to all criminal activity of traitors in the rear.

NO PERSONAL AMBITION.

"Taking this decision was not following the plans of personal ambition. I did not seek to take upon myself all the burden of undivided responsibility for the Government of the country. My intention was to work in harmony with the galaxy of persons enjoying public confidence and numerous public organizations who were endeavoring to save Russia. I hoped to help those prominent public men and endow our country with a strong Government capable of saving it from shame and ruin. I merely considered it necessary that I, as supreme generalissimo, should be a member of the new Government.

"The Bolsheviki uprising in Petrograd was intended for September 10th and 11th. By September 6 three cavalry divisions were already concentrated at Pskoff, Velikie Luki and Dno station.

An envoy of the Ministry of War came to Stavka general headquarters and brought me a draft of proposed measures to be taken by the Provincial Government based upon the demands I had presented and informed me that although these measures were to be introduced in a few days the Provisional Government strongly apprehended that this might call forth an uprising in Petrograd and severe opposition on the part of irresponsible organizations.

APPROACHED BY KERENSKY.

"At the same time Savinkoff told me that the Provincial Government was apprehensive of a Bolsheviki uprising and did not feel sure of its own forces. He wanted me to place at its disposal a corps of cavalry which it wished to be moved to Petrograd. It was the intention of the Government as soon as informed of the concentration of such corps to immediately proclaim martial law in Petrograd.

"The wishes of the Provincial Government as transmitted to me by Savinkoff, entirely correspond with the decision I had already taken, therefore on the same day I gave the Government as soon as informed of the concentration of such corps to immediately proclaim martial law in Petrograd.

"On Sept. 7 there came to me at Stavka, Vladimir Lvoff, speaking on behalf of Kerensky as Minister and President, and asked me to state my views on three methods of organizing the new Government as suggested by Kerensky himself.

"I replied that I considered the only solution was the establishment of a dictatorship and the proclamation of martial law.

"Under the dictatorship I understood not a one man dictatorship, inasmuch as I had pointed out the necessity of participation in the Government by Kerensky and Savinkoff.

"I let it be shown in taking this decision that I considered and still consider, any return to the old regime an utter impossibility, and that the task of the new Government should be exclusively devoted to saving to the country, the civil liberties won by the revolution.

"On the evening of September 8 I exchanged telegrams with Kerensky, who asked if I would confirm what had been said by Lvoff.

"As I could not entertain the idea that an emissary sent to me by the Provincial Government could distort the sense of my conversation, I replied that I did confirm my words fully and again invited Kerensky and Savinkoff to come to Stavka, as I could not answer for their safety if they remained in Petrograd.

"It is evident from the foregoing, that up to the evening of September 8 my actions and decisions were proceeding in full accord with the Provisional Government, and I had every reason to consider the Minister and President and Director of the Ministry of War were not playing a double game.

"On the morning of September 9 I was shown the contrary. I received a telegram from the Minister and President intimating that I must immediately hand over the office of supreme command. Throughout the whole of September 9 I conferred by telegraph with the Director of Ministry of War Savinkoff, and from these conversations it appeared the Minister and President and Savinkoff himself, not only repudiated the proposals that had been made to me, but even disavowed the fact of their having made them.

"Considering further hesitation presented fatal dangers and moreover, the measures already ordered could no longer be countermanded, I decided with full appreciation of its weight and responsibility, not to hand over the post of supreme command, hoping thereby I might save the country from imminent disaster and the Russian people from German slavery. In this decision I was supported by the commanders-in-chief on the various fronts."

A LARGE AREA TO FALL WHEAT

Potato Crop is Generally Excellent.

Root Crops Expected to Be Good, Plentiful.

Following is a summary of crop [illegible] made by [illegible] representatives to the Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Recent rains have helped to put some of the dry, hard clay soil in condition for fall plowing, and this work has been pushed along as fast as horses and machinery can draw the plows. There is still a steady and strong demand for the use of Government tractors for this purpose.

Fall wheat sowing is at an end, with a large area [illegible], but the putting in of more winter rye will still be risked if the weather permits.

Corn is being hurried into the silo. Much of it was caught by frost about Sept. 10 and 16, but the quality has been but little affected, taken as a whole.

Potatoes are being dug later than usual this year. Some rot on heavy clay fields is complained of, but on loamy and sandy soils there has been practically no injury, and the crop generally is of excellent quality.

Roots are highly spoken of, both as to yield and quality, but comparatively few have yet been pulled.

Clover looks as if it will be in good condition for wintering. It has also been a favorable season for clover seed, which has had little or no injury from frost.

Apples in Dundas county which have been well sprayed are commanding high prices. The Wealthy has been sold by local associations at $6.20 a barrel for No. 1 and $5 a barrel for No. 2, and it is predicted that McIntosh and Snow apples of No. 1 quality will bring as high as $8 a barrel.

Many tomatoes are late in ripening, as the weather has been so cool, but onions have been pulled in good general condition.

Live Stock.—In Leeds county horses are reported to be selling at from $30 to $70 less compared with spring values, while cattle are said to have reached their highest figures this fall. Large shipments of good beef animals are reported from points in Lanark and Prince Edward. Hogs are scarce, and are selling good prices.

Milk production is declining, as is to be expected with failing pastures and the high price of mill feeds, although dairy cows are doing as well as usual for the time of year.

Labor. Farmers are now very busy at various forms of fall work, and more farm help could be used if available. Over 100 boys between 12 and 15 years of age from the city of Port Arthur are helping neighboring farmers to pick potatoes. Farmers are experiencing difficulty in getting threshing machines and engines to fill their silos.

MUTINY PLOT IN HUN NAVY AN ILL OMEN

Further Details of the Serious Troubles at Wilhelmshafen.

KAISER CURBED

His Orders of Stern Punishment Vetoed by Chancellor.

An Amsterdam cable: A mutiny among the crews of four battleships of the German fleet has occurred at Wilhelmshaven.

One of these battleships was the Westfalen, whose captain was thrown overboard and drowned.

The crews landed. Marines refused to fire on them, whereupon soldiers surrounded the sailors, who surrendered.

A mutiny is also reported to have occurred on the German warship Nurnberg, which was at sea. The men seized the officers and proceeded in the direction of Norway, with the intention of being interned. The Nurnberg was overtaken by destroyers and forced to surrender.

Emperor William went to Wilhelmshaven and ordered that one out of every seven mutineers be shot. Chancellor Michaelis protested, with the result that only three were shot. Heavy sentences were imposed on the others.

Emperor William's visit to Wilhelmshaven, in company with Chancellor Michaelis, was made after the mutiny had been suppressed.

The Chancellor's objections to the Emperor's order that one mutineer in every seven be shot was on the ground that he could not assume such responsibility before the Reichstag.

The Westfalen is a battleship of 18,600 tons, built in 1906. The Nurnberg is a new vessel and is not listed in the latest naval records to reach this country. She is a namesake of the cruiser Nurnberg of Admiral von Spee's Pacific squadron, which was destroyed by the British in the battle off the Falkland Islands in December of 1914.

PUNISHMENTS NOT UNJUST.

Late advices from Berlin are to the effect that Chancellor Michaelis declared the punishments inflicted on the men at Wilhelmshaven were not unjust, papers found on them indicating that they had bound themselves to recognize the principles of the Independent Socialists and proving that party had carried on an extensive agitation in the fleet.

The Chancellor is reported to have added that the Independent Socialists belonged to a party in which he could place no confidence as they were endangering the state.

After the statement of Admiral von Capelle in the Reichstag concerning the naval plot, Deputies Dittmann, Haase and Vogtherr denied the correctness of his assertion. They had conferred with the sailors, they said, but no such plan as Admiral von Capelle alleged was submitted and received their approval. They added that the admiral aimed at forming a coalition against the Socialists.

REICHSTAG TOLD OF PLOT.

A Copenhagen cable: In announcing in the Reichstag yesterday that a plot had been discovered in the German navy to paralyze the fleet, Vice-Admiral von Capelle, the Minister of Marine is quoted in a Berlin despatch as saying:

"It is unfortunately a sad fact that the Russian revolution turned the heads of some persons in our navy and introduced revolutionary ideas among them. Their insensate plan was to recruit representatives on all the ships, to cause the crews to refuse to obey orders, to paralyze the fleet and force peace upon the country.

"It is proved that the principal agitator conferred in this building with the Independent Socialist faction in the Reichstag, explained his plans to Deputies Haase and Vogtherr, and obtained their approval.

"I cannot make a statement here on the subsequent events which occurred in the navy. The few persons who forgot their honor and their duty suffered the penalty."

At the conclusion of Admiral von Capelle's statement there were scenes of a most disorderly character, the shouts from the other Deputies being heard loud above the furious interruptions of the Socialists.

Socialist deputies interrupted the speaker with cries of dissent. Deputy David, of the majority Socialists, demanded the Government produce proof, and that the Reichstag should suspend judgment in the meantime.

OMINOUS FOR GERMANY.

A Washington report: Few despatches since the war began have created more interest at the Navy Department than to-day's report from Amsterdam telling of a revolt in the German Navy. Officers unhesitatingly declared that the story, so far not confirmed in official reports, was one of the most encouraging signs of the year for the Allies, and probably one of the most ominous from the German view. They pointed out that while the Allied powers have noted repeatedly in their official statements that the morale of the German troops was declining, and observers have believed that the end would come in food and labor riots, or perhaps in a political revolt, there has been nothing to suggest that the iron discipline of the German military system had lost its hold over the fighting millions in the slightest degree.

As one possible explanation of the navy revolt, they pointed out that ever since submarine warfare was started by the Germans the British have adopted the consistent policy of suppressing information as to the fate of the submarines sent to the bottom by their patrols. The policy was adopted as a deliberate method of breaking down the morale of the submarine crews.

NEW RUSS CABINET.

Premier Kerensky Names the Official Heads.

A Petrograd cable: The coalition Cabinet, it is announced officially, is composed of the following:

Premier, A. F. Kerensky; Minister of Foreign Affairs, M. I. Terestchenko; Interior, M. Nikitin; Agriculture, M. Avksentieff; Labor, M. Gvozdeff; Supplies, M. Prokopovitch; Finance, M. Bernatsky; Religion, M. Kartasheff; Public Welfare, M. Kishkin; Trade and Industry, A. I. Konovaloff; Justice, M. Malyantovitch; Education, M. Salashin; War, General Verkhovsky; Marine, Admiral Verderevski; State Controller, M. Smyrnoff; President of the Ecumenical Council, M. Tretyakoff; Minister of Ways and Communications, M. Liverovsky.

BOTH FORCES CLAIM VICTORY

In Clash Between Borden Unit and C.M.R.

On Great Trek From Summer Camp.

A Brantford report: Both sides claimed the victory, that is the tale of the running fight which the 2nd Column of troops en route to Toronto, under command of Major Pete, had with the Canadian Mounted Rifles when half an hour out of Thornton, where they lunched. The column left Baxter at 9.10 a. m., and was at Cookstown by 2.40 p. m. In the evening a concert was given in the town hall, participated in by both officers and men. The camp at Cookstown is under Lieut. A. F. Inch, 205th Machine Gun Depot.

The first column under Major Rodgers, which left Cookstown at 5 a. m., and lunched at Bondhead, reached Bradford at 2.50 p. m., having covered thirteen miles of hilly road. The nine came in in excellent shape, no casualties being reported. With pipe band playing they marched into camp, practically the whole population being out to welcome them. Two or three miles from Cookstown, in the morning, they had a little brush with the enemy, two being captured by each side.

Lieut. R. C. Mills, 205th Machine Gun Depot, is camp commandant. Great credit is due Major Mayalt and Lieut. V. C. Kerrison, C.P.A.S.C., for the efficient way in which the feeding of the troops is being carried out. The postal corps also was complimented by Lieut.-Col. McLaren, C. O. R., for the way the mails were handled. Each day a postal corps truck leaves Camp Borden at 2 p. m., visiting at the camps and distributing the mail. The third column, consisting of B and C companies, 2nd C.O.R. and A. detachment of the Army Medical Corps, under Major Bage, left Camp Borden at 2 p. m., reaching Baxter Camp about 4.30 p. m.

RUSS CABINET'S THREE BIG AIMS

Raise Fighting Forces' Power—Restore Order.

Call Constituent Assembly Soon as Possible.

A Petrograd cable: (Delayed)—The new coalition Government assumed control of Russia to-day, replacing the council of five organized a month ago. Announcement was made that the new Government intends to carry out an active foreign policy, with the purpose of making peace in agreement with our allies as soon as possible. Meanwhile the Government will take steps to bring the army to its highest fighting power, and to restore economic and social tranquility to the country.

The new coalition Cabinet, including four members of the Constitutional Democratic party and one independent, seems to have met with the approval of the Petrograd press, except the radical Novaia [illegible], which is pessimistic.

In addition to carrying out an active foreign policy, the new Government will issue an official statement declaring that the serious internal difficulty of Russia is due chiefly to the Korniloff rebellion. The new Government pledges that its business acts will be on the basis of agreements between representatives of the bourgeoisie, the tax-paying elements, and the Revolutionary Democracy.

It points out that the success of such a programme is possible only if the nation is united. The Government's statement in conclusion says that it has three principal aims:

To raise the fighting power of the armies and navies.

To bring order to the country by [illegible].

To call the constituent assembly as soon as possible.

ITALIANS BOMB CATTARO.

Washington report: Giant Caproni aeroplanes rained bombs last night on the great Austrian naval base at Cattaro, starting fires among the buildings in the navy yard and causing damage to Austrian ships in the harbor. The Austrians met the attack with the greatest vigor, but were unable to drive off the aeroplanes until nearly daylight, when the Italians withdrew without loss to their own.

FRENCH ADVANCE OVER MILE; TAKE VILLAGES, STRONGHOLDS

Their Charge Catches Hun Division Relieving, and Takes Heavy Toll.

Foe in Houtholst Wood Outflanked---Over 300 Prisoners Taken.

A Paris cable: The capture of the villages of St. Jean de Mangelare and Veldboek, with numerous blockhouses, is reported in the French official communication of to-night dealing with the operations Tuesday in Flanders where Petain's troops joined up with the British left wing to the south of Dixmude in an endeavor to bring that section of the line even with the sharp wedge that had previously been driven into the German front by Haig east of Broodseinde. The total advance of the French reached to a depth of one and one-quarter miles, to the southern outskirts of the Houtholst Wood, and on a front of more than a mile and one-half.

More than 200 prisoners and a number of cannon and machine guns fell into the hands of the French. All of the observations dominating the vast Flanders plains are now in the hands of the Allies.

A German division which was just handing over the lines to a fresh division recently arrived from the Russian front were caught by the French and great numbers killed.

The result of the day's fighting, in addition to the men and material captured, is that the Forest of Houtholst, which comprises five or six miles of thickly wooded ground, is now flanked on both sides. The wood contains considerable artillery and large numbers of machine guns, but the Germans must find extraordinary difficulty in keeping them supplied.

The War Office report reads:

"In Belgium an attack launched by us this morning was carried out with particular brilliance. After having crossed the marshy Pronnebeek Brook, our troops captured, with admirable spirit, along a front of two and a half kilometres, the enemy defences, despite the difficulties of terrain and bad atmospheric conditions. The villages of St. Jean de Mangelaere and Veldboek, as well as numerous farms, turned into block-houses, fell into our power.

"Our advance, which reached a mean depth of two kilometres has brought us to the outskirts of the Houtholst Forest.

"Our aeroplanes, despite the wind, which blew a tempest, co-operated actively in the attack, using their machine guns at a low height against the enemy infantry and assuring communication with other arms.

"The number of prisoners so far counted exceeds 300, of whom 12 are officers.

"On the Aisne front the artillery action at times was violent in the region of the La Royere Farm and along the whole Ailles-Craonne sector."

The Belgian communication says: "Yesterday our artillery shelled several enemy batteries and observatories, as well as enemy works near Dixmude. During the course of the night we strongly shelled the German batteries with the object of co-operating in the attacks then in preparation. Attacks were launched this morning by our allies. The reaction of the enemy was feeble. To-day we shelled the enemy organizations at Dixmude and counter-shelled several batteries in action as well as enemy communications. Our 75's cannonaded the Germans before the French offensive on our right."

BRILLIANT VICTORY.

With the French Armies in Flanders, cable: After one of the most terrific hurricanes of artillery fire, the French army, co-operating in conjunction with the British, early this morning, won a brilliant victory which carried the troops forward to a depth of half a mile along a front of about a mile, stretching from Draaibank to Wydendreeft. More than three hundred prisoners and a number of cannon and machine guns fell into the hands of the French, and their advance took them to a position where they commanded the western border of the Forest of Houthulst.

The movement was a brilliant one, and as a result, virtually all the elevations dominating the vast Flanders plain are now in the hands of the Allies.

CROSSED A QUAGMIRE.

The attack was preceded by a heavy windstorm, accompanied by a drenching rain, which made the ground a quagmire.

The correspondent passed over the French side of the battlefield on the evening preceding the attack and found everything and everybody ready for the difficult work of the morrow, but underneath the feet the ground gave way, while the atmosphere resembled a shower bath. No garments could withstand the penetrating qualities of the elements. All around shell-holes were filled to their brims with water and the only protection for the French troops toward the enemy was the drenched sand bags piled up. Here the shelterless troops had passed the day and night awaiting orders to move.

At length, after 2 o'clock in the morning, definite orders arrived and the troops were glad. They went forward with great rapidity despite the conditions, circling the shell-holes and slipping through the deepest mud. They knew, however, that the success of future operations depended upon their efforts to-day. When they reached their first objective points they found the Germans crowded in nests of craters, which hereabouts form the first lines, the building of trenches in this region of Flanders being impossible owing to the waters sell.

A PIECE OF GOOD LUCK.

Good luck had made the advance coincide with the period when the Germans were changing the troops occupying their front lines. A German division was just handing over the lines to a fresh division recently arrived from the Russian front. The French, with wonderful dash, were upon them before they realized the situation and killed many of them.

There was a short respite before the next forward movement was undertaken in co-operation with the British, who were advancing simultaneously on the French right.

Slithering along over the broken and muddy ground the French troopers made their way quickly towards Mangelaere, which soon fell into their possession.

The whole scheme of operations for the day had been carried out long before noon. The infantry's advance was greatly assisted by the daring of the aviators, who would not permit weather conditions, which presented the greatest danger for the airmen, to interfere with the work of recording the artillery preparation. The French aviators ascended and flew low over the German lines, taking capital photographs of the destruction caused by the guns and then returned in the fearful gale to their bases to turn in their reports. Meanwhile not a single German aeroplane was seen in the air.

For the moment the French troops are occupied in consolidating the ground won, which, although small in extent, represents an invaluable gain, as it deprives the Germans of their points of observation.

ALLY AIR RAIDS PLAYED HAVOC

Huns On Flemish Coast in State of Terror.

Locks Crippled and "Pill-boxes" Destroyed.

A London cable: The Amsterdam Telegraaf's frontier correspondent says: "During the splendid autumn days of last week the Entente air attacks made terrible havoc on the Flemish coast, whither many German soldiers were sent to rest. Germans kept watch on the dunes in observation posts and observation balloons, and sirens shrieked when the airmen appeared in squadrons. The civilians scuttled to shelters and the soldiers to [illegible] in the dunes, while the airmen ascended to battle. The defence guns thundered from the underground and the mitrailleuses rattled as the bombs burst. Heyst, Knocke, West Capelle, Ramscapelle and Lissewege shook to their foundations. Heavy bombs fell on the [illegible] bridge and Zeebrugge, and ten marines were killed and many wounded. Nearly at the same time others fell on Ostend and on the dyke head [illegible]. [illegible] wounded soldiers were removed from there. On Tuesday evening bombs fell near Zeebrugge lock, where the mechanical gates were damaged by great openings made in the quay walls. Six torpedo boats, between the locks and the Solvay factory, lay shut up in the canal. The soldiers were obliged to work day and night on the lock and quay till the vessels were [illegible] two days later.

Perry Robinson, in a despatch, emphasizes the fact that recent battles smashed the third scheme of defence devised by the Germans. First came the trenches and dugouts, second the hills and ridges tunnelled and fortified, and third a series of concrete "pill-boxes" and redoubts [illegible]. The Germans find the last the costliest of all. The British call the "pill-boxes" and redoubts "Boches' traps" because the shells not directly hitting often kill all the occupants by concussion. Some of these have an eight foot thick concrete front and only one foot in the rear, so that the Germans thought they couldn't be used against themselves after capture. Our troops are now trained to stalking these [illegible] and [illegible] machine guns.

Prisoners are the [illegible] compelling another general [illegible] of the German [illegible].

SHIP SUNK, CREW SAVED.

An Atlantic Port report: News of the destruction of the Norwegian steamship Majoren, by a German submarine off the Irish coast on Sept. [illegible] was brought here to-day by survivors, passengers on a British vessel. The Majoren, of 4,300 tons gross, left Philadelphia on August [illegible] with iron for Glasgow. The [illegible] members of the crew were rescued by a patrol vessel 36 hours after they took to small boats.

Get Behind the Wheel of a Ford and Drive

TRY it just once! Ask your friend to let you "pilot" his car on an open stretch. You'll like it, and will be surprised how easily the Ford is handled and driven.

If you have never felt the thrill of driving your own car, there is something good in store for you. It is vastly different from just riding—being a passenger. And especially so if you drive a Ford.

Young boys, girls, women and even grandfathers—thousands of them—are driving Ford cars and enjoying it. A Ford stops and starts in traffic with exceptional ease and smoothness, while on country roads and hills its strength and power show to advantage.

Buy a Ford and you will want to be behind "the wheel" constantly.

Port Elgin Makes Good

Some persons were a little afraid when the committee to canvass for British Red Cross set its objective at $2400 for Port Elgin.

But Port Elgin made good. They produced the sum aimed at and then some, so that the total gained in a whirlwind canvass of the town on Thursday afternoon amounted to $2700.

Reeve Izzard had the work well planned, and promptly at 2 p.m. he sent his committee forth, and in no time, it seemed, they were back, and shortly before 5 o'clock they knew Port Elgin people had done what was asked of them.

The best of the canvass was that everyone had a share in the giving, only an occasional person refused to give to the world's greatest charity.

The canvassers report the work was made a pleasure by the hearty way in which the people responded. As one man said: "I never did this canvassing before. I thought it would be a tough job, but instead, it's real fun. Most of my beat had their gifts ready, and were apparently waiting for me to knock at the door."

And so it was with the most of the men who were on the committee, they all report splendid co-operation.

The committee composed Reeve Izzard, chairman; James Struthers, treasurer; E. R. Sayles, secretary; Messrs Eidt, Pattison, McCallum, Cottrill, Stevens, Black, W. Falconer, G. Falconer, Geddes, Barber, H. D. McLaren, Mitchell, Coulter, Hilker, Dr. Power.

The Ladies' Red Cross, organization of the town started the campaign off with a $200 gift, and this put spirit in the whole endeavor.

Teachers of Bruce Are in Favor of Dental Inspection

Of the 125 teachers in the West Bruce inspectorate, 114 were at Paisley for the annual convention.

Mrs. Burchill, president of Paisley continuation school, presided. The delegates were warmly welcomed in a short address by Reeve J. S. Steele Mrs. Mayberry of Stratford Normal school gave an interesting address on the topic. "Free Hand Art." Mr. McCauley, of Bruce Township led in the discussion on nature study. Dr. Coyne of Toronto was present in the interests of Ontario Dental Association and urged on the teachers the necessity of dental inspection in the school The association passed a resolution in favor of dental inspection

The following officers were elected: President, Mr. Gates, Southampton; vice president, Miss Currie, Port Elgin; secretary-treasurer, F. Aylesworth, Port Elgin; librarian, Mr. Halpenny, Kincardine.

The next meeting will be in Southampton.

The public meeting held in the town hall was largely attended D Forrester, chairman of the school board, presided over a splendid program.

Mr. F. E. McCauley of S. S. No. 4 Bruce elected as delegate to the O. E. A. meeting in Toronto next Easter, but in case Mr. McCauley was unable to attend, Inspector Bald was requested, on motion of Messrs. Gatis and Mr. McCauley, to appoint a substitute.

Inspector Bald was present throughout all the sessions, and he gave many useful hints and much valuable information whenever he thought necessary or whenever called on. The teachers, one and all, showed their appreciation of his efforts to make the convention a success.

May Not Have Electric Light This Winter

Unless men are willing to help in the construction of the coffer dam at the Electric Light works, Port Elgin and Southampton may be without light most of the winter.

The heavy rains have caused the river to rise, and unless men can be secured to to finish the job, which is half through, the coffer dam may go away before the concrete dam is built.

Tax collector Chapman will be at the Bank of Hamilton on Saturday afternoon to receive taxes.

The Soldiers Friend club asks the addresses of all Port Elgin soldiers who are in France. The club wants to send boxes to them. Leave address clearly written at Times office.

Saugeen Canvass Raises $1500

The Canvass of Saugeen township for Red Cross hardly reached the sum aimed at. The Committee aimed at $2 000, but the canvass realized about $1400.

At the council meeting on Saturday the matter was discussed and the council made a grant of a little over $100 which brought the sum to $1500.

The canvassers were:

Div. 1—J. Cook, S. Tranter, W. Pierson, A. McCannel, J. Shanks, W. Walker, Wes. Smith.

Div. 2—Arch. Bell. Jas. Olsie, R. Scott, R. Nelson, A. Thede.

Div. 3—G. Jamieson, W. Jeffrey, J. D. Muir, A. Brunton, D. McCarrol.

Div. 4—R. McKechnie, A. Cairns. Chas. Nelson, P. McKinnon, D. J. Porter.

Div. 5—J. W. Reany, J. B. Lyness, A. Rowand, W. Miller, John Scott, Walter Gowanlock, Jr.

Mr. R. Fenton has purchased from Mrs. J. Forrester the farm just north of the town. He takes possession in the spring.

Warden Izzard had the misfortune to fall and break two ribs on Thursday. He was continuing the Red Cross canvass and had gone to the camp of Dr. Wells and Court Curtis who were enjoying hunting and fishing along the lake. After getting their contributions the warden was on his way out of the woods when he tripped on some brush and fell on a log, severely bruising himself and breaking two ribs.

Enjoyable meeting

A very enjoyable meeting was that of the W. M. S. of the Presbyterian church on Tuesday afternoon last. There was a splendid gathering of ladies present, and the spirit and sociability was one of the pleasant features of the gathering. An invitation was extended to the Methodist ladies, and they were present in goodly numbers. Mrs. R. M. Lowry presided, and a short program was carried out. Mrs. (Rev.) Strachan gave a very earnest and instructive address on the Indian work, pointing out that there were 100,000 pagan Indians in Canada

Others contributing to the program were Misses Murcer, Wankel, Annie Mitchell. The thankoffering amounted to $27. Lunch was served at the close.

Lionel Christian is improving and able to walk out.

Why Canada Needs More Money

UP to date the war has cost Canada about $700,000,000.

Canada has spent in Canada over $400,000,000 on her own account.

Canada has spent in Canada on behalf of Great Britain over $300,000,000.

What Canada spends for Great Britain is really loaned to Great Britain and will be repaid or credited to Canada later on.

Great Britain needs so much ready cash to finance her own expenditures at home for herself and for our Allies that she must buy on credit from Canada, and from every other country where she can get credit.

Of course Great Britain's credit is so good that other countries, in order to get her trade, are quite as willing to give her credit as we are in Canada.

Canada wants to help Great Britain not only because Canada wants Britain's trade but because we are Canada and she is Great Britain—both members of the same great Empire, kin of our kin, our motherland.

For Canada it is both a filial and patriotic duty to supply Great Britain's war needs and remember, her needs are our needs. Also it is in Canada's self-interest to supply those needs and thus keep open a market for our products.

* * *

Now, Britain needs our wheat, our cheese, cattle, hogs, and many manufactured articles.

Canada also needs many of these things —between the two it amounts to more than a million dollars a day in cash.

And the producers must be paid in cash.

Neither Canada nor Great Britain could go to a Canadian farmer and buy his wheat or his cattle on credit.

The farmer and all other producers might be ever so willing to give their country credit but they could not do it because they have to pay cash for wages, for rent, materials, etc. They must be paid in cash, or its equivalent.

So Canada says to Great Britain:—"I will lend you the money so that you can pay cash to Canada's producers for what you want.

"I will borrow this money from our own people just as you borrow money from your people.

"I will also borrow from the people of Canada money to pay cash for all the products that Canada, as well as Great Britain, needs in Canada."

That is Canada's practical, patriotic part in helping to win the war.

Without this credit the Canadian producer could not sell to Great Britain, and without these Canadian products the war would be prolonged.

So it is necessary for Canada to give to Great Britain the credit in order that Canada's own producers, who need a market, will have one; and in order that Great Britain which needs the products to win the war, will get them.

* * *

Now how does Canada get the money by which both Canada and Britain can pay cash for Canada's products?

By borrowing it from the people of Canada through the sale of Canada's Victory Bonds to be offered in November.

That is why Canada's Victory Bonds are offered to the people—to raise money to help to finish the war.

"Canada must keep her shoulder to the wheel even though it be a chariot of fire," and the way for Canada to keep her shoulder to the wheel is by buying

Don't Fool With the Service Act

The Times phones have been ringing almost constantly during business hours these days, answering questions regarding the Military Service act.

One man said "I paid no attention to the National Service card, and nothing happened to me, and I wondered if this new Service act was also to be unheeded."

Let us say right now, that the Military Service act says that if you are 20 years of age, or any age up to and including 34 years, unmarried or a widower without children, you are eligible for the first draft.

If you do not report for service, or ask for exemption by Nov. 10, you will simply be taken by the military police and treated as a deserter, with no recourse to a tribunal, even if you could have secured exemption. Therefore, this act differs. It carries a great big MUST in it. So don't fool with it.

Well, What then?

You DON'T need to get examined first.

You simply go to your postoffice, and if you will report for service, you ask the postmaster to make out a Service form, or if you want exemption then an Exemption form.

Well, then, what?

You state that you desire exemption, sign it for the postmaster, and you will get a receipt for it. Keep that receipt, go back home and wait. The Registrar will in due time receive your exemption or service request, and will notify you, and if it is for exemption he will ask you to state in writing your full reasons, according to the act, why you feel you should be exempted, and he will instruct you where your appeal is tried. That is all you have to do.

Can any other person ask for exemption for me?

Yes, any member of your family, or your employer. If your employer asks for you, he and you also must send in reasons, when instructed by the officers.

You may apply in person to any exemption tribunal on November 8, 9, or 10, 1917, and make application for exemption to such tribunal. It is strongly advised that all exemption claims be sent through the postoffice, and not by personal application.

Remember, Nov. 10, is the last chance you will have to apply for exemption. Do not delay if you feel you are entitled to it. When stating in writing your reasons for exemption see to it that they are strong, and that it is in the NATIONAL INTEREST that you should remain at home.

It is a grave responsibility to be on an exemption tribunal. If the required number of men are not got in the first draft, then the second draft is called. Therefore, in order that a man of the first draft does not shirk his responsibility and place his burden on a man of the second draft, exemptions can only be given on the basis of the Act. They are very plain, and exemption is made only when a man is needed at home for national reasons.

The tribunals begin to sit on Nov. 8, 9, and 10. On these days only men will be heard in person who have not had an opportunity of getting to a postoffice to file their claims.

On Nov. 12, the boards then take up appeals which are in writing.

The above facts ought to be plain. If you desire further information call up The Times office.

Remember this. You MUST apply for exemption, if you want it. And you MUST do it before the 10th day of November.

Remember also that if you have to go to the army you get the same pay as a volunteer, your people will get separation allowance and patriotic fund, if your case calls for it.

CUTICURA HEALED VERY ITCHY SCALP

Burning Kept Her Awake Nights. Hard Lumps Came Then Turned to Scales.

"My scalp began by being very itchy and burning which would keep me awake nights it was so bothersome. First there would come little hard lumps and when I scratched them they would turn to flaky scales and dry.

"I got no relief until I got Cuticura Soap and Ointment. They gave instant relief and in a week I was completely healed." (Signed) Mrs. Alfred Berthelotte, Ed River Crossing, N. B., February 11, '16.

Most skin troubles might be prevented by using Cuticura Soap and Ointment for every-day toilet purposes.

Some Notes of Fashions

The small furs of this year, says the New York Sun's fashion writer, are really bewitching. So are the collars, capes and scarfs fur trimmed, and there are also many sets of hat and muff, hat and scarf, scarf and bag, etc., that without even the slightest supporting touch of fur manage to be unconsciously chic.

WITH A PIECE OF VELVET.

A Parisian milliner can take a piece of black velvet, fashion from it a hat wide of brim and high of crown and a soft pillow muff, give to each by way of trimming a cord and tassel of blue and red and rightly consider her duty done.

HER MAGIC TOUCH.

Or she can make a soft little hat of rose duvetyn and a knowing looking cache nez neck scarf, give a narrow band of moleskin to the hat and moleskin ends and buttons to the scarf and accomplish as much in the way of effect as a lesser artist could achieve through whole pelts of fine fur.

It's all in knowing the trick, and while some American milliners have engaging tricks of their own, it is Paris that gives us our best in hat and neckwear and neck and muff sets not wholly of fur.

THE CLOTH HAT.

The cloth hat that has sprung into popularity offers admirable opportunity for the launching of new cloth neckpieces, and everywhere, or at least wherever chic millinery is assembled, one sees these sets as well as sets in velvet.

A NATTY TURBAN.

Sometimes the cloth is embroidered a little at the ends in wool or chenille or cord. Sometimes it is only lined with contrasting material or color and depends upon the novelty and cleverness of its shape to give it cachet. A small turban and neck scarf of green and black check, the soft bright green surface checked off with lines of black lace into inch squares had brim facing, scarf lining and scarf end bands of black velvet; and in the same collection with this was an adorable little muffling collar of soft gray velvet the back, bordered and collared high in fur and accompanying a high, soft crowned turban of duvetyn and fur.

CAPE COLLARS.

Cape collars and short capes of fur bid fair to be an epidemic if the furriers have their way. Innumerable models of this sort are in the shops, many of them very attractive, some of them awkward and bulky, and not by any means invariably becoming.

The fertile plain in which Damascus is situated is about thirty miles in diameter, and is due to the River Barada, which is probably the Abana of scripture. Two other streams, the Wady Helbon on the north and the Awaj on the south, increase this fertility, and these two contend for the honor of representing the Pharphar, the other scriptural stream.

GUARD THE CHILDREN FROM AUTUMN COLDS

The fall is the most severe season of the year for colds—one day is warm, the next is wet and cold and unless the mother is on her guard the little ones are seized with colds that may hang on all winter. Baby's Own Tablets are mothers' best friend in preventing or banishing colds. They act as a gentle laxative, keeping the bowels and stomach free and sweet. An occasional dose will prevent colds or if it does come on suddenly the prompt use of the Tablets will quickly cure it. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

IRON OF THE FUTURE.

No Danger of a Shortage Because of Increased Consumption.

That iron is the very basis of our industrial civilization will be admitted by the thoughtful, and many of our greatest supplies of iron ore are being rapidly depleted because of the increased per capita consumption of iron the world over, an increase which is destined to be greater in the future when the races in Asia and Africa increase their consumption of iron.

These conditions of increasing consumption and decreasing reserves have often in the past, particularly about the beginning of this century, been used to create a scare, on the ground that our supplies of usable ore were being so rapidly depleted that their exhaustion would occur within two or three generations.

This is a preposterous point of view, because as we lower the percentage of iron in the rock which we call "ore" the quantity of such ore increases at a rate out of all proportion to the decrease in iron content, and as we use leaner and leaner ores technical improvements will be made which will minimize any tendency to increased cost of production.

The same thing has happened in gold, silver, copper and other ores, and to-day copper ores are being worked with only 1.5 per cent. of copper in them.—Chemical Engineering.

Mr. R. S. McLaughlyin, President of the McLaughlin Motor Company Limited, Oshawa, Ont., and Director of the Dominion Bank, was appointed a director of the Chevrolet Motor Company on Oct. 5th, at a meeting held in New York. This Chevrolet Motor Company is the parent company incorporated under the laws of the State of Delaware in 1915. The capital stock of this company is $80,000,000 and among its assets are the controlling interest in General Motors Company. Eight Chevrolet Motor Companies in various parts of the United States are owned and operated by the Chevrolet Motor Company of Delaware. The Chevrolet Motor Company is one of the strongest and most powerful of the motor companies.

It is an interesting fact that while the Chevrolet Motor Company of Canada is closely affiliated with the American Chevrolet Companies, it is owned and operated entirely by Canadian capital and Canadian men.

Mr. McLaughlin is to be congratulated in his appointment to the Directorate of this company.

Accurate Timekeepers.

The most perfect clocks are used in astronomical observations. One of these has run for months, with an average error of only one fifteen-thousandth of a second a day. In order to run so perfectly a clock must not only be constructed and adjusted with the greatest care, but must be installed in a special vault, where the temperature is practically uniform. It must also be free from jar or vibration and must, therefore, be mounted on a heavy masonry pier. Lastly, it should always be kept under the same barometric pressure, and this may be affected by inclosing it in a glass or metal case, from which the air is partially exhausted. In order that the case may not be opened or disturbed the winding is done automatically by electricity, the frequency of the winding in some cases being as often as every minute. Only pendulum clocks can attain the highest degree of accuracy. —Wall Street Journal.

The Shoestring Republic.

Chile is as long as from New York to San Francisco and as narrow as Lake Erie. Truly a "shoestring republic." She is squeezed tightly between the mountain range and the coast. Her cities look up to the hills and down to the sea, with, as Arthur Ruhl puts it, "the Andes hanging like a beautiful drop curtain at the eastern end of every street." Chile contains twenty-four provinces, and the largest province is big enough to hold all Pennsylvania, Vermont, Rhode Island and Massachusetts. The Chileans are the Yankees of South America, aggressive, keen, making fortunes from nitrate, erecting a chain of wireless stations from the near tropical north tip of the Chilean shoestring to the Antarctic south tip and preparing for Panama trade by expending $12,000,000 on port and dock improvements. Chile is elbowing her way in among the most forward pushing nations of the twentieth century.—World Outlook.

Chats With the Doctor

(By a Physician)

SUMMER DIARRHOEA.

Summer diarrhoea is, of course, commonest and most fatal among infants, but it occurs among adults also, and with serious results if no steps are taken to check it. In very many cases diarrhoea is merely Nature's method of getting rid of some unsuitable substance that has been eaten, and where it is of short duration no harm results. But when it lasts day after day something should be done, and the best thing is to take a smart purge, a dose of castor oil or three or four grains of calomel. This usually gets rid of the irritating matter. Should it not do so, however, a doctor should be consulted. While the diarrhoea lasts the diet should be largely farinaceous, composed mainly of such things as rice, sago, tapioca, cornflour and arrowroot.

SUNBURN.

Sunburn is easier than to prevent than to cure, though many people prefer to risk it rather than to take the annoying little precautions necessary if it is to be avoided. To people with dark complexions and hair, whose skin tans to a pleasant brown color, sunburn is nearly always becoming and seldom painful, but fair-skinned, light-haired people often suffer great discomfort from it. These latter should always wear broad-brimmed shady hats, should dry the face thoroughly after washing or, especially, after sea-bathing and if women, should cover the skin of the face before going out into the sunshine with a protective layer of good pure face cream covered with an equally reliable powder. Both should be removed at once on coming indoors out of the sun. Women should wear extra veils, preferably plain ones, as an extra precaution. It is very difficult to remove sunburn once it has appeared, but relief may be obtained from the burning and tingling of the affected skin by applying cold cream fairly thickly over it.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE BABY

There are many factors necessary for the proper development of a young child. If the baby is to develop steadily and soundly all these factors must be present. It must have proper food, proper clothing, proper surroundings, and proper exercise. In the case of a quite small baby sufficient exercise is almost assured by the promision of suitable clothing. If the clothes are simple and do not hamper and impede the movements of the arms, legs, and body, a healthy child will instinctively exercise itself as does a young animal, whilst laying in a cot or cart. Too often, however, we find babies cramped and swathed in an endless series of unnecessary garments, which almost entirely prevent movement. A child dressed in this way can seldom develop well or thrive as it should. It must not be forgotten, too, that even simple clothing is not natural to man, and every opportunity should be seized of allowing the baby to lie or crawl quite naked for a while in suitable surroundings—in a warm, well-ventilated room, or on a rug out of doors in the sun and air acording to the season. These exercises for the tiny infant should be supplemented by a certain amount of carrying about by the mother or nurse. In the natural primitive state the baby is carried by the mother almost continuously, and it is clear that the mere mechanical adjustment of the child's body to the movements of the mother brings the little muscles into action and helps their growth.

The proper food for an infant is clearly its mother's milk. Where this is unobtainable for any reason a carefully selected and studied artificial diet must be used, but these substitutes cannot adequately replace the natural food supplied by a healthy mother. The subject of artificial diets for babies is rather too long a one to go into fully here, but the food should always be freshly prepared, given in scrupulously clean utensils, and its effect on the child's health and growth must be carefully watched. An ill-nourished or a flabby, fat, starch-fed child will often succumb to an illness that a vigorous one would throw off in a day or two.

The child's surroundings must be airy, well ventilated, sunny, clean and simple. The furniture and fittings should be strong and able to bear a little knocking about. There should be as few breakable or tearables as possible, so that the baby may have all the liberty it needs to investigate its surroundings without causing trouble. It will always want to handle things, to pull itself about by chairs and curtains, and climb up table legs, and these instincts should be anticipated and provided for. They are useful and not harmful. Anyone who has watched a family of kittens learning balance and acrobatics on the rungs of a chair must have realized how much of the perfect suppleness of the grown-up cat was acquired during these baby games. So with us: the play of the baby and the child builds the framework of the healthy man and woman.

Minard's Liniment Cures Garget in Cows.

Vacation and Efficiency.

It is the change really more than the rest that is of so much value in a vacation. Besides the absorption of the fatigue products, there is an opportunity given those functions which have remained inactive and sluggish, and even atrophic, to exercise and develop. It is a restoration of balance. For confined and sedentary workers even hard and coarse country work is restful and invigorating. For indoor workers this sort of a vacation means a new lease on life. Very often a border line case of tuberculosis is maintained a little longer above the line by a proper vacation. The increased tendency to arteriosclerosis and other degenerative conditions, as well as premature senility, nearly all the result of high pressure and efficiency, can be much neutralized by periodic vacations, a vacation free from the grind, of course, but also from the worry incident thereto. The vacation is a therapeutic measure come to stay.—New York Medical Journal.

Two Freaks of Nature.

Two contrasting freaks of nature are the Island of Fire and the Lake of Snow. The Island of Fire is called the Home of Hot Devils. It is situated in the midst of a large lake of boiling mud in the Island of Java. The steam and gases which arise from the sticky mud form themselves into bubbles, attaining a diameter of five or six feet, and sail high up in the air like balloons, carried hither and thither by the wind and finally exploding with a loud crash.

The biggest snow lake is seen from the summit of Hispar pass, in the Karakoram range. It is more than 300 square miles in area. In Switzerland the sea of ice might better be called the sea of snow, as the surface is broken up by solar heat, which makes a minute fissuring in the ice, giving it the appearance of snow.

Dressing Wounds With Sugar.

Dr. G. Magnus reports to the Therapeutische Monatshefte of Berlin on his success in treating wounds with ordinary sugar. This he sprinkles in a thick layer over the wound, that has previously been washed and dried. He covers it with a dry dressing, which he renews every day.

The Journal of the American Medical Association says a great advantage of this dressing is that it does not stick to the wound, but stimulates a powerful secretion, which flushes out the depths of the wound, while profuse suppuration softens crusts and necrotic tissue and gives a chance for healthy granulation below. When this stage is reached salves or transplantation take the place of sugar.

MIRAGE IN CLOUDS.

The Specter That Gave an Aviator the Scare of His Life.

An extraordinary story of a mirage in the clouds is told by a young flying corps officer in the British service.

"I had often wondered what it would feel like to see a machine coming straight for one and to know that a collision was inevitable. I had the experience one afternoon, only the collision did not take place. I was on patrol with five other machines over the lines and had just gone into a cloud bank. Just before going in I saw the bus on my right turning to cross in front of me. All of a sudden I saw a machine just the same as my own appear out of the cloud about fifty feet away, making straight for me. Instinctively I jammed my nose hard down and went as near a nose dive as possible. The other bus did the same. I turned! The other turned into me. I was in a cold perspiration all over by this time, so I thought, 'Here goes; if I am going to crash it might as well be complete.' So straight for it I went. We got closer and closer, and, lo! my machine and its mirage in the clouds met.

"It seemed like a hideous nightmare, and I can still see that machine doing its utmost to crash into me. I think I can say I have had the full horrors of a collision in the air without its actually taking place."—London Telegraph.

ESCAPED FROM GERMAN PRISON

Five Canadian Soldiers Have Reached London.

Say Foe Expects Armistice, Early Peace.

London Cable — Five Canadians reached London having escaped from Germany. They are: 27,088, C. F. H. McArthur, Toronto battalion; 132,327, Corp. E. Cunningham, Montreal Highlanders; and 109,477, W. L. Muster; 109,331, John Evans, and 1,210, J. Watts, Mounted Rifles. Cunningham was captured in September last year on the Somme, McArthur in the second battle of Ypres. When seen by the Canadian Associated Press correspondent Cunningham declared that Germany was on the verge of revolution. Conditions as regards food and clothing were terrible. He witnessed riots by soldiers and civilians at Dusseldorf, when two civilians were shot. The Germans expect an armistice by Christmas, and the end of the war in February. They imagine the conditions in England regarding food are as bad as with them.

Cunningham was captured when making a sortie, with sixteen others, ten yards from the enemy trenches. An officer and eleven men were killed and the remainder taken prisoners, but all except Cunningham were killed on the way to the German rear by the British artillery. During [illegible] the [illegible] and was taken before a German General, who showed him a book containing the records of the Canadian Army in France. He pressed him for information concerning reinforcements. Next morning he was taken to German headquarters, [illegible]. Subsequently he was taken to Cambrai. He was in a hospital there ten days. During this time the town was bombed by British airmen. He was three days without food in the journey to the prison camp at Dulmen, was inoculated four times, vaccinated six times, isolated for a month, then put on sinking pumps for wells. His food largely consisted of a kind of [illegible] looking like paraffin. Here he met McArthur, and they arranged to escape together, and, with a South African soldier, speaking German, they lowered themselves from the barracks, walked to the station and asked for three tickets to a certain place, which were issued readily. They arrived safely and walked through the village, and rested till night in a small wood. Continuing the journey, they encountered three line sentries, but crossed the frontier without a mishap. The British Consul looked after them well.

As showing the shortage of soap in Germany, Cunningham says he sold a small piece of shaving soap for twenty marks. He paid ten and a half marks for a tie, two and a half for a collar, and sixty-five marks for a pair of boots of compressed paper.

Five other Canadians who have also escaped are now undergoing the customary quarantine. One hundred and seventy-five out of two hundred recently escaped from Germany are Canadians and all are being returned to Canada.

GREEK VICTIMS OF CRUEL TURK

700,000 Exiled or Murdered in Asia Minor.

New [illegible] Report — [illegible]

"The story of the Greek deportations is not [illegible] generally known," said [illegible]

"The Greeks of Asia Minor have always been law-abiding and perfectly loyal to the Turkish Government. Under Abdul Hamid they were well treated, but the [illegible] adopted a programme to crush them.

"At the declaration of the present war all persecutions were stopped, but the spring of 1915 brought to the stage a tragic, novel drama, unique in the history of the world as to its horrors and destructiveness, that is, the Armenian deportation; under that innocent name the extermination of a Christian race was started.

"Along with the Armenians most of the Greeks of the Marmora regions and Thrace have been deported, on the pretext that they gave information to the enemy. Along the Aegean Coast Aivalik stands out as the worst sufferer. According to the report some [illegible] there have been deported toward Kerla and beyond. [illegible] 7,000 have been slaughtered. The Greek Bishop of Aivalik committed suicide in despair.

"The latest account from Trebizond shows the towns along the Black Sea are being emptied of their Greek population. From Lyndon S. Crawford, missionary of the American Board at Trebizond, we have a letter dated July 14, 1917, in which he says the following order came from Turkish Army headquarters at Sheishebie: 'By 12:25 July 1st no Greek man over 16 and under 50 be found in Ordou. Send all such on into the interior. As for the families, we will send further orders later.'

"Mr. Crawford also wrote: 'First let us express once more our thankfulness to God for the deliverance He has sent us by the great, grand Russian army and people. We are more and more appreciating what the Russians have done for this region. Immediately after the Russian occupation of this province in April, 1916, hundreds of Armenians began to come out of their hiding places.'

"From the Greek Minister to the United States, Georges Roussos, I have a letter September 21, 1917, in which he says:

"'Backed by the Germans, the Turks have put into execution and [illegible] organized their wildness. They have decided to exterminate the Greek element, which is the most important and most numerous in Asia Minor.

"'Under pretext of necessities of war entire populations have been deported. Members of families have been separated. German General Staff Officer's Opinion.

Thinks States Can Aid Only in the Air.

Amsterdam Cable — The [illegible] publishes an article by Major Holfe, of the German general staff, on the effect the entrance of the United States will have on the war. After reviewing the difficulties of the United States in training and transporting troops to Europe, he declares that the American [illegible] possibilities may safely be [illegible] by Germany.

"Before the declaration of war," he says, "the military resources of the United States consisted of an insufficiently-trained regular army of only 100,000 and a National Guard of 120,000, hardly trained at all. The vigorous measures taken to increase the army will result in the formation by spring of an army of about 1,500,000, which has only received minimum training.

"No considerable part of this army can reach Europe before summer, while in many cases a large number must be retained at home, so that not more than 100,000 or 200,000 men can be sent to Europe. The transport difficulties will be enormous. Two and a half million tons of shipping will be necessary to transport and supply sixteen divisions, and the total American shipping, even allowing for [illegible] ships and new construction, will by spring be only four million tons of which the navy requires [illegible].

LONDON HAS BOMB PROOFS TO SHELTER 1,000,000 IN RAIDS

All Are for Public—Expect More Air Visitors at Month's End.

London Cable — London's bomb-proof shelters are being card-indexed in preparation for further German raids. Sufficient tunnels, arches, crypts, basements and substantial buildings have been inventoried to accommodate one million persons.

In making this announcement to-day, Sir George Cave, Home Secretary, declared an advisory board of prominent surveyors will be appointed soon to make a canvass of bomb-proof shelters in greater London. He said the Government had decided to make it a regulation under the Defence of the Realm Act to require everyone possessing a bomb-proof shelter to place it at the disposal of the public.

The decision of the education authorities to close the schools during the last week of October is perhaps the most interesting of the many steps taken in anticipation of the resumption of German raids as soon as the moon is up again. Air raid shelter placards are being distributed throughout the metropolitan area.

SAND VIA DUTCH FOR HUN WARFARE

Ample Proof Furnished by Amsterdam Paper

In Justification of Britain's Latest Course.

Amsterdam Cable — No one with knowledge of German methods has the slightest doubt that the sand and gravel sent through Holland to Belgium is utilized for military purposes, but since the Dutch Government requires proofs, some of the evidence collected by the Telegraaf regarding the traffic for this month may be quoted.

[illegible] information is derived from the weekly correspondents in Belgium, who state that Roulers, six miles from the front, is connected with the River Lys by a canal. PLOTTED FOR HINDU REVOLT

Trial in Chicago of German-Hindu Conspirators.

Conceived in Berlin, Engineered by Huns.

Chicago Report — Trial of Gustav H. Jacobsen, Albert Wehde, George Paul Boehm and Heramba La Gupta, charged with conspiring to foment a revolution in India, was begun to-day before Federal Judge K. M. Landis. Baron Curt von Reiswitz, former German Consul in Chicago, was indicted with the others, but is now in Germany. Jacobsen is a wealthy Chicago real estate dealer.

Attorney Fleming said that the Government would show that the alleged plotters received their instructions from Berlin by code telegrams. The entire plot, he said, was conceived in Berlin when the India National party was formed at the German capital in 1911 to overthrow British rule in India and force the Allies to withdraw troops from the French and Belgian battlefronts to India.

The detailed story of the activities of the alleged conspirators in San Francisco, Honolulu, Siam and Chicago, and their subsequent arrest by United States Government, was described by Attorney Fleming in closing.

Jodh Singh, a Hindu, the first witness for the Government, said he was in South America when he first became interested in the alleged plot. He went to [illegible] to Berlin, where he attended meetings of the German [illegible] the Indian [illegible].

The witness said he came [illegible] in 1915 to come to the United States. Singh said he went to Siam with Boehm, Wehde and von Reiswitz. At San Francisco he [illegible] from the German consul.

He visited Amoy, China, where he received a package of letters bearing on the alleged plot from the German Consul there. Later he went to Manila and finally reached Siam.

RAINED DEATH ON HUN FORCES

Awful Scenes in the Arsenal at Roulers

When British Airmen Made Deadly Raid.

Amsterdam Cable — The Telegraaf says the air attack on Roulers arsenal was one of the most dramatic and terrible episodes of the Flanders struggle. The Germans had quartered troops in the arsenal, which is a spacious new building of several storeys in the Place d'Armes. They had only arrived at 4 in the afternoon. A squadron of British airmen suddenly appeared at 9.30 and suddenly pelted the building with incendiary bombs. These penetrated the roof, causing great columns of flame to ascend high above the arsenal. The Germans fled, screaming and gesticulating, but those in the upper storeys saw their exit threatened. The flames licked round the staircase, where wounded and dying lay groaning. Desperate men jumped out of the windows demented. The Germans ran to the Place d'Armes tumbling over each other in their haste. Then the airmen descended and shot them with machine-guns. The noise of the bombs and guns [illegible] those sleeping, as far as [illegible]. People looked towards Roulers above which the glow was great, as if the whole town was ablaze. The correspondent does not know how many were killed in the arsenal, but heard figures mentioned, which he does not state for fear of exaggeration. The place was strictly shut off until all traces of the dead had been removed. Charred bodies hung out of the burned windows.

CROP REPORTS FOR THE WEEK

Wheat Growth is Slow—Root Crops Satisfactory.

Bordeaux Mixture Controls Potato Blight.

Toronto Cable — Following is a summary of weekly crop reports made by district representatives to the Ontario department of agriculture:

Threshing is active, and the results continue to show good average yields for most of the grain crops. The Kenora representative claims an average of 51 bushels per acre for oats, and instances one field that yielded 80 bushels per acre.

Beans and late buckwheat have been more or less injured by frost. Considerable husking corn also got nipped, and will be unfit for seed, although good enough for feed, while from the same cause the general quality of ensilage will also be inferior compared with that of more recent years. Rain has been delaying corn cutting.

Most of the fall wheat will enter the winter with a good top, but some has been sown rather late, and there has been but little October growth.

Potatoes on the whole will be a fair to good crop both as to yield and quality, should rot not develop. They have done remarkably well in the Fort William and some other districts of northern Ontario. The Durham County representative states that this season has proved to the satisfaction of many farmers that spraying with Bordeaux mixture will control the potato blight.

Washington Takes Warning Seriously—Sees von Tirpitz Again in Power.

Washington Report — The greatest importance is attached in Washington to the brief wireless press message picked up from Berlin by the British Admiralty, asserting that Germany is expected shortly to declare the coasts of the United States, Canada and Cuba to be naval war zones.

Past experience convinces officials here that wireless messages of this character previously picked up have usually been followed by formal announcement by the Berlin Government of important hostile actions. Assuming that the brief but extremely significant news from Berlin is authentic, officials here would not be surprised to hear soon of the appearance of German submarines operating off the Atlantic coast.

Full confirmation of the Berlin warning will be interpreted as meaning that Grand Admiral von Tirpitz, who retired from the head of the German Navy Department on March 14, 1916, to be succeeded by Vice-Admiral von Capelle, whose resignation was announced a few days ago, had again taken the upper hand in German Admiralty matters. Von Capelle's handling of the navy has been considered a failure, and it is regarded here as extremely significant that immediately upon the news of von Capelle's retirement, von Tirpitz broke into print with a prediction of the final triumph of the submarine, and a statement that Germany is now at the fateful hour of her existence.

Close upon the heels of the von Tirpitz interview word trickles through by wireless from Berlin that Germany can be counted upon to declare shortly the American, Cuban and Canadian coasts blockaded. There can be no discounting the importance of these outcroppings.

ALL-METAL PLANES TO BACK UP HUN

New Type to Be Built to Aid Infantry.

Foe Feverishly Preparing for Air War.

London Cable — (Reuter despatch) —The following facts, which have come to the knowledge of the French staff illustrate the vital importance of air supremacy for the Allies:

"Germany is straining every nerve in anticipation of America's new air squadrons and the Allies' spring air offensive. The number of German battle-planes is being doubled during the winter and the motor building factories throughout Germany are enlarging their plants and reinforcing their labor. Twenty-nine important new factories have been created. Between February and August large orders have been placed in Switzerland for quantities of three seaters with two sixty-horse-power engines. Bombing machines are being built, capable of carrying eighteen hundredweight of bombs and climbing 10,000 feet in thirty-five minutes.

"New models of every type are being feverishly produced. They [illegible] a new all-metal machine for co-operation with the infantry.

"A big German machine which recently landed in Holland was fitted with electric installation for the purpose of warming the aviator.

"Simultaneously the Germans are greatly augmenting the personnel of their air services and expediting and encouraging transfers to this branch.

"A captured order issued by General Ludendorff states the Allies are employing aeroplanes economically with a view to a great battle in the future. 'We should be wrong to overwork and wear out our air formations, which are inferior in number,' the order says. 'The infantry must behold it is impossible to prevent the enemy flying over our lines. The airmen must be used sparingly and at calm times. Germany must have as many machines as possible for great emergencies.'"

Bruce County has about 100 miles of roads to come under the Good Roads system. Of course it will take some years before it is fully effective in the county. The Times believes that the adoption of the system was the proper cause for the county council. There are but two or three counties in the province left that have not joined but it will be only a short time before the few who oppose the system will change their opinions. It must be borne in mind that there is always considerable expense, and much worry before new machinery is made to work smoothly, and this is true of the Good Roads system, as well as of Hydro. When Hydro power was first made possible to a large portion of the province there was much fault finding by many people. But the men who believed in it persevered. Who would want to say Hydro power is not a great public benefit to-day? So will the Good Roads System be. True, the men who strive for it, will be much maligned, and those who superintend will meet with criticism, but the system will prevail.

Will Run as Union Government Candidate

Wiarton, Ont., Oct. 18th, 1917.

To the Electors,
Riding of North Bruce.

In view of the radical developments which have taken place in Dominion politics since the Liberal Convention at Tara honored me by nomination, and of the formation of a Union Government, it is proper that I make a public declaration of my position.

The late Conservative Administration failed lamentably, in many essentials, to discharge the important duties devolving upon it, and on its record, the Conservative Party could not appeal to the electors of the Dominion with any prospect of a return to power.

Some leading men of both parties, realizing that the grave problem to be faced cannot be solved by a partisan government, have agreed upon the formation of a "Union" Government, made up not of non-party men but of experienced leaders of both parties, in whom their followers have confidence.

At the Convention and at every opportunity since then, I have declared myself in favor of enlisting the entire energies of the Country, not only the men but also the wealth and all resources required by Canada to enable her to discharge fully her duty in the war, as part of the British Empire. I will give my support to the Union Government in all measures that have as their objects the vigorous prosecution of the war to a speedy and decisive victory, or the solution of resulting war-time and after-the war problems, in the best interests of the common soldier and the common people.

As a union Government is composed of Conservative and Liberal ministers, so will its supporters be Conservative or Liberal and I appeal to the electors of North Bruce with considerable confidence, upon the principles I have indicated—a Liberal Unionist.

Yours faithfully,
John MacCaulay

Don't Miss the Point

There is a man in this part of the world who represents, to our way of thinking, a pretty good average of human nature. Whenever the preacher in his church livers a very hot sermon against some special kind of sin, this man gets enthusiastic and goes around to the vestry to tell the preacher what a fine sermon it was. Then he goes home and repeats it to his brother, and they talk over the points and the people the sermon hit the hardest. But this particular man never sees when the sermon hits him.

Early next month the biggest public campaign ever put on in Canada will be opened to get subscriptions to the fourth Canadian war loan, the Victory Loan. The thing people in this district must bear in mind is: that the appeals are directed to each and every one of them. It is not merely the well-off men and women who are being asked to invest. It is everybody. The little sermons which will be "preached" in the advertising should not be taken as hints to the well-to-do people only. Every man and woman should watch for these advertisements and start now to gather up the necessary money to buy either a fifty or a hundred or a five hundred or a thousand dollar bond.

In the United States there were about 4 subscribers to the first American loan out of every 100 persons. They only received received 3½%. In Canada for the last war loan there were only 41,000 subscribers or say 4 in every 700. Yet in Canada the interest was much higher—on the Victory Bonds that will probably be issued to yield about 5½%.

The first thing anyone should, in our opinion, is to get rid of the idea that there is any sacrifice involved in investing in this loan. It is true that the patriotic spirit is appealed to and it is equally true that a great and generous response is expected on that ground. But the new war loan is a straightway business proposition: safe, profitable and convenient. Every man and every woman with as much as fifty dollars to spare should own one of these bonds by recommending them everywhere. The readers of this paper are among the most thrifty, prosperous and public spirited in the Dominion. When the subscriptions to the Victory Loan are added up from the various districts and sub districts we expect them to show that this part of the great Dominion has been true to its traditions and just to its opportunities. For Port Elgin E. R. Sayles and John McCallum and for Saugeen F. W. Elliott and G. M. Jamieson are the men to whom to apply if you will take out a bond. All business placed with these men will be considered as absolutely confidential

RHEUMATISM ARRESTED

Many people suffer the tortures of lame muscles and stiffened joints because of impurities in the blood, and each succeeding attack seems more acute until rheumatism has invaded the whole system.

To arrest rheumatism it is quite as important to improve your general health as to purify your blood, and the cod liver oil in Scott's Emulsion is nature's great blood-maker, while its medicinal nourishment strengthens the organs to expel the impurities and upbuild your strength.

Scott's Emulsion is helping thousands every day who could not find other relief. Refuse the alcoholic substitutes.

Answers Letter Found in Socks

Mrs. Neil McDonald, of Port Elgin, in sending socks to soldiers, placed a letter in one some time ago, and has received the following letter in reply from Pte. T. Duncan, of the 43rd battalion in France. He says:

"I should have written sooner to you, but my battalion has been in the front line quite frequently, and have scarcely had time till now. You see I write two letters a week to my parents in Scotland. I have several cousins in active service here, and also four brothers in the fight, but I have never come across any of them out here yet. They are all in the Imperial army, I being the only one with the Canadians. I joined the Cameron Highlanders at Winnipeg in November, 1915. I have had quite a siege of it here, but am thankful I am not wounded. Only a few scratches. Just put a little iodine on, and never left the line. Well, we are not allowed to say much about our fighting. I should like to tell the places and the scraps we have been in, such as Vimy Ridge, and so, on. That's where the Canadians made great a name for themselves. Your gift of socks is the first I have received from the other side of the water. I came up from Minneapolis to join the army, though previously I was in Regina and Moosejaw. With best wishes to you, I will close.

MORE COAL FOR THE WORLD'S BIN

It would be an interesting as well as a profitable task to sit down and figure out just what the advent of a railway line means to undeveloped country. Take the case of western Canada and the Grand Trunk Pacific. More obviously it has meant the opening of new land to agriculture and the making of new towns. These in turn have meant large increases to the population of the Dominion, both rural and urban?

An active agency in this work has been the Geological Survey Branch of the Federal Department of Mines. Both in 1910 and 1911 an expert, Mr. D. B. Dowling, with a competent staff, was sent out to examine and report upon the geology of the Roche Miette Map Area, in Jasper Park, Alberta. His first report, which has already been made public, proved to be of considerable interest, and his latest account is, if possible, of even greater value. Naturally much of it is highly technical, but an abstract is given herewith, which shows in convenient form the outstanding features of Mr. Dowling's most recent findings.

"The activity in prospecting for coal in the Yellow Head Pass region," he writes, "noted in the summary report for 1910, was continued during the past summer and has resulted in the establishment of a shipping mine—the Jasper Park Collieries. Coal seams were also found east of Brule Lake, at no great distance from the Grand Trunk Pacific, so that four coal-mining centres will probably be actively engaged in producing coal.

The coal-bearing Kootanie formation, of lower Cretaceous age, forms two coal areas, each of which extends in a general northwest-southeast direction on both sides of the valley of the Athabaska. One of these coal areas is situated east of the first range of the Rockies and crosses the Athabaska in the neighborhood of Brule Lake. The second lies to the west of the first, inside of the first range of the Rockies.

The coal area inside the first range crosses the Athabaska from the valley of Moose Creek, on the north, and follows south along the east face of the range, which terminates at the river in Roche Miette. The southern part is divided along its length by a broken anticline, which shows in places older strata. The eastern portion is probably a narrow basin, in which only the lowest seams are likely present. The western part, which is a monoclinal block for part of its length, presents more favorable conditions for mining from the edge of the valley by tunnels along the seams. Three workable seams of steam coal, in beds of 5, 10 and 13 feet, respectively, have been prospected at the Jasper Park collieries, situated in this western portion.

The facility with which the mountains can be reached since the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway to the mouth of the Miette River, offers great inducement to those seeking change for health or recreation, and the adaptability of this area for health and pleasure resorts may be noticed. The scenery of Jasper Park is magnificent, since the valley of the Athabaska, which is wide and well furnished with lake-like stretches of water, forms a contrasting foreground to the mountain peaks and ranges on either side. The outer ranges are sufficiently high to afford difficulties in mountain climbing, besides which they offer in their folded strata studies great progress of mountain building.

A new town, Fitzhugh, is now being laid out at the mouth of Miette River, a few miles above the site of William Henry's old trading post.

Another townsite is being surveyed at Fiddle Creek, and it is also the location for a large hotel selected by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, under the shoulder of Roche Perdrix, commonly called folding mountain.

Trains on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway are run west as far as Fitzhugh, near the mouth of Miette Creek and the site of Henry House. Progress is being made on the construction of the line through the pass.

Calcareous deposits in the form of marl beds have been found in the vicinity of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway west of Edson. The foundations of cement works in the vicinity have already been laid, and it is probable that the manufacture of cement will be assured in a few years.

The resemblance and behavior of the coal in this district to that from the Crow's Nest Pass has been remarked and confirmed by the mechanical department of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. It is slower burning than the Ohio coals used in the eastern section of the railway, and its use requires different methods of firing. Experiments in a small way show that it is practically all coking, so that when a demand for coke in northern British Columbia is made the supply may be drawn not only from this district, but from the nearby fields on the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains.

The greatest activity was confined to the south side of the river, where at the Jasper collieries every effort was made to be ready to ship some coal as soon as the railway could be connected by a spur with the temporary tipple. The first carload was delivered to the railway company in the last week of September. By Nov. 13 the output was 130 tons per day, and this was increased by Dec. 16 to 275 tons. The latest returns, to March, 1912, give 400 tons per day, with a maximum of 496.

The coal horizon which underlies the city of Edmonton is being mined only on the outskirts of the town since the possible damage to property by the sinking of the surface is becoming too great. Attempts at reaching the horizon at points available for shipment are being made. Farther west, the coal of the top of the Edmonton formation outcrops at the surface near Wabamum Lake, and mining on it has been commenced in the vicinity of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. A shaft at Gainsford had this summer about reached a seam which is stated to be ten feet in thickness. Near Pembina River several shafts have been put down to the seams that are found in the banks of the river, and it is expected that coal will be "mined" there shortly. Further west the coal horizons are again brought to the surface in the edge of the disturbed belt of the foothills, and from the thickness and number of the seams it is probable that the coal seams represent the same horizon as that of the upper part of the Edmonton formation.

An uplifted block of these rocks is found on the head waters of the Embarras River and southeast to the Pembina. On the Embarras head waters, the Yellowhead Pass Coal & Coke Company is preparing to mine from several seams as soon as the railway branch is completed from the Grand Trunk Pacific. This is reported as being constructed at the present time a distance south of 30 miles. This line will also pass near mines operated by the Pacific Pass Coal Fields, Limited, whose holdings extend to the Pembina River.

The exposures of the Edmonton coal measures on the Grand Trunk Pacific extend eastward past Beaver Lake. In this vicinity coal is being mined and quarried. Just south of the town of Tofield a flat-lying seam about nine feet in thickness is found, having from fifteen to twenty feet of cover, consisting mostly of sandy shales with a few streaks of hardened sand approaching sandstone. This is now being mined by stripping (two companies operating steam excavators), and the exposed coal quarried and loaded either on railway cars or on wagons. Drilling at the town, which is below the level of the coal seam, has resulted in the finding of another seam at a horizon approximately 200 feet below the surface seam. This would appear to be the lowest seam in the Edmonton measures. An analysis of both seams shows them to be excellent fuels of the sub-bituminous class. The surface seam does not appear to have suffered to as great extent as has been reported from weathering due to its thin covering.

HAPPINESS IN LOVING.

Happiness is the thing most sought for in this world—We are all questing for it, most of us by different roads. Some seek for it in money. Others in fame. Others in feasting and the gratification of the senses. But with all our searching, few of us find it. Yet is it not lying right at our hand, simply in loving! For is not the man or woman whose heart is full of love, happy!

And by this is not meant sentimental love. This to be sure brings happiness, for a time at least. But it is only a small part, merely a drop, of the great ocean of love, the love that laves all shores and has no element of personality or selfishness in it.

Think of love in its largest sense, think of it as filling your heart, as overflowing your whole nature, and flooding you with good-will toward every one, and immediately, does not the spirit of happiness take possession of you!

If you could imagine yourself in the starry spaces above, with the great eternal love throbbing in every part of your being, and see yourself looking down upon the world, and loving every single person and thing in it, wouldn't you be gloriously happy? Wouldn't a wondrous joy fill you, which even to imagine thrills all your being?

Just try for the sake of the experiment [illegible] this state. Leave your envyings and your jealousies and your dislikes and hates behind. Try to understand your fellowmen and women and their weaknesses and their temptations in such a big way, that all these wrong feelings in regard to them drop away from you. Try to fill your heart with love for them and all the beautiful creation about you. Rather, let the great love that is under and in all flow in upon you. Try to realize it in your consciousness. Try to feel it and know it. And to you will come a sense of happiness almost overpowering in its greatness and joy.

We realize, even in small ways, the power of love to make us happy. When we are feeling the sense of love for our child or our father or mother, husband or wife, or friend, we are happy. And yet how limited is this, how infringed upon and broken here and there by the things of the world? But it furnishes a taste of the happiness love can give. It points the way to the wondrous happiness that would be ours did we love greatly, did we give all of ourselves over to love of all.

And at this season, when love is already at higher tide than usual in our hearts, why not let it flow on unchecked? Why not let it well into all the dry springs of our nature, until the little flowers of happiness start up everywhere, and life becomes beautiful for all the rest of our days?

At any rate, this effort of withdrawing from worldly affairs for a little while, and trying to feel love for all humanity, is worth while. It will give us a foretaste of that happiness that will be ours when we can see life with the larger vision.

ANCIENT TRAVELER'S OUTFIT.

A small "Traveler's Guide," dated 1788, contains a good deal of curious advice as to the luggage which should be carried. "Take," says the book, "two suits of clothes, one coffee colored and one blue; a chest flannel, a pair of leather breeches, a sleeping suit, three pairs of stockings, two pairs of gloves, two wigs, one hair box (?), two caps, two hats, two pairs of shoes, one pair of slippers, six 'undershirts,' four 'overshirts,' six neckties, six collars, six handkerchiefs, four pairs of cuffs, three cravats, two pairs of cotton hose and two pairs of socks.

But this is not all, as is shown by the following items: "Take a Bible, a book of sermons, a "Travelers' Guide," two albums, a diary, a quire of white paper, quills and ink, an almanac, a mirror, a silver watch, a silver snuffbox, a silver spoon, a pair of silver shoe buckles, a silver tie pin, three silver studs, a gold seal ring, a knife and fork with silver handles, a sewing case, an opera glass, a compass, a wax light and a tinder box, a toothbrush, a silver toothpick, a sword, a silver mounted cane, a padlock with which to fasten your door at night inside, a clothes brush, a box of medicine."—Pall Mall Gazette

Blobbs—Good thing, Methuselah was a man and not a woman. Slobbs—Why? Blobbs—Well, if he had been a woman we would never have known how old she really was.

From Profits—or Losses?

WE all advertise.

A man advertises his character by his de his wisdom by his words or by his silen A merchant's store, stock, and windows spe either well or ill of his business.

So when a man says "No, I do not adv tise," he knows not what he says. What really means is that he does not publish printed advertisements.

Some proclaim this as though it were a virtue—yet spend much effort and invest much money in advertising their business through mediums other than the printed word.

They may make their wares fit for a king—yet hesitate to introduce them to Brown or Smith.

This is inconsistency.

The truth is, printed advertising is a vital force in every business, just as is the "silent" advertising of a product's quality or a merchant's service.

When you employ the Printed Word as your solicitor in the Court of Public Opinion, you build good will for your product or service—a good will that results in profit.

If unrepresented at this Court, your interests are as unprotected as though, when involved in a law suit, you failed to "enter an appearance" and the case is decided against you—by default.

So it is clear you pay for advertising—one way or the other. If you pay it wages, it will work for you.

If you refuse its offers of service, it will work against you, in just the measure of its employment by your Competitors.

So you are paying for advertising either out of your profits or by your losses.

Advice regarding your advertising problems is available through any good advertising agency, or the Secretary of the Canadian Press Association, Room 503 Lumsden Building. Enquiry involves no obligation on your part—so write, if interested.

TALK WITH MONKEYS.

Scottish Explorer Says African Natives Do This.

It is the firm belief of James Stewart, the Scottish surveyor, who has returned to England after spending over three years in darkest Africa, that many of the natives can almost speak the monkey language.

Mr. Stewart travelled through Liberia and parts of the Upper Congo with a party of surveyors, and during the whole of their arduous march they killed their dinner every day. Sometimes they travelled at the rate of twenty miles a day, sometimes the forests were so dense and the obstacles so numerous that they made no more than a few miles.

"During one of our marches," he said, in relating further experiences to a representative of the London Standard, "we had to plough our way through a marsh that rose up above our knees. The boggy nature of some of the country was such that we were splashed from head to foot, and it was the most tiresome walk we had in the whole of our journeys. For miles the marsh stretched on all sides: the carriers told us that it never had been fully explored, and the only way to get to our destination was to go through it as quickly as we could. We went through it—but not quickly.

"Added to the inconvenience and sodden condition of the land was the terrible smell of rotten and rotting vegetation. We lost one or two of our packages at this stage, for they fell off the heads of our carriers, who stumbled against submerged trees.

"One of the men disappeared too. He was in the rear, and had only a light load, but suddenly he was missed from the caravan and we had to search for him. The natives spread out in a semicircle, and did a complete tour round us, sweeping the marsh for a radius of about three hundred yards. They never found him.

"It was when we were going down the river that we made the acquaintance of the monkeys. We could hear them in the forests, chattering to each other and calling plaintively, almost like human beings. At first I could hardly believe they were monkeys; I thought they were tribes of natives, and some of their cries were like those of children who had been frightened. It was the weirdest thing to see them swinging along one of the boughs of the trees, hand in hand or grasping each other's tails.

"They would swing together in this fashion, forming a bridge right across the stream, and then our carriers would get quite excited. The natives were very fond of monkey flesh. As we approached the animals they would stop their paddles and sit quiet, while the best marksman would hold a gun so that he could have good aim. As a rule he would bring down one of the monkeys with a screech.

"I am convinced that most of these men knew the monkey language, if there [illegible] it. More than once I have seen a carrier and a companion go off into the bush [illegible] until they were within sight of some of the animals. Then one would sit down on his haunches and put his fingers to his lips and nose and make cries we had heard from the forest. In a little while one or two monkeys would come hopping along toward the spot, also calling, and when near enough the carrier who had the gun would fire, and another monkey would be added to the larder."

More than once the party were saved from death by the natives, who always kept a sharp lookout for snakes. Most of these are poisonous, and on one occasion a snake was found coiled up on one of the camp beds just before the owner retired for the night. A native carrier who entered the hut behind the explorer pulled the latter back as he was about to sit down on the bed, and, seizing a gun, killed the beast with a blow from the butt end. After that no one slept before the tent had been thoroughly searched.

But if there were plenty of dangers to be met with, there were also times when there was plenty of fun. At one village the explorers met a local chief who at first refused to see them. The interpreter explained that the chief had retired to his hut to make himself presentable to the great white men.

After waiting nearly half an hour the party met the worthy dusky native. He was attired in a pair of corsets, a linen collar, which had once been white, tied round his neck with fibre, a loin cloth, the remains of a soft felt hat, and a large smile. He explained that he had desired to welcome the white men in their own costume.

MAN'S MOST DEADLY WATER FOE

Perhaps one of the most dangerous and least known of man's watery enemies is the candera, or canero, a fish three to eight inches long, and guilty of the extraordinary habit of diving suddenly into the human economy by the most convenient channels.

There are two distinct species, one eel-like in appearance, blunt-headed and smooth-bodied, the other armed with a sharp, bony snout, two or three inches in length, swallow-tailed, and covered from snout to tail by small barbs. It is particularly attracted by the orifices of the human body, into which it dives suddenly and with great force, producing a shock somewhat akin to a powerful electric discharge. In the case of both types a serious surgical operation is involved; but in the case of the Basl variety the more the fish or the victim wriggles the farther the fish penetrates—and it cannot get back. It frequently causes death, for a surgeon is a rara avis in these wilds. I saw two cut out of a woman in Riveralta, South America, where victims are common, says a writer in the Wide World. The fish is a bloodsucker, and can be easily caught with a lump of raw meat, into which it dives in a mu similar way—the proboscis being pro ably its usual means of securing bloo

TRAIN WAS LATE.

But Sympathetic Passengers Made No Complaint.

If the railway guard who held his trai half a minute beyond schedule time should be reprimanded at headquarters a hundred passengers who know why he did it will sign a petition for his pardon. Sentiment was back of it. Somebody wanted to kiss. A lot of people want to d that. Women kiss each other. Men kis their wives. The guards have no patience with sentiments of that kind.
They flaunt their contempt by bawling
"Break away there; no time for that!"
and refuse to hold the train half a second for the tenderest salute.

But this case was different. It wa easy to see how it was. A mother wa giving away her child. The little fello was in good hands. The couple who ha adopted him were wholesome, kindly people: the mother was wretchedly poor. N doubt it was best all around to give hi away. She and the boy stood the parting like majors up to the last minute then the baby broke down.

"Mom—mom—mom," he blubbered fro
the car platform.

Before the guard could close the do or give the signal she had reache through the crowd and had snatched hi from the man's arms.

"I can't, I can't," she said.

"And then the kissing began. Th guard didn't even try to say "Brea away!" He smiled. So did everybod else. Presently the woman handed th boy back, and the train started amid the deepest silence that had ever hung over that subway station.—New York

BACK TO TI ...HOME...

Is it not time that we began a

It is foolish and sinful to form a h of railing against the tendencie the times, for after all the majo of them are good and wholesome w we understand them, but there is marked tendency of our day that cannot but look upon with grave givings, the tendency to count home out in the midst of all the side attractions and interests app

We asked the question of pare their children were after dark. Is is a question to be asked that pr

We believe there should be reaction in favor of the home,

our time and our energies from some of these and give them to this one great institution whose influence ought to touch with a great blessing every corner of life.—Christian

Exemption Tribunals.

Exemption Boards have been chosen in such a way as to make them absolutely independent and removed from all influence. There are over 1,250 boards throughout the country, each composed of two men, one appointed by the county judge in the district concerned and one selected by a joint committee of Parliament. Being familiar with local conditions where they sit, the members are well-fitted to appreciate such reasons for exemption as are put before them by men called up.

Exemption will be granted to those who can establish that it is in the national interest that they remain in civilian life. This is for the Exemption Board to decide after having received full information in each case.

The grounds on which exemption may be claimed (which are similar to the grounds recognized in Great Britain and the United States) are as follows:—

(a) That it is expedient in the national interest that the man should, instead of being employed in Military Service, be engaged in other work in which he is habitually engaged.

(b) That it is expedient in the national interest that the man should, instead of being employed in Military Service, be engaged in other work in which he wishes to be engaged and for which he has special qualifications.

(c) That it is expedient in the national interest that, instead of being employed in Military Service, he should continue to be educated or trained for any work for which he is then being educated and trained.

(d) That serious hardship would ensue if the man were placed on active service, owing to his exceptional financial or business obligations or domestic position.

(e) Ill health or infirmity.

(f) That he conscientiously objects to the undertaking of combatant service and is prohibited from doing so by tenets and articles of faith, in effect on the sixth day of July, 1917, of any organized religious denomination existing and well recognized in Canada at such date, and to which he in good faith belongs.

(g) That he should be exempt because disfranchised under the War Time Election Act.

No Claim for Exemption should be put forward unless one or other of these grounds in fact exists, and no loyal citizen should assist in, or allow himself to be made a party to, any Claim for Exemption unless thoroughly satisfied that it is made in good faith.

Exemption may be applied for by the men selected themselves or by their parents, near relatives or employers. Application for exemption must be made on printed forms to be found at every post office, which are to be filled in and left with the postmaster if exemption is desired. The postmaster will forward the form to a Registrar, who will send it to the appropriate Exemption Board. In due time, then, the Applicant will get notice as to when he must present his case before the Board.

Issued by The Military Service Council.

Soldier Gets the Socks Knitted

That the soldiers get the socks knitted by the Red Cross is vouched for in the following letter sent to Mrs. James Avis at Underwood, who placed a note in the pair of socks she knit, asking the soldier who got them to write.

They were received by Bombardier Frank Clarkson of the 40th Battery, 10th Brigade, who writes as follows :

Dear Friend,

I really must write you a few lines in answer to your request, and also to acknowledge the pair of socks which I received a few days ago, with a note in which I am very pleased to answer

I must thank you very much indeed for your kindness and please rest assured that your work for us is much appreciated.

The socks are a perfect fit, and will last me quite a while, as I always wash my own, and have a change now, so I think I'm lucky.

I also thank you very much indeed for your good wishes, and hope with you that this war will soon be over, tho' we are resigned now to another winter out here, as the general opinion amongst us is that it will finish about next fall.

I can assure you that Fritz is getting the medicine now that he handed out to our boys at the beginning of the war.

We were in the fight a couple of days ago, though of course I being in the artillery, did not go over the top, but it was just murder, as Fritz hadn't a chance, and his waves of men were mown down like grass.

We are well taken care of now, and everything seems to have got down to a good system.

We are all well provided with food and clothing, and everything is done for us that can be done, but I'm sure we shall be glad to get back home just the same.

I have been out here more than a year now, and am eagerly looking forward to a "leave to Blighty", as my dear wife is there waiting for me. Our home is, or was, in Hamilton, and will be glad to get back there too, but not until this job is done, and done properly.

We have just heard that there is to be an election in Canada soon, and we understand we are to get a vote out here, so I feel sure the Government that has done so much for us will be returned, and tho' I belong to no party, I hope they do, as they are looking after us, and our interests, to which I think we are entitled.

Hoping this letter will be a source of pleasure to you, and convince you that your work reaches the front, and trusting that God will reward you and bless you for your kindness

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson IV. Oct. 28, 1917.

Ezra's Return from Babylon.—Ezra 8: 15-36.

Commentary.—I. Preparations for the return (vs. 15-20). The first ten verses of the preceding chapter give an outline of the return to Jerusalem of exiles from Babylon with Ezra as their leader. This significant record is made, "for Ezra had prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord, and to do it, and to teach in Israel statutes and judgments." We have in the verses preceding the lesson a partial catalogue of those who went with Ezra from Babylon to Jerusalem. The place of assembly was probably not far from Babylon, near one of the canals connected with Euphrates River at Ahava, though some think the people gathered near the Euphrates. When Ezra found that there were none of the Levites present to make the journey to Jerusalem, he sent for some of them in order that the temple service might be provided with ministers of this rank. Ezra's call met with a ready response, and a considerable number of Levites became members of the expedition.

II. Prayer for protection (vs. 21-23). 21. I—Ezra speaks in the first person in giving the account of his great undertaking. Proclaimed a fast—Fasting was recognized as a means of successfully approaching God in prayer. Jehoshaphat proclaimed a fast when threatened by his enemies (2 Chron. 20: 3), Jehoiakim proclaimed a fast (Jer. 36: 9), and Esther ordered the observance of a fast that she might approach the king on behalf of her people (Esth. 4: 16). Fasting indicates submission to God's will and humility, and is an expression of dependence upon God and faith in him. By fasting one places spiritual good above temporal. That we might afflict ourselves—"That we might humble ourselves"—R. V. To seek ...... a right way—This was an acknowledgment that Ezra felt his insufficiency for so important an undertaking, and an expression of his confidence in God's power and willingness to render aid. Our substance—Goods or property. 22. Ashamed to require ...... soldiers—Ezra had expressed to the king his confidence in God's protecting care over those who trust him, and it would be inconsistent to ask for a band of soldiers to ward off the attacks of enemies. The enemy—The route to Jerusalem lay through regions infested with bands of robbers ready to fall upon unprotected travellers. Ezra recognized the danger, but he was determined to depend upon the protecting hand of Jehovah, whose servants he and his companions were. Hand of our God—A symbol of the divine power, protection and love. 23. Intreated. True prayer is never offered in vain. The company gathered at "the river of Ahava," believed in the importance of their divinely appointed mission, recognized the dangers of the journey and offered the prayer of faith.

III. Precautions taken (vs. 24-30). 24. Separated—Set apart for a particular and important service. Chief of the priests—Those among the priests who were leading men on account of their ability and perhaps because of their mature age. Sherebiah, Hashabiah, and ten of their brethren—According to vs. 18-19 these were Levites. The passage, "Besides Sherebiah, Hashabiah and ten of their brethren with them" (R. V., margin), indicates that in addition to the twelve priests, twelve Levites were appointed to have the charge of the treasures. See v. 30. 25. The offering for the house of our God (R. V.)—A dedicatory offering. Which the king had offered—The king and the chief men in his kingdom were deeply impressed with the power of the God of Israel and with the excellence of worship offered to him, and were ready to contribute liberally to that worship. They joined with the Jews in their offerings for the temple service. 26. Weighed—Money was mostly reckoned by weight. Unto their hand—The treasures were carefully weighed and a strict account was kept of the amount in order that there might be no loss. They must deliver in Jerusalem the exact amount that was weighed into "their hand" in Babylon. Six hundred and fifty talents of silver—At $1,600 to the talent the silver would amount to more than $1,000,000, and the silver vessels $100,000. Of gold an hundred talents—The talent of gold was worth upward of $25,000, and the value of one hundred talents was at least $2,500,000. 27. A thousand darics (R. V.)—The daric was a coin worth about five dollars. Fine copper—A kind of brass in which was possibly a mixture of gold. This was an alloy highly prized by the ancients on account of the difficulty of its production and because of the high polish which it was capable of taking. The total value of the treasures has been placed at from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000. 28. Ye are holy unto the Lord.—The priests and Levites had been set apart and consecrated to the service of the Lord. The vessels are holy also—They were separated from profane uses and were set apart for the temple service. A freewill offering—It is not the abundance of the gifts that affords satisfaction to the giver, but the spirit of devotion with which he makes the offering. 29. Watch ye and keep them—A sacred trust was committed to them for which they must give account and they were exhorted to exercise the utmost diligence. Until ye weigh them before the chief of the priests.... at Jerusalem—There could be no cessation of watchfulness until they had deposited the treasures intact with the proper officers at the house of Jehovah. Chambers—Rooms in the temple used as store-rooms and as places of meeting for the priests. 30. So the priests and the Levites received (R. V.)—From this it is reasonably certain that the treasures were committed to twelve priests and an equal number of Levites.

IV. A prosperous journey (vs. 31-36). 31. First month. This was the Jewish month Abib, or Nisan, corresponding nearly with April of our year. The company arrived in Jerusalem about the first of July. The distance in a direct line is five hundred miles, but it is probable that Ezra and his company went nearly nine hundred miles to avoid difficult desert marches. Delivered us from ... the enemy—They were saved from the attacks of those who would naturally have fallen upon them for the immense wealth they were carrying with them, such as lay in wait. It is not stated whether any attack was made upon the company or not, but in either case the Lord protected them, [illegible] in causing their defeat if they tried to plunder the returning exiles. 32. Abode there three days—Thus allowing time for rest and for making plans for future action. 33-36. The next step was to deliver the treasures to the priests and Levites authorities to receive them at the temple. An account was taken of the weight of the silver and the gold, as well as the number of the sacred vessels, which would correspond with the inventory which was made before leaving Babylon.

Questions.—Who was Ezra? What aid was given him by the king of Persia? How long had it been since the first return from captivity under Zerubbabel? How many accompanied Ezra from Babylon to Jerusalem? What was the value of the treasures carried with them? What was the occasion for a call to fasting and prayer? How was the faith of Ezra shown? How long were the people in making the journey?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Armed faith.

I. Exalted God before the heathen.

II. Directed the people to seek God.

III. Prepared against misfortune.

I.—Exalted God before the heathen. Ezra was about to conduct his brethren on a perilous journey to Jerusalem. He did not want Artaxerxes to take the place in his plans which belonged to God. He wanted to show that God was the object of his supreme confidence. When making request of the king for authority to make his proposed journey, he declared his faith in God and his providence to promote the interests of his people. Ezra knew that he had but to ask an escort from the king. He had influence enough at court to have procured such help. His faith impelled him to forgo the protection of a Babylon guard. He considered that to reveal any anxiety would appear to a heathen king like a practical denial of the overshadowing providence of Jehovah. A band of soldiers would have hidden the "Shepherd of Israel." With the spiritual perception Ezra saw that his declining the escort would leave open to view God and his gracious and glorious government.

II. Directed the people to seek God. Ezra was accompanied to Jerusalem by members of the same families as Zerubbabel had taken with him. They were on their way from captivity to liberty, from exile to their ancestral home, from the land of idolatry to the scene of true worship. They were in a position of great responsibility, being entrusted with the care of many treasures for God's house. They were in danger of being attacked. They were not organized for defence. Ezra was not indifferent to the danger to which he might be exposed in marching without a band of soldiers. They trusted in the God of infinite power, who governs the world and can dispose all things in it to such ends as are agreeable to his will. The journey from Babylon to Jerusalem under the guidance and protection of Jehovah was somewhat comparable to the journey of their forefathers in their exodus from Egypt under the fiery, cloudy pillar as they journeyed to Canaan. Not by presumption, but by fasting and prayer they obtained the assurance that God would honor their faith and preserve them. Their fasting was to express their humiliation. By prayer they committed themselves to the guidance and protection of God. It might be expected that under such a leader as Ezra with such encouragements all the remaining Jews would have joined the returning company. Ezra's plans were examples of courage and caution.

III. Prepared against misfortune. Ezra was zealous for the honor of God, courageous in sacred toil, devout in daily life, and could act alone when necessary. He traveled unattended in an important crisis rather than compromise divine truth in the estimation of the king. He would not substitute a carnal expedient for a spiritual preparation. The hearts of the people were strengthened to follow his leadership with true faith in God. Ezra took particular care of the treasures of God's sanctuary. After fasting and prayer, before the caravan moved from Ahava, Ezra made arrangements for the custody of the offerings with which he was entrusted. It was fitting that the priests should carry the things that belonged to the temple. "To no other guardianship but that of the possessors of a symbolic and ceremonial purity could the vessels of a symbolic and ceremonial worship be entrusted." With exactness Ezra charged them with their trust. The safety of the treasure meant much to him. In answer to the humble prayers of Ezra and his company, God gave them guidance and guardianship all along the journey to Jerusalem. They reached their destination with joy and without misfortune. It was the end of a toilsome march. It brought the satisfaction of a long cherished hope of reunion with their own people in the true worship of Jehovah. Their faith was rewarded. Ezra and his company were just such characters as were needed in Jerusalem at that time. T. R. A.

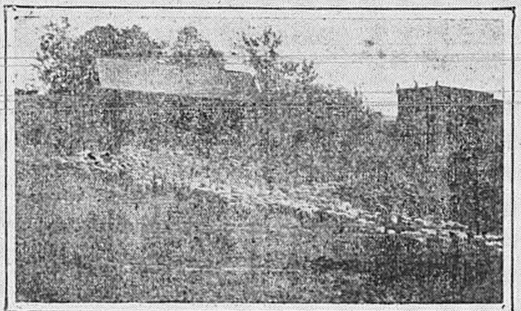
PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE FOR THE BEGINNER WITH SHEEP

Common Sense Boiled Down and Practical Pointers Told Plainly From Experience—By W. H. Underwood.

I have maintained a flock of good sheep on my farm for a good many years and have always found them very profitable. Why more of these animals are not raised is something I can hardly understand. There are many reasons for raising sheep. First, is the money that can be obtained for the wool and mutton. It is needless to say that there is a big demand for these products and every indication points to a big demand for many years to come.

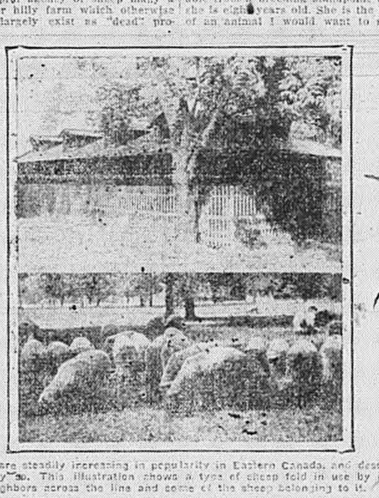
This class of animal should be maintained to aid in keeping down weed life. When weeds are young and sappy, sheep are in a sense insatiable devourers of the same. There are but few kinds of weeds that they will not crop down and consume and turn into good mutton if they have access to the same at a comparatively early stage in the growth of the weeds. When other pasture is not over abundant, this cropping down of weeds will be more complete than under other conditions. They are equally ravenous also for the seeds of weeds. When these have been formed and, even when mature and consumed by the sheep, they are so finely ground that they do not grow when dropped upon the ground.



This picture taken in one of the northern sections of Ontario show a flock of "animals with the golden hoof," such as one does not see in the older sections as a rule.

SHEEP GRAZE EVERYWHERE.

Sheep should be kept to consume the waste products. On every farm these waste products abound more or less. They abound not only in the form of weeds, but in the form of grasses of various kinds. These are found in quantities in the grain fields after the grain has been harvested. They are found in the highways beside the farm, and they are found along fence borders, whatsoever may be the build of these. The sheep that are given access to them will virtually clean up everything and in good form, and the food thus eaten would otherwise be wasted, at least in large measure. Sheep adapt themselves to waste places, and adapt waste places to themselves. They will graze to the very bottom of the deep ditches. They will graze to the very summit of steep hills and crop the succulent tufts of grasses that grow where other animals fear to tread. Thus through the helpful agency of sheep many a stony or hilly farm which otherwise would largely exist as "dead" property is utilized and conducted in profitable channels.



Sheep are steadily increasing in popularity in Eastern Canada, and deservedly so. This illustration shows a type of sheep fold in use by our neighbors across the line and some of the sheep belonging to it.

Sheep should be raised to supply meat for the household. Mutton is one of our best meats, and on my farm we have it when desired. Many farmers are prone to confine their meat diet to salt pork, and largely for the reason that in this form meat is most easily kept. Where sheep are kept upon the farm one may have fresh meat and of a delicious character by killing and dressing occasionally a mutton from his flock. With a good place to keep such meat, such as an apartment in an ice house, it can be enjoyed in warm weather. But even in the absence of such a place one may partake of such food during much of the year, that is, during all portions of the year when the weather is cool enough to enable him to keep such meat in good condition. In this way much of the meat may be grown to meet the needs of the farm, from products which would otherwise be wasted.

Sheep ought to be raised because of the influence which they exert upon fertility. No class of animal raised on the farm will equal them in the favorable influence thus exerted. This arises first from the readily available condition in which droppings reach the soil, second, from the scattered condition in which they reach the land, and third, from the general distribution of the droppings all over the land. In this way sheep leave the land richer in available fertility when they graze upon it than it was when the grazing began. Thus it is that the proverb has arisen that the sheep has a golden hoof.

Sheep are docile and easily cared for. Most of the care they need is required when other farm operations are slack. The returns from sheep are quick and many, profits made principally from pasture, with a little concentrated feed to finish up on; a very small amount as compared with the grain feed necessary to finish other farm animals for the market.

In starting a flock of sheep, some advocate the purchase of pure bred animals, such as a bunch of ewe lambs. This means a heavy outlay at the beginning, with not much income during the first year. A ewe should be two years old before she drops her first lamb. Thus the only source of income from the ewe lamb is her wool clip, which should pay for her keep. For the man who has had no experience in raising sheep, and who wants to start a flock at small expense, I consider that a better method than buying purebreds would be to buy the so-called old ewes which have been discarded from the flocks of sheep men. Such ewes can be obtained at the city markets at a very reasonable price.

SELECTING THE EWES.

When a ewe attains the age of five years many people consider her to be undesirable. Such a ewe, if a good breeder, will not appear so nice to the eye of the visitor as the ewe two or three years of age, but if her udder is in good condition there is no reason why she should not be profitable from a breeding standpoint until she is eight years old. She is the kind of an animal I would want to start with, if I had had no experience in raising sheep and wanted to start a flock. In selecting such ewes, those which show good breeding and have good fleeces should be obtained. Care must be taken to secure animals free from scab, ticks and like diseases. Though these diseases may be controlled, it is much better never to introduce them onto the farm, since the buildings, yards and pastures soon become infested, and there must be a continual war waged with parasites. In addition to seeing that they are free from diseases, the beginner should ascertain that the animals have full mouths. More than one beginner has been fooled by buying almost toothless ewes. Obviously such cannot be thrifty.

The tendency on the part of beginners is to buy a good many sheep and [illegible] in this condition when they are in. This is not good policy. I don't think any one should start with more than 15 or 20 ewes. There is a good deal for a beginner to learn about growing sheep, and experience can be bought much more cheaply with a small than with a large flock. One may find that he does not like sheep. This being so, he had better not try to grow them, for in all probability he will not give them the attention they need. With only a few ewes to start with, a large flock can soon be grown. The flock ought to double itself every year, and this increase will be about all the average beginner will be in position to handle well for a few years.

USE PURE-BRED RAM

After the ewes have been secured, one can well afford to pay a good price for a good ram. It is impossible to get a ram of too high quality. The better the quality in the ram, the better the quality one will get in his produce. This is true regardless of the quality of the ewes. In the selection of the ram choose for constitution, vigor and masculine characteristics generally. It is always desirable to avoid certain physical defects, such as what is commonly called a bad back, low back of the shoulders, or sharp withered, steep rumped, narrow over the heart girth and flat ribbed. All these undesirable characteristics go with the poor backed ram. A broad backed ram straight from where his neck couples onto his shoulders right back to his tail is what should be required, and, in addition, a round barrel or well sprung rib, especially full over the heart girth. The present day stylish ram does not need a neck. If I could get one with his head coupled onto his shoulders I would not mind the neck, he will be able to get head down to graze. A short legged ram is desirable, and if the animal is well down to the ground on a good set of strong legs, it is just as much in his favor. The nearer the ram is to a good mutton carcass the better. He should have and will have, a strong, broad head, broad and wrinkled nose when he is equipped as previously described.

The above described sheep will answer for the ram, be he of the mutton breed or fine wool breed. The covering or wool feature should be just as good as one can get it. It is desirable to get a fleece on the ram with the longest growth of staple or wool fibre possible, and as dense and compact on his skin and of as fine quality as possible. It is hard to get length, density, fineness of fibre, freeness from yellow, gummy, discolored oil, all in the same animal, but this can be approximated by keeping all the desirable features of fleece and carcass in mind when selecting the ram. These qualities are more or less transmissible to the offspring and, therefore should be considered carefully in selecting a ram for breeding purposes.

No grade ram should be selected. There can be no [illegible] improvement secured from the use of a grade in any kind of a breeding venture that is worth talking about. The pure bred sire is the only kind that should be used. I would never use a ram lamb for breeding. My reason for this is that a lamb makes its best growth in its first year, and if it is used for breeding before it is a year old, its growth and full development is naturally hindered. Lambs sired by a ram lamb are not nearly so large as those sired by an older ram, and they do not always do well and make good growth.

The ram should have the very best of care during the breeding season. It is important to keep this animal in good flesh, strong and vigorous. It should be provided with a ration such as a little grain, with clover or alfalfa hay, and a [illegible] that will encourage an appetite and yet temperate to avoid founder or overfeeding. A good way of being sure that the ewes are bred as fast as they come in season is to dust the belly of the ram with ochre and turn him with the flock a short time night and morning. He will find the ewes in season, serve them and leave a little ochre on their bodies, by which they can be detected and removed from the rest of the flock as fast as bred. The ram should be turned in with them again after 14 days or so in order that he may catch any that may have come in season again.

The aim should be to have the ewes in good condition at the time for mating. It is an easier matter to lay flesh on a ewe before she is pregnant than subsequently, when a portion of the feed is used in developing the unborn lamb. I do not mean that the ewes should be fat, but in good flesh or breeding condition. They are in good condition when they are good flesh, but lack the fat to make them fit for the shambles. Oats and bran fed night and morning, and the animals allowed to run outside during the day with access to some good clover or alfalfa hay, will produce splendid results. Turnips and other roots are very beneficial to the breeding flock in the fall, and also during the winter, as they help to counteract the binding tendency of grain feeds and provide succulence.

The next fall, after the ewes have dropped their lambs, some culling out should be done. Those ewes which are the oldest and least prolific, should be separated from the rest of the flock and fattened for the market. A number of the best ewe lambs should be selected to replace the old ewes which have been discarded, thus selecting the foundation for the future breeding flock. If this method is followed up, in a few years all the old ewes will be replaced by younger ones of better type and breeding. By getting a new sire every two years an excellent flock can be built up from a small outlay of money. If after a few years of experience with grades one desires to establish a pure bred flock, a few choice pure bred ewes may be added to the original flock. Then by proper care and selection the pure breds may be increased from year to year and the grades discarded.

Through Many Trials

He is moving on again, when Imogene's voice arrests him in such accents of ingenuous astonishment, grief and regret that the pride and hardness in his face softens, as it twitches and pales even to his lips; and as she leans forward—perilously forward, for more than half of her slender, lissom young body is in the lane, that she may the better look down and stare at him in utter dismay, he leaps off his horse and comes just beneath her.

"Take care of your foothold!" he says anxiously; "you are leaning over so far that if the branch you are holding gives way, you know——"

"Down I go!" Imogene says, nervously; but the next moment, with lips trembling, and her color coming and going, and her sweet, star-like eyes dim with tears, she asks, struggling to maintain that piteous nervous little smile still: "What did you mean by saying—saying that we shouldn't meet again? You are going to Portdreath, are you not?"

"I have been to Portdreath, Miss Trefusis," he answers, deliberately, "and received my dismissal from Sir Philip."

"Dismissal!" repeats Imogene, flushing scarlet. "Why has papa dismissed you?"

A strange look flashes into Dick Dumaresq's brilliant hazel eyes, a blaze of darkness and brightness—to speak in the paradoxes in which the beauty of the wondrous visual organs ofttimes requires to be described—and ere he can conceal it, Imogene reads the truth in his eyes, why her father has dismissed him.

"My long, unexplained absence was the reason," he answers, slowly. "I was not surprised, Miss Trefusis; I expected nothing else than dismissal on that score."

"Well, but you could explain your absence; you were detained unavoidably—some private business, I suppose," she falters, eagerly, and the tears in the starry eyes are wetting the long, dark lashes now.

"Yes; you suppose. Yours is the sweet charity that thinketh no evil," he answers, with subdued passion in his voice and in his eye, full now of gloomy fire and all the sunshine of his face [illegible] by a dark cloud of raging emotion.

"I could not explain my absence satisfactorily, Miss Trefusis; not to Sir Philip—not to any one, indeed. It was such a lame, confused, improbable story. I cannot explain it quite to myself; I shall not try any more," he concludes, curtly and defiantly, as he steps back into the roadway with his hand on the saddle as if ready to mount and be off.

"But—but are you really going away—going away now?" Imogene [illegible], blankly and slowly. "Shall we never see you any more? Lionel will be so dreadfully sorry!"—she can hardly utter the words in her utter, choking, childlike grief—"and—so shall I!"

"You are very good to say so," Dick says, huskily, looking up at her with a faint smile. "My last memory of you, as well as my first, will be a gracious, kindly one. May Heaven bless you!"

He raises his hat once more in adieu to her, but the only answer Imogene makes to his farewell words is a stifled sob as she shrinks back almost out of his sight, save for a gleam of her white dress and a glimpse of her ruffled brown hair.

"I had better go; better be rude, and brusque, and anything," he mutters to himself. "What good can I do? What harm may I not do? I had better go without a word."

And yet it is so hard to go without a word, to go and leave her weeping—weeping with sorrow and disappointment about him; she for whom he would have died to save from a pang.

"I am sorry—truly sorry that things have happened so, Miss Trefusis," he says, in a quiet, matter-of-fact tone of regret. "I had hoped that Portdreath would have been my home for years to come; I hoped many things, indeed, which will not now come to pass. Pray do not let it distress you, though," this in a tone of cool surprise, which had its effect, for Imogene, taking away the little white hands that were covering her face, and keeping her face partly veiled by the leaves, and keeping the sobs out of her voice, she says, quietly and sorrowfully:

"But it does distress me. I am so grieved that papa was displeased with you. Papa has a hasty temper, perhaps"—this with a sudden gleam of hope, looking down at him standing [illegible] amongst the couch-grass, and the sword-grass, and the rank herbage of the dry ditch below her. "Perhaps if—if—you could explain to me, I will try and understand, and not doubt anything you tell me, however odd or improbable it seems, and—and—I might tell papa myself."

But the brief, emphatic shake of Dumaresq's head makes her pause, and a cold smile curls his lip, and a dark, proud look settles on his face.

"Thank you, it would be no use," he says, coldly. "Nothing could make me willing to accept servitude beneath Sir Philip Trefusis again. As an old man and my superior, as well as my employer, he had a perfect right to express his displeasure, to catechise and cross-examine me respecting my absence; but he went beyond that—"

"But if you would tell me, you know I should believe you," urged Imogene, firmly, though timidly, and Dumaresq smiles at the persistent, pleading smiles, at the downcast eyes and trembling, rosy lips, and the little restless fingers pulling off leaves, and buds, and bark from a hazel branch in a remorseless manner, and the wave of a great temptation rushes over his soul as he draws nearer to her, and, throwing his horse's bridle over a gnarled branch, he grips the slender young hazel by its trunk and swings himself up on a ledge, so that his face is on a level with Imogene's waist.

"I will stay here," he says, firmly, to himself. "This is the double walk you told me of," he says, looking into the narrow, leafy avenue; "it is exceedingly pretty."

"Yes, is it not?" Imogene says, timidly, wishing to ask him to come up into her bowerlike retreat, but deferred for a moment by that nameless change in Dumaresq's appearance; the next moment it is impossible to her. Glimpses of that vague isle of enchantment lies before her vision, but as she draws back, a little coldly and shyly, gathering back her soft white flounces which are actually touching Dick Dumaresq's hair, he takes it for a gesture of invitation, and—the great wave of temptation hurrying on despite his calm and fixed resolution—he leaps up lightly beside her, and, throwing his hat on the grass, he stands, his fine, muscular figure drawn up to its full, shapely height, looking down at the fair girl [illegible] before him.

She does not look up—she does not dare.

Perhaps Dumaresq sees that she [illegible] upon his eyes, bent on her with such [illegible] reverential adoration, for his own words, which he begins calmly enough, grow hurried and confused.

"I will tell you all I could tell Sir Philip, if you care to hear it, Miss Trefusis," [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible], and then breaks off.

"After all, why should I?" he says, as if to himself. "I'll come to other things, and I may do harm. I may do harm all round. I will leave [illegible] father, Sir Philip, left it, Miss Trefusis," he says, [illegible] voice. "[illegible] have it to say that I impressed you with a different belief to that which he cherishes himself."

"But I want to know the reason why papa was so displeased with you as to dismiss you," persists Imogene, [illegible] looking up into the handsome face [illegible] upon her. But as she asks the question forcefully the [illegible] in Dumaresq's eyes, which meet hers an instant, and then look down at the hem of her white dress, the truth of the reason of his dismissal.

"I am afraid Sir Philip would have genuine cause to blame me, and ascribe all manner of evil designs and base intentions to me," he says, huskily, with a bitter smile, "if I told you the reason of my abrupt dismissal—that which has put me quite beyond the pale of his forgiveness."

But Imogene looks up again, meeting his gaze steadily, though she trembles, and speaking with a brave, calm modesty which no man could possibly mistake for tender encouragement, while the deep virginal blush rises all over her face until her white brow and ivory throat are tinged alike—"celestial rosy red."

"Perhaps I do know the real reason," she says, quietly; "and if so, I think my father has treated you with cruel injustice."

CHAPTER XX.

"Do you?" Dumaresq asks, in a quiet, low voice, while his burning eyes devour every detail and outline of the fair, sweet, young face, the slender, graceful, maidenly figure, in her white gown and her straw hat. "That I love you? Is that what you know?"

"No; I mean—I mean," Imogene says, taking her courage with both hands, as it were, while she is trembling visibly — I mean that papa thought—that he was told—that you had spoken of me, discussed my name. I know it is false."

"False as hell!" Dumaresq says, quietly—"as it is true as heaven that I love you with all my heart and soul."

The sweet, rose-red flush on Imogene's face deepens into a flood of burning crimson in a moment, and then fades, leaving her as white as a fair piece of sculptured marble.

"It needn't trouble you in the least, you know, Miss Trefusis," Dick Dumaresq says, carelessly—a carelessness which his burning, haggard eyes contradict fatally. "It need never trouble you in the future to remember you inspired a passionate love any more than I shall trouble to try and forget it, the dearest memory of my life."

"Don't say that—you mustn't say that," Imogene mutters, vaguely, in an agony of fear and emotion, and a trembling, wild delight that unnerves her.

But Dumaresq, as he listens, without the faintest shadow of a hope that his words find an echo in her heart, reads all wrongly the shy, girlish, half-audible exclamation.

"You needn't tell me how presumptuous you consider me—a servant in your father's house as I was," he says, calmly; "or how presumptuous it was for a penniless man, without prospects or position to own such a feeling, even if he could not help experiencing it. Put these insurmountable barriers aside for a moment, just for the sake of supposition. Let us suppose, Miss Trefusis, that you and I stood alone as man and woman; it would not be presumptuous in me to speak or in you to listen, for I am well born, and was as gently nurtured as yourself; and since then, though I have fallen to a low estate, and have had a rough path of it through life, I have tried hard to keep my life clean and my soul honest toward Heaven and man. Now, that is all I have to say," he concludes, as quietly and helplessly as he had spoken all along—"except to ask your forgiveness for having spoken so to you at all. I never meant you to hear that confession, Miss Trefusis."

He smiles slightly, with mingled bitterness and tenderness, as he stands, bareheaded before her, asking for forgiveness, thinking how innocent, and gentle, and credulous she is—how easily he could atone to himself for her proud old father's insults and contumely.

"I am not angry," she says, timorously, lifting her dark-gray eyes to his for a moment. "You have not said anything to offend me, I am sure," this more bravely, with another warm flood of color mantling her cheeks, "that you never have said anything which could offend or displease me regarding me."

"You may be quite sure," he says, briefly; "and as you are kind enough to give me this assurance, will you give me one other? Will you try to think as well as you can of me in the future? Give me the benefit of the doubt, as [illegible] with prisoners at the bar, when you hear my name leveled with accusations which I am not by to defend myself from."

"What accusations?" asks Imogene, quickly and breathlessly.

"Too many for me to recollect even the heads of the discourse now," he says, lightly and bitterly. "You will hear sufficient, I have no doubt, through your new channel of relationship, to remind you of my [illegible]."

"What new channels of relationship?" Imogene asks, blankly, puzzled to account for any acquaintance between Sir William [illegible] and Dumaresq.

"Your sister is going to be married, is she not?" he asks, quietly, with another bitter smile. "Well, I have no doubt you will hear a good many things against me; I shall not be by to defend myself; nay, more, I shall never be able to defend myself, and so I will make a parting request to you, Miss Trefusis, to think as well of me as you can—to give me the benefit of the doubt, will you?"

"Yes, certainly," Imogene says, hurriedly; "but speaking of relatives, your cousin, Captain Dumaresq, is a friend of yours, is he not?"

Dick Dumaresq flushes darkly all over his sun-browned face.

"A friend of mine? My cousin Richard? Of course he is!" he says, almost defiantly. "How did you know he was my cousin?" he asks, hurriedly.

"He told [illegible] himself," Imogene says, curtly, "and I think——"

"But," Dumaresq interrupts her eagerly.

"Did he really? Well, that is just what he said he would do," and "I doubted him! I doubted him!" he repeats, quite remorsefully. "When I found he did not either write or send me out to Berlin, whither I had gone at his request—by his advice, I mean—and I trusted to him when he told me he should surely see Sir Philip Trefusis within a day or two, and explain my absence to him and get extension of leave for me. And I did not believe him when he told me he had seen Sir Philip; I wronged him, and thought he had wronged me cruelly, and I told him so, poor fellow. No wonder he looked hurt and said, 'You are very unjust, Dick!' So I was! so I was!" Dick reiterated, quite in transport of self-reproach.

"I do not think you have anything to thank Captain Dumaresq for, or reproach yourself with concerning him," Imogene says, in a displeased voice, "except to thank him as much as I do for disseminating a malicious story concerning me!"

The generous flush and hopeful sparkle in Dick's face fades out and clouds over.

"Things sound so different in repetition," he says, in a sorrowful, apologetic voice. "What Richard may have alluded to in friendly confidence—though, indeed, he had no business to make any such confidence, or betray a word—would bear such a different complexion when repeated in an unfriendly spirit!"

"Then you did make confidence respecting me with him?" Imogene asks, sternly, her very lips paling.

"Nothing that could offend you—your name, indeed, was never mentioned," he says, hurriedly, passionately. "In my faith as a man, nothing was said, nothing alluded to, which could trespass on the reverence of my regard for you."

"Then your cousin's repetition of our confidence must have been a rather garbled account," Imogene says, coldly, with a heaving breast, and haughty, downcast eyes.

"So I feared," Dick answers slowly, "from what your father, Sir Philip, said in his anger to me. I thought it was but Sir Philip's anger," he says, more slowly, lifting up his head, and gazing blankly about like one blind with a sudden revelation—blinded or stunned; "for Richard could never have played me false! We have been boys and brothers, friends and comrades together, and Richard could never have played me false."

"I should rather think he had played you false!" Imogene says, impatiently; "I suspected it from the first. I wonder you did not suspect it, too."

"Would you be likely to suspect immediately a person you loved, and trusted, and admired, and had faith in, a beloved brother or sister, or playing you false, Miss Trefusis?" Dumaresq asks, with the same bewildered, pained look. "Would you credit, we will say, your beautiful sister Evelyn with being cruel and false and treacherous toward you?"

"No, that I never should—never could!" Imogene says, with indignant emphasis.

"No more can I credit Richard, my cousin, with deliberately and cruelly playing me false. He never would—never could, I tell you!" he breaks off suddenly, his face crimsoning, and the sweat of emotion standing on his brow.

"Do you know that that would mean that he was the most forsworn hypocrite that ever the sun shone on, the most cruel traitor that ever——"

"I won't think such things! Above all, I won't say them to you or any one belonging to you," he says, angrily, self-reproachful once more. "It would be a shame now, and I believe I am wronging my cousin cruelly! I will go and see him, confront him, talk everything over with him, he will tell me the plain truth. If there are any wrongs, he will help me to right them, I feel sure," Dick says, honestly. "[illegible] Heaven forbid I [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] I never came back, better I put up with any misrepresentation to my [illegible]. Heaven forbid! I spoiled Richard's happiness!"

"How could you spoil his happiness?" Imogene asks, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] them at cross-purposes [illegible] her.

"It might, easily—too easily," Dick says, wearily, [illegible] [illegible] to her. "[illegible] [illegible] know what [illegible] [illegible]. Heaven forbid I meddled with his happiness!" he [illegible]. "Let me [illegible] and say good-by to you. I [illegible] do much harm [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] be your generous [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] meeting [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] it does not matter [illegible] [illegible] a perfect right to [illegible] [illegible] to speak [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

A Pound of Whole Wheat contains 1700 calories, says the chemist—but it doesn't contain any calories for you unless you can digest it. It is what you digest, not what you eat, that supplies nourishment for the day's work. It is a time to cut out expensive foods that generally contain little nutriment. Shredded Wheat Biscuit is 100 per cent. whole wheat—nothing wasted, nothing thrown away. It is real man-power food. Two or three of these little loaves of baked whole wheat with milk and fresh fruits make a nourishing, strengthening meal at a cost of only a few cents.

Proving Multiplication.

The following method, which is taught in nearly all English elementary schools in India, is the quickest way of proving multiplication, and it will be found that it is absolutely correct in every case.

Example—Multiply 84,639 by 5,214—441,563,446. Add all the digits of the multiplicand till one digit is obtained, thus: 8x4x6x3x9—35—3x5—8. Do likewise with the multiplier, thus: 5x2x1x4—12—1x2—3. Multiply the two results and add the digits till one digit is obtained: 8x3—24—2x4—6. Lastly, add the digits of the product till one digit is obtained, thus: 4x4x1x5x6x3x4x6—42—4x2—6, and if the result agrees with the result obtained by adding the digits of the preceding sums the product is correct. We get 6 in both cases. Hence the product is correct.—Machinery.

Big Naval Guns.

Firing a big gun on one of our battleships is a costly proposition.

A fourteen inch shell weights 1,400 pounds and costs $700.

A twelve inch shell, already considered one of our "smaller" shots, costs $600.

Fourteen inch guns throw projectiles fourteen or sixteen miles. They will pierce an eleven inch Krupp steel plate at seven miles.

Twelve inch guns will shoot just as far, but will pierce the eleven inch plate only at five miles.

When big guns are fired every man on the battleship has to stuff his ears with cotton and touch the deck with his toes and finger tips, keeping his mouth open. This is to prevent broken bones and lost teeth.

Toilet of the Tidy Ant.

No creature is more tidy than an ant, who cannot tolerate the presence of dirt on its body, says a writer in St. Nicholas. These little creatures actually use a number of real toilet articles in keeping themselves clean. A well-known authority says their toilet articles consist of coarse and fine toothed combs, hair brushes, sponges, and even washes and soap. Their combs, however, are the genuine article and differ from ours mainly in that they are fastened to their legs. The ants have no set time for their toilet operations, but clean up whenever they get soiled.

NEW HEALTH FOR WOMEN

The most fateful years in a woman's life are those between forty-five and fifty. Many of the sex enter this period under depressing conditions through overwork or worry about the home, or through a condition in which the blood is weak or watery and so they suffer heavily. Among the commonest symptoms are headaches, feverish flushes, palpitation of the heart, dizziness, backache, depression and other well recognized disturbances of the health which signalizes that the blood requires attention. Women urgently need rich, red blood all their lives, but never more so than in middle-life, when the nerves are also weak and overwrought.

Now every woman can prove the prompt help afforded to her health by renewing and building up the blood. It is a test that any ailing woman can take by using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, for these pills make rich, red blood, which in turn stimulates the appetite, strengthens the nerves and restores full robust health. Thousands of women have found in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills new health and strength and with these a new happiness and interest in life.

So if you suffer, avail yourself at once of the splendid home treatment which Dr. Williams' Pink Pills so easily afford, and you will be among those who rejoice in regained health. These pills are sold by all dealers in medicine, or may be had by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MEDICAL SCIENCE

BUNIONS.

The civilized man, made of hard, unyielding leather in a shape usually unlike any human foot, is responsible for a great deal of pain and discomfort. One of the most painful and crippling deformities for which it is directly responsible is the bunion.

Bunions are extremely common among people of middle age, particularly among those who have worn cheap and [illegible] fitting boots or shoes [illegible] [illegible]. The bunion is an inflammation and enlargement of the lower joint of the big toe, and is due to [illegible] the inward [illegible] of the toe by tight [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] of tissue containing a minute quantity of fluid designed to lubricate the joint. The bursa so [illegible] [illegible] fills with fluid, [illegible] and this swelling usually [illegible] [illegible] inflammation [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] of the inflammation, [illegible] being extremely painful, and making the wearing of any boot or shoe [illegible] impossible.

Bunions are often curable by treatment, but sometimes, in bad cases, [illegible] [illegible] for. The treatment [illegible] [illegible] taking measures [illegible] [illegible] to its normal angle, at the same time taking all pressure from the inflamed joint. Special rubber pads and rubber-covered springs [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the toes to straighten [illegible], and pads and rings [illegible] [illegible] are so placed as to relieve pressure from the painful spot. [illegible] [illegible] and roomy boots or shoes should of course be worn, or no good result can possibly follow. In most slight cases a cure can be effected by perseverance in these measures. Operation is only desirable in those where practical crippling is caused.

BLUSHING.

Many, especially those still in their teens, seem to suffer daily agonies through their habit of blushing. Some of them, indeed, feel so acutely self-conscious about it that they avoid all company, and, just at the age when young people desire and need companionship and active personal interests, these poor young things turn themselves into hermits, see no one, and avoid all social life. Their difficulty lies, of course, in the unfortunate fact that the mere fear of blushing makes one blush.

Blushing is, scientifically, due to the dilatation of the superficial or capillary blood vessels, those which lie in the surface skin, dilatation being caused by the temporary paralysis or, at any rate, imperfect action of the vaso-motor nerve centre, which governs the action of the blood vessels. The nervous system is intricately linked together, and one part of it can seldom be seriously disturbed without affecting one or more of the others. Hence the mere disturbance caused by the acute shyness and the fear of blushing affects the vaso-motor centre and brings about the dreaded result.

The cure for blushing, apart from that almost always wrought by time, lies only in the exercise of the will. The sufferer should first clearly understand that the blush itself is neither ridiculous nor unbecoming. Next he should try to realize that even if he blushes hardly anyone will notice the fact; that most people are far more worried about the figure they are cutting themselves than about him, whether he blushes or no. And last he should try to strengthen his will-power by forcing himself to go into all kinds of company and "brazen it out." Once he can bring himself to do this, his cure is not far distant.

YOUR SOLDIER friend—whether in training, or already at the front—needs Zam-Buk. It cannot be equalled for the many small injuries and ailments incidental to a soldier's life.

Sergt. F. Bromner of the 8th Canadian Mounted Rifles, writes: "For healing cuts, sores, blisters, etc., Zam-Buk cannot be beaten."

Corp. Fremlin of the 10th Field Ambulance, writing from France, says: "We find Zam-Buk splendid for injuries and ailments, but we haven't enough of it."

Every soldier should carry a box of Zam-Buk, as nothing ends pain and stops bleeding so quickly; it also prevents blood-poisoning. 50c. all druggists, or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

Gov't Loans to Farmers

In Western Canada, as in all new countries, development is limited by the fact that a great many of the new settlers are unable to purchase livestock and implements until they have taken one or more crops from the land. As a result, the new settlers' efforts are confined to putting in his crop and harvesting it.

If he were able to purchase sufficient cattle to start a good herd, some hogs as well, he would in this way be enabled to live much better at less cost, as he would be producing a great many things for his own table besides being able to market the surplus.

While Government loans to farmers for this purpose have been a subject of discussion in all the prairie provinces, it has actually been put in practice in British Columbia. Up to the end of last October loans aggregating $234,430, and in number 144, had been granted by the agricultural credits commission of that province. In all 1011 applications for loans were received, the amounts asked for totalling $2,475,455.

The farmer applicant must meet certain requirements before he is granted a loan, appraisement of the applicant's property being made in each case, and many of the applicants have been unable to secure same because they did not come up to the standard set by the commission.

Early in 1916 the provincial government accepted $1,000,000 which is being loaned out to the farmers at the favorable rate of 6½ per cent. The bulk of the loans made are for long terms, the longest period for which a loan may be made granted being thirty-six and one-half years. These long terms may be made on the amortization plan, interest and principal being payable half yearly. The shortest term loan may be made from three to ten years, and need not be amortizable. Borrowers have the privilege of paying off in addition to the regular half yearly payments $25 or any multiple of $25 from time to time on any interest [illegible] date [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible].

The commission has five appraisers in the field, and each application is carefully dealt with. Two of the directors of the commission have spent considerable time in the field with the appraisers for the purpose of obtaining first hand information regarding agricultural lands and conditions throughout the province. The [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible].

The policy of the commission [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] has been to give consideration to those applicants where the money is to be used for purposes that will tend definitely to increase agricultural production, and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible], and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Canada have [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] plans for making capital [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]. Lyness, formerly of Port Elgin Ont., was united in marriage to Mr. Malcom McKinnon, of Moose Jaw Sask., formerly of Sydney N. S. The Rev D. E. Milliken performed the ceremony. The bride was becomingly attired in a suit of cream serge with hat to match and carried white carnations, She was attended by Miss Bessie McLean of Moose Jaw, wearing copenhagen blue, and carrying pink carnations. The groom was supported by Mr. Walter Hillier of Moose Jaw. After the ceremony, a wedding dinner was served at the King's Hotel, Regina, only the immediate friends being present. Mr. and Mrs. McKinnon will reside at Suite 39, Russel Block, Moose Jaw, Sask. Many friends join in best wishes for a long and happy married life.

W. C. T. U. gave a social evening in honor of Mrs. B. S. Begg, who is to leave town shortly. The affair was held at the home of Mrs. Coulter. A social time and lunch was the program. Mrs. Begg has been closely allied with the union for many years, and much regret was expressed on the occasion of the removal of this estimable family, Mr. Begg has been in Walkerville, for some time and the family will follow shortly.

UNDERWOOD NEWS

Mr. and Mrs, Dunlop, of Huron, spent the week end with her sister, Mrs, E. Strachan.

Nurse Shewfelt, Kincardine, was the guest, during the past week of Miss M. Roppel.

Mrs. Cooper, Toronto, is home on a visit to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. P. A. MacKay.

The annual Thank Offering meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of the Presbyterian church was held in the church here, on Wednesday afternoon at 2.30 The president. Mrs. McNabb, was in the chair. After the opening exercises the address of welcome, was given by Miss Hannah Russell, about 60 ladies being present. A splendid address was then given by Mrs. (Rev.) Wilson of Walkerton, which was greatly enjoyed by all. Mrs. Dunc McDougall of Centre Bruce, delighted the ladies with a well-rendered solo, and a duet, was given by Mrs McNabb and Mrs George. At the close of the service lunch was served by the members.

Rev. McNabb and Isabel, were at Whitechurch last week, where Mr. McNabb officiated at a wedding ceremony.

Special services are being conducted in the Methodist church by the pastor, Rev. Hawke.

Roppel Bros closing out sale is attracting great crowds to the store.

Mrs Henry Gibson of the 4th, has returned from the funeral of her sister, the late Mrs. T. Davidson, at Bowmanville.

Williscroft

Miss Olive Robb and Mr. Louis Davies were married in Toronto on Saturday. The people of this community wish Mr. and Mrs Davies a prosperous voyage through life. When they return they will reside on the groom's farm at Salem.

Mr. Duncan McKinnon's sale was very successful this week as his sheep sold for $31 a piece.

Many of the farmers brought home cattle on Saturday which they bought at J. E. Ferguson's sale in Paisley. It seems as if Mr Ferguson is going to make live stock industry boom

No service in the Baptist church here on Sunday, as Rev. Mr. Neilson was away at the convention.

Red Cross Notes

Over 40 ladies responded to the call of Mrs. Barber, the president, to be present at the quilting Friday afternoon. As a result nine quilts were finished. The afternoon was much enjoyed in the work for the soldiers. The ladies had tea together after work.

TIVERTON

Mrs. (Rev.) Wilson of Walkerton gave a very interesting and instructive address at the annual thankoffering meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of Knox church Tiverton on Wednesday evening last.

Mr. A. Nelson, Undertaker, and Mr. Norman McKay, mail carrier, made extensive repairs to the tannery bridge last week. The despatch with which the work was done as well as the excellency of the work nearly took the wind out of the council.

Mr Leslie Chittick, of Stony Creek is visiting at the home of Mr. Wm Hendry boundry east.

The British Red Cross subscription for the Village will be taken on or before next Thursday instead of last. The council have granted $50.00 which is more for the Village than $1000 for Bruce Tp.

A number of our boys have been to Wingham for military examination

Rev. and Mrs. Cougle are conducting services on 2nd of Bruce this week.

Miss Alexander and Miss Matheson our esteemed teachers, attended the Teachers' Association in Paisley last week.

Reeve D. B. McDonald has been asked to arrange a canvass of Tiverton and Bruce Tp. for the Liberty War Loan. Government Bonds will be offered bearing interest at 5½% which makes a good safe investment. Every man or woman who can do so should buy some should buy some of these bonds as in this way the credit of Canada is good and on this largely depends the amount of war orders Canada will receive from the Allied countries.

West Arran

Lance-Corp. McLachlan returned to Quebec this week.

Arthur Plaunt was home last week. Reuben Plaunt went to London to take a position on the railroad.

BURGOYNE AND DISTRICT

Burgoyne people got a surprise last week on seeing the Times when almost the first thing to catch the eye was a true to life photo of their esteemed pastor, Rev. C. C. Strachan. The Times evidently spares no pains or expense in getting up good things for its readers.

At W. McTaggart sale last week, conducted by Mr. D. Cavin, who by the way is a terror to get bids from the crowd, stock, as usual, went high, milk cows averaging well over the $100. steers rising three, $110 each, heifers rising two $79 each, sow and litter $95, but horses scarcely got a bid. Implements went cheap considering the high prices asked by dealers for new articles.

Arran taxes are high enough to growl about this year, being within a fraction of $10 on the 1000 higher than last year. Maybe the council men had better skip before nomination day, cause there's no use trying to explain how it was.

At the young people's meeting on Wednesday night October 17, altho' not a great number were present officers for the Literary Society were elected as follows:—President, Arthur Burgess; Vice President, Olive Ferguson; Secy. Treas., Nora Cunningham; Convener of Debate Com., Will Cheesman; Convener of Program Com., Coral MacIver. It was decided to hold the first meeting on November 14th.

Malc. Campbell Ends Life

A week ago Monday, Malcolm Campbell, a man about fifty years of age, living on the 2nd of Bruce went away from home, and did not return. On Tuesday a search was begun by neighbors, but no trace was found, until Saturday, when Reuben Wittig, while strolling through the bush, found the unfortunate man hanging to a limb, and quite dead.

Coroner Ferguson was at once summoned and the body taken down.

Deceased man had not been well for some time, and his illness had affected his mind.

Much sympathy is felt for the bereaved mother and sister in their sad bereavement.

The funeral took place on Tuesday afternoon Nov. 6th, to Tiverton cemetery.

Corrections in List of Red Cross Contributions

Treasurer Strathers has furnished The Times with some corrections regarding the list of contributors to Port Elgin Red Cross Canvass.

Mr. George Carlie's name, who gave $5, was omitted

Mrs. McIntyre was credited with 15c. This should have read $1.

Hugh McLaren credited with $2, Mr. McLaren has been for some time contributing $5 monthly to Red Cross, and is still keeping that up. Mr. McLaren's name should not appear in this list.

George MacCallum, should have read John MacCallum.

Geo. Brill $1 omitted.

Needs a Flashlight To See Small Children

Clerk Geddes sprung a good one at the council meeting on Friday night.

The reeve and council were discussing the reading of the water meters at the Stevens-Hepner Works, and Supervisor Fisher reported that he could not read one of them because it was dangerous to take anything but a flashlight into the place where the meter was situated, and thought the council should provide him with a proper light.

Clerk Geddes ventured to say that the town constable "needed a flashlight to see some of the children which were allowed on the street till ten o'clock and and after—they were so small."

The supervisor was instructed to get a flashlight.

A. C. Fawcett is away deer hunting.

Tax collector Chapman reports the taxes are coming in better than usual. Up to Friday night last there were $2000 to be paid in. More people took advantage of the discount this year than last. The total taxes amount to about $17,000

What Will Canada's Answer Be?

OVER in the sodden trenches amid the bursting shells and the roar of artillery where Canada's boys are fighting and dying.

—they are waiting for Canada's answer when the sale of Victory Bonds begins.

CANADA'S soldiers expect that we at home will put up the millions they need to keep on fighting, —the millions they must have to win Victory for freedom, home and Canada.

What answer will Canada make?

What answer will you make?

Shall it be said that Canada spares not her sons from the sacrifice of battle, yet withholds her dollars to give them victory?

Rather will it be said that Canada once more, for the fourth time in three years, cheerfully puts up her millions upon millions for the cause of freedom, righteousness and justice.

Canada's answer must be,

—that the Canadian hand to the plow of Victory holds steadfast and firm.

—that Canada is in deadly earnest when she says the "last man and the last dollar."

That is the answer Canada will give to our boys in the trenches, our kinsmen in Britian, and our Allies everywhere.

That is the answer we will give to the Huns who thought and said that Canada would desert the Empire before she would fight or pay.

Every bond you buy is an answer. Let the millions of answers from Canada's loyal men and women make a chorus of Victory to ring around the world.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson VI., November 11, 1917.

Nehemiah's Prayer.--Nehemiah 1. 1-11.

Commentary.—I. A disheartening report from Judah (vs. 1-3). 1. Words—History."—R. V. margin. Nehemiah the son of Hachaliah—He is thus distinguished from the Nehemiah who accompanied Zerubbabel upon the first return from captivity (Ezra 2: 2), and from the Nehemiah who assisted in rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem (Neh. 3. 16). It is not known to what tribe he belonged, but from v. 2 and Neh. 2. 3, it is thought he was of the tribe of Judah. He was a man a man of deep devotion, a man of prayer and a man of deeds. Chisleu—The ninth month of the Jewish year, corresponding to the latter part of November and the first part of December. Twentieth year—The twentieth year of the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus, king of Persia. Ezra had gone with his company from Babylon to Jerusalem thirteen years before this. Shushan—Two hundred and fifty miles east of Babylon. It was one of the three capitals of Persia, and the favorite winter residence of the king. Palace—Nehemiah, as an officer in the king's court, performed the duties of his office in the palace. The magnificence of this building is shown by the fact that its ruins, discovered many years ago, cover about three thousand square feet. 2. Hanani—From Neh. 7. 2 it appears that Hanani was a brother of Nehemiah, which is probable, yet the term "brother" is used in the scriptures to denote other near relatives. Men of Judah—"Out of Judah."—R. V. Some who had returned from Judah. Had escaped—This has reference to those who had gone to Jerusalem from the captivity in Babylon. Left of the captivity—Those who had returned from the captivity had survived the hardships of the restoration. Concerning Jerusalem—Nehemiah desired to know how his people were succeeding in their own land in the restoration of the nation. The fact that he held an honorable position in the royal palace did not keep him from being solicitous for the prosperity of his fellow Jews in Jerusalem. 3. Province—One of the provinces of the great Persian empire was a heavy burden; again, the country was being repeatedly devastated by enemies, property being destroyed and the inhabitants slain or enslaved. The stand which the Jews had taken in refusing their neighbors the privilege of joining with them for the purpose of building the house of the Lord, and in breaking up the practise of intermarriage of the Jews with outside nations, had exposed the Jews to the hostile attacks of other peoples. The wall...is broken down—After the destruction of the walls by Nebuchadnezzar one hundred and forty years before, it was partly rebuilt by Ezra. The enemies of the Jews had destroyed the walls and gates of Jerusalem, thus rendering the city virtually unprotected.

II. An earnest prayer (vs. 4-11). 4. wept, and mourned—Nehemiah's intense interest in the welfare of his own nation moved him to weep and lament when he heard of their affliction. We remember that the Oriental is of an excitable disposition, and quickly affected by joy or sorrow; but the language here indicates that Nehemiah's sadness was not a mere passing emotion, but continued for days and months, and led him to self-denial and prolonged activity. fasted, and prayed—Nehemiah has set the world an example of prayer in times of distress. He fasted and prayed until his course of duty became clear. His fasting and praying lasted for four months. God of heaven—This is a title used by the Persians for the supreme being. 5. beseech—A word denoting intensity of supplication. Lord God of heaven—"Jehovah" denotes the self-existing One; "God," the invisible One. great and terrible—Expresses his greatness and power. covenant and mercy—The faithfulness of God in keeping his promises is declared by Nehemiah, as well as his love in showing mercy. 6. let thine ear now be attentive—Nehemiah approached the Lord as a true suppliant. He was convinced of God's greatness; he came with humility; he begged for a hearing; and he had an important petition to make. day and night—This expression shows his earnestness and importunity. —both I and my father's house have sinned—The suppliant made genuine confession of sin. He had no disposition to spare himself. He acknowledged that the responsibility for national sins rested upon individuals and families, and that the deplorable condition of the nation existed because of their sin. 7. corruptly—Among other things the Jews were guilty of oppression (Neh. 5. 1-7, 10, 11), the desecration of the Sabbath (Neh. 13. 15), and intermarriage with heathen nations (Ezra 9: 2). commandments—Divine precepts to govern the life. statutes—Rites relating to the Jewish religious system. judgments—Judicial decisions in respect to sin and righteousness. 8. Remember...the word—Nehemiah pleaded God's promises in his prayer. If ye transgress—Reference is made to the thoughts contained in such passages as Lev. 26: 33-45 and Deut. 28: 45-58, 62-67. 9. Questions.—How long after Ezra's journey to Jerusalem was this lesson? Where did Nehemiah live? How was he affected? Why was he thus affected? What was the condition of those in Jerusalem? How did Nehemiah pray for his people? What office did he hold? Who was king at this time? How was Nehemiah's position an advantage to him?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—True Patriotism.

I. Involved personal sacrifice.

II. Sought guidance through prayer.

I. Involved personal sacrifice. This lesson records an event, apparently trifling, which led to results of great magnitude. It contains a summons of the most unexpected character which Nehemiah recognized as the divine call, and which involved great sacrifice and prompt obedience. Nehemiah was a large-hearted, sympathetic man. He entirely disregarded his own comfortable prosperity, in contemplating the adversity of his people. To him their suffering was his misfortune. Nehemiah was humble amidst the vanities of the palace, pure amidst the luxuries, faithful in his Jewish faith and to his God amidst its heathenism, sympathetic amidst its conventionalities, prayerful amidst its levity, pious amidst its anxieties. With an earnest desire to work for God, Nehemiah first sought to gain accurate information from a reliable source concerning his nation, both as to the need that existed and the nature of the work that needed to be done. As a man, as a brother, as a servant of the living God, Nehemiah was bound to feel the deepest concern in the welfare of his nation. Outward conditions of national existence stood in the clearest connection with the religious life of the people. Nehemiah was impressed with a sense of his obligation to them at the cost of self-denial, property and peril to himself.

II. Sought guidance through prayer. Nehemiah's power to help his country was not so much in his rank or in his influence with royalty as in his power to pray. He expressed his reverence and confidence in approaching God on behalf of his people. There was earnestness and importunity in his prayers, together with humble confessions, powerful pleadings and particular request. He pleaded his dependence upon divine aid in the responsibilities of the enterprise he hoped to undertake. He uttered a powerful plea for a declining, divided, persecuted church. He dwelt upon God's relation to his people which he had established. His was an earnest to God's love, his regard, his pity, and his past mercies in behalf of his chosen people. His whole being was engaged in his devotion as he looked to the only source of comfort. He pleaded God's promises and reverently affirmed that they for whom he was making intercession were included in those promises. Such prayer was the inspiration and evidence of his true patriotism. His prayer was reverent in its attitude toward God, persistent in pressing its suit, scriptural in its argument, childlike in spirit, definite in its aim. Nehemiah was burdened with a single great desire. He felt that relief must come through God. There was no selfishness in his prayer. Nehemiah mentioned the aggravated sins of Israel, committed against God, against specific commandments, statutes and judgments. He took upon himself the burden of his country's sins. He sought divine assistance in presenting his plan to the king. In Nehemiah's unusual act of asking the king for leave of absence he might risk the royal displeasure. That he should wish to exchange Shushan for Jerusalem might be viewed as an insult. If his request was granted, he would have to sacrifice all the luxury and ease of his position and subject himself to toil and danger. He would have to endure an arduous journey. When there he would have to confront the hostility of the surrounding tribes and act in the capacity of a soldier. All such sacrifices he was ready to make. There was peril in the look of anguish which he could not conceal, for no token of grief was allowed in the royal presence. It was not his purpose to break away from his connection with Persia. He wanted to enlist the king in the cause so near to his own heart. Israel was a sacred nation, representing and embodying the kingdom of God on earth. God had made the palace of a heathen monarch a place of training in the principles of government. There Nehemiah was prepared ... his people until ... the providence to go to Jerusalem. Nehemiah relied upon God to ... his appointment to his mission.

Spiking the Guns.

The expression "spiking guns" is a survival from the days when all that was necessary to put a gun out of action ... provided, of course, that you had ... was a large nail or spike and a hammer. You simply drove the nail into the touch hole at the breech. If the nail was long enough to turn ... at the end on the bottom of the ... so much the better. It is just as simple, perhaps simpler, to put a modern gun out of action. All you want is a hammer. The breech-block of the modern gun is held closed by screw threads. After the breech block is shut on the click a turn of two or three inches engages the threads. By knocking a bur on these threads you prevent them engaging. Any attempt to fire the gun without the breech block being perfectly closed would, of course, be of material assistance to the enemy.

HYDRAULIC RAM FOR FARM WATER SUPPLY

Principle of Hydraulic Rams---How to Determine Daily Capacity

--By Thomas Stansfield

There are, no doubt, many people in our rural districts and farms who have heard of that very useful and inexpensive machine, the hydraulic or water ram; but how many are there who really understand the principle upon which these rams operate? I venture to say very few; otherwise the hydraulic ram would be more frequently in operation where water flows are available, or where lakes or ponds are located and a slightly higher elevation than where a ram could be placed.

The principle of the hydraulic ram may be briefly explained as follows:

A quantity of water situated at a higher level is piped down to the ram. By the sudden opening and closing of certain valves and by confining air in a vessel, a cushion of air is compressed, and alternately released, causing the air to contract at certain periods and then to expand. The latter operation forces the water, or some part of it, to a higher level than its source. The accompanying illustrations will be of value to those who are interested in the subject.

Suppose a pipe were conveying water from its source to a lower level, and a valve in the pipe line were to be suddenly closed, what is known as a water hammer would be set up, that is, an impact or blow would result, and under certain conditions it would be quite possible to burst the pipe. Now the power thus suddenly exerted in the case of the sudden closing of the valve, is in the case of the hydraulic ram, utilized to lift the water or some of it to a higher level.

There are certain conditions to be taken into consideration in using a hydraulic ram.

First. A fairly large volume of water is required, as a rule not less than 2 feet of a head, although in certain cases where the quantity of water is almost unlimited a ram can be made to work under a head of 18 inches. Second. The distance between the ram and the source of water, and third the height to which the water is to be lifted, or if the water has to be forced into a pneumatic tank, then the pressure required in the tank has to be very carefully calculated.

Fig 1 is a sectional view of an ordinary hydraulic ram, showing the principle upon which such rams nearly always operate. A is the drive pipe, or pipe which conveys the water from the source of power to the ram. The term "drive pipe" is given to this portion of a ram because of the fact that water flowing through this pipe "drives" the ram. E is the supply pipe to the cistern or other source of storage up which the water is to be raised.

The operation of the ram is as follows: The water enters the drive pipe A and at first flows through valve B until the flow becomes sufficiently powerful to force the valve B upwards and closing it suddenly.

This sudden closing results in a pressure being exerted upon valve D opening same. The water thus arrested in its flow towards it rises up into the air chamber C and confines the air in the upper part of the chamber. As soon as a force has been exerted against the compressed air equivalent to the pressure in the drive pipe and against valve B, valve D closes and the compressed air in the air chamber C forces the water up through the supply pipe E.

The moment the water is thus forced up the supply pipe, the operation is repeated. The sudden closing of valve B creates a slight vacuum caused by the recoil, which recoil is taken advantage of to keep up the supply in the air chamber C, which would otherwise become filled with water. This slight vacuum operates the small snift or air supply valve air, which is then forced into the air chamber C at each stroke or pulsation of the ram.

The air being elastic and compressible, it is possible to keep a steady flow of water running through the supply pipe.

A drive pipe should be capable of conveying at least three times the amount of water required for domestic purposes, and a delivery pipe should not be less than half the diameter of the drive pipe. The accompanying table will be found useful in computing pipe sizes.

Relative Sizes for Drive and Delivery Pipes

Drive pipe	Delivery pipe for short distances	Delivery pipe for over 1-4 mile
1 inch	3-4 inch	1-2 inch
1 1-2 inch	1-2 inch	3-4 inch
2 inches	3-4 inch	1 inch
3 inches	1 1-4 inch	1 1-2 inch
4 inches	1 1-2 inch	2 inches
6 inches	2 1-2 inches	3 inches

In the first place it is always well to know the exact volume of water at the disposal of the ram. Many a ram has been installed and the supply of water has failed soon after it has been put in operation. Fig. 3 shows how the volume of water can be gauged if the supply is small and can be dammed up with a board or some other method. By using a bucket and a watch, to find out how much water will flow through the pipe or hole in the board per minute. The hole should be the same size as the pipe necessary for a pipe drive.

A stick should be driven into the bed of the stream and marked so as to make sure that the water does not decrease in height to any appreciable degree. If the water level does fall to any great extent, it shows that the supply would soon run out unless replenished by rain.

When the stream or spring from which water is to be procured is less than one-quarter of a mile distant, the ram may be installed as shown in Fig. F., viz., direct from the stream to the ram. But when it is necessary to place the ram at a greater distance from the stream it is well to install a stand pipe made of a larger sized pipe than the drive pipe. For example, if a 2-inch drive pipe is necessary, a 3-inch stand pipe would be advisable.

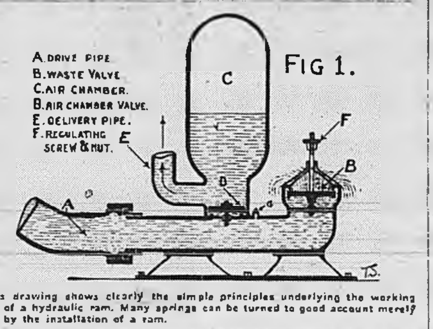
To determine the location of the ram, the information may be procured in the following manner: Turn to Fig. 2 and let us suppose that a 1 1-2 inch pipe is used to fill a 3-gallon pail and that is is filled in 15 seconds. That would mean that 12 gallons of water per minute had flowed through the pipe. We will suppose there is 3 feet of fall from the high water mark to where the water enters the ram (see figs. 4 and 5) and that the water has to be raised to a cistern 30 feet higher tha nthe ram.

Multiply 12 gallons by 3 feet and again multiply the result (36) by 40, and divide this result (1440) by 30, the height to which the water has to be raised. This gives us 48. Multiply this figure by 24, and we have the number of gallons of water that the ram will deliver to the cistern every 24 hours.

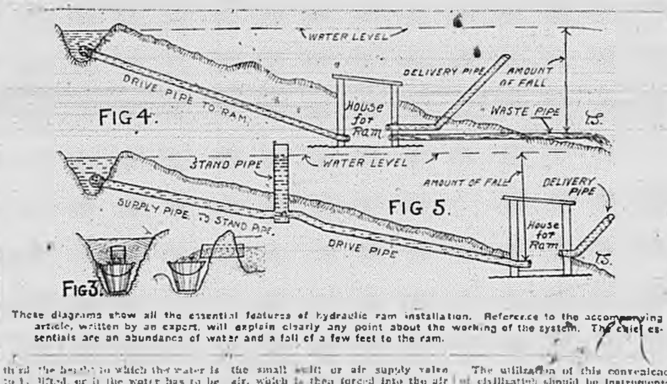
The above rule can be followed and results will be found to be approximately correct.

Without mentioning the figures as given above, the plain rule is as follows: Multiply the number of gallons per minute available for supplying the ram by the number of feet fall. Multiply this amount by 40, and then divide by the height in feet to which the water is to be delivered. Multiply this amount by 24, and the result will be the number of gallons delivered per days of 24 hours. It will thus be seen from the foregoing that the hydraulic ram constitutes a simple and inexpensive method of raising water wherever a flow of water with any appreciable downward grade exists. The steeper the grade with volume, of course, the more efficient will be the ram.

The utilization of this convenience of civilization should be instrumental in many cases in providing a country dwelling, or even a community, with a sanitary system and water service. There is less chance of the water becoming polluted if pure at its source than is the case with a well. The latter may become fouled by the very sewage disposal system in connection with the residence, because of the fact that the well would be lower generally than the sewage disposal system.—Canadian Countryman.



This drawing shows clearly the simple principles underlying the working of a hydraulic ram. Many springs can be turned to good account merely by the installation of a ram.



These diagrams show all the essential features of hydraulic ram installation. Reference to the accompanying article, written by an expert, will explain clearly any point about the working of the system. The chief essentials are an abundance of water and a fall of a few feet to the ram.

SUNDAY AT HOME

LEAD US.

Father of love, our guide and friend,
  Oh, lead us gently on,
Until life's trial time shall end,
  And heavenly peace be won!
We know not what the path may be,
  As yet by us untrod;
But we can trust our all to Thee,
  Our Father and our God.

—William Henry Trout.

Keep yourselves in the love of God. Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. I am the vine, ye are the branches. He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit, for without me ye can do nothing.

The fruit of the Spirit is love.

Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples. As the Father has loved me, so have I loved you; continue ye in my love. If you keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments and abideth in his love.—Who so keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected.

This is my commandment. That ye love one another, as I have loved you.—God commandeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.—God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him.

MAN.

Man was made in the image of God, made a little lower than the angels. His body is from the earth, his soul is from heaven. He is limited and free, he is distinct; he is not another, he builds his character, he has a course, he has an end. He gathers, he reaps, by himself; he thinks alone, he dies alone, confronts the Day of Judgment alone. In marriage two persons become one flesh, but not one spirit; the marriage compact is for earth, not for the Grand Review, not for Eternity.

Man is a receiver. "What hast thou that thou hast not received?" His is the perogative of welcome, of refusal, of building. "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he." Man is a tower, stands erect; air comes, light shines, perfume floats, vibrations touch, and he responds. He is a man of action, but this is not first, he is a man of thought. What is thought? It is a visitor. It comes like the wind to the sail, it comes for admission, a rejection, for adoption, or to be cast out. Here is the true workshop. The whole man is never seen in things, the harvest of thought is never gathered here. Take a single day. Your thoughts are many, your works are few, your results are small. But, oh! the fruit that's never brought to market, yet it is securely stored, in cold storage, deep down in sub-conscious caverns, and when the caverns are taken off, what a cargo on the wharf! What sorting, dividing, weighing, apportioning!

You pass a man on the street, and your thought is black, another passes the man, and the thought is white. One thought is indifferent, cold, dead; the other is a prayer, a pity, a tear. An impure thought comes to one and is welcomed; it comes to another and is rejected. It all depends upon the quality of the welcome. If Christ is in you there will be a standard of values and a prompt decision. Some men are moral and pursue a lawful callings. When the invitation is pressing and urgent there is a polite excuse. They are busy buying land, or oxen, or getting married. All lawful callings, but improperly treated. The Master invites, and you say no. He goes away. He may never return. The thought has done its work, and cast the dice of destiny.

The garment of the bride is of fine needlework. The mind of the Master is exceedingly delicate and refined. "In some chemical processes they employ balances adjusted with such nicety that an almost imperceptible weight cause them to turn. You may put, say, two cards upon the scales and find the balance exact; if now, you will write a single word upon one of the cards, the mere weight of the ink wherewith the word is written will make that side go down. The fact may stand as a symbol of what may easily happen in the inner condition of man. When, as we think, the heart and mind lie passive, evenly balanced, with no particular dip towards the side either of right or wrong, the faintest touch upon either scale (a touch perhaps unnoticed by ourselves) will leave its permanent effect. Safety, then, lies in this alone, in throwing positively and consciously upon the side of right all the weight we can. Even thought must be controlled, since thought, no less than action, must bear its inevitable fruit."

"Guard well thy thoughts,
Thy thoughts are heard in heaven."

Through Many Trials

CHAPTER XXII.

Imogene thinks often of Miriam Lilly's words, "I shall not see you again for a long time," during the weeks that follow her visit to London, whither she goes to attend Evelyn's wedding, the quietest and gentlest of fair, pale, gray-eyed bride-maidens to the most blooming and brilliant of brides—Evelyn, Lady Petherick—as she steps down from the altar that has heard her newly-spoken vows before Heaven and "the sight of this congregation," is just as charmingly arrogant and as proudly self-conscious and self-possessed a beauty as ever Evelyn Trefusis had been.

She is an utter bewilderment to Imogene, perplexing and confounding all the girlish romance, the delicate roseate imaginings, and the intense, half-sad, half-joyful sentiments which the very name of a bride conjure up in maidenly fancies. She is ashamed of her own emotions and her tender enthusiasm before Evelyn's unruffled bearing, her dainty cynicism, her careful egoism and vanity, which makes herself the be-all and end-all of everything, the central figure in the drama, around which all of importance and interest settles, the bridegroom and future husband being merely an accessory to herself, her beauty and elegance.

Poor Imogene tries very hard at first to even conjure up some romantic interest in Sir William Petherick as Evelyn's husband, although the idea of cultivating a sisterly affection for the elderly, surly, pompous man appalls her by its utter futility.

But ere the lovely young bride and her gray-haired bridegroom have departed on their honeymoon travels—your hymen of these latter days scorns rural retirement and sylvan seclusion—to Paris, Trouville, and later on to Switzerland and the Tyrol, Imogene discovers that Sir William as little expects or desires that his young wife's sister shall feel any special regard for him as does his young wife herself.

But this is all a long time, a very long time ago, it seems to Imogene, as she sits, thinking deeply in the bow window of Lady Petherick's sitting-room in Sir William's house in Kensington, watching the yellow leaves flutter softly down in the crisp freshness of the bright October morning.

She had been more than two months—nine weeks—from home. Her life in gray old Portdreath on the Cornish coast seems to have receded into the past—with her childhood and pleasant old days of childish joys, and troubles, and hopes, and fears.

They have all gone—quite gone, receded forever before the tide of changes that have come into her life since the cold spring evening when Richard Dumaresq first entered Portdreath. Life has never been quite the same since that hour.

Yet she would not, if she could, bring the old days back again. Richard Dumaresq was not in the old days, and Imogene shrinks from acknowledging, even to herself, what Richard Dumaresq has become to her in the days of her present life—this life in her sister's splendid home, luxurious, easy, indulgent, but not a happy, healthy, pleasant life.

Her sister's mercenary marriage is a horror to her. Imogene's eyes have been opened in these two months; one spent alone with her aunt Althea, and the next with Sir William and Lady Petherick on their return from Switzerland.

Lady Althea has gone back to Portdreath, but Imogene, by her sister's special request, is "to stay a while," as Evelyn vaguely puts it. And again Imogene often recalls her own words of premonition to Dick Dumaresq on that day in the garden of Portdreath:

"I shall dread Evelyn as much as Aunt Althea!"

Her words have come too true. She has begun to dread her sister, whose beauty and grace—now more evident than ever, heightened and set off by all that wealth can devise—have almost as much fascination for her as for the numerous admirers that begin to gather about the lovely Lady Petherick.

Imogene's eyes have been effectually opened, and she knows now what Evelyn has done—that she has sold herself to Sir William Petherick for so much money, as surely as if he were a trader in flesh and blood, and bought her in a market-place.

Ever since that golden evening time when she had had that strangely sudden meeting with Richard Dumaresq in the hazel walk; ever since the hour of that passionate lover's parting, which she has cherished to dream over in lone, silent hours, Imogene has seemed to know what a loveless marriage must mean.

Evelyn's ample settlement, her unexceptionable establishment, her excellent position—as Imogene has heard Lady Althea sum them up a score of times with stately self-gratulation—are all a horror to Evelyn's sister.

They can be nothing else than a horror to the high-souled, passionate, imaginative girl, when she shudderingly thinks of Sir William Petherick as a lover, in contrast to Richard Dumaresq.

She is tired of London; she has almost told Evelyn so, and spoken of returning to Cornwall repeatedly, only to have her intentions calmly put aside, ridiculed, or rebuked.

Only last evening she has been sharply rebuked and reproached by Evelyn for wishing to leave her.

"When you know I want you for a companion—some one I can trust and talk to," the bride of three months says, angrily: "when you know I counted on having you with me when I married!"

"But—not to stay always!" Imogene exclaims, in dismay. "I could not stay in London always, Evie!"

Her old home, on the shore of the western sea, seems unutterably dear to her when she is threatened with severance from it, and besides all—below all—above all—is the whispered memory echoing through every chamber of her heart and brain—written in letters of fire on the tablets of her mind, pressed in with those quick, burning kisses.

"I will come again to you, if it were in twenty years! I will come again to you, living or dead!" Portdreath is ten times dearer to her than ever since that hour; it is the home of her fancies and dreams, and sweet, sweet hopes; for the fond, lonely young heart has surrendered itself wholly to the secret love that is hidden deep and quiet in her maiden soul.

"All the current of her being" sets toward him, the man, her lover, who has first made her know what love is.

Never seeing him, never speaking of him, never hearing his name even mentioned—for Lady Althea haughtily tabooed any allusion to "that person"—Imogene thinks there is little danger of any one discovering that Richard Dumaresq has confessed a passionate love for her—that Richard Dumaresq is all the world to her. It is his secret and hers, hidden and sacred, even if they meet no more for weary long years.

She can live on the sweetness of the hidden knowledge and the memory of the parting in the hazel walk; she forgets that a man's love craves more sustenance than a sweet, sad memory, and yearning desperately for a sight of her or a sound of her voice, it will go hard with him, but he will make the opportunity to enjoy both. Even as she sits there by the open window, in the clear, bright autumn morning, watching with sorrowful eyes the yellowing leaves fluttering down from the trees in the planted crescent opposite, Richard Dumaresq, a little way off, is standing, looking at her.

He has been there for nearly half an hour, pretending to read a newspaper, seated in the shadow of the boughs of a copper-beech which overhangs the sidewalk, and ceaselessly watching the house which he has discovered to be Sir William Petherick's, in the hope, for which he chides himself, of seeing Imogene's face. He has learned that she is in town, and since he came to the knowledge, more than three weeks ago, he has been trying vainly, almost daily, to catch a glimpse of her—more than this he will not suffer himself to hope for or expect.

At last his patience is rewarded—he sees her at the open window, like a young white rose—his fair, pale darling, with her sweet, serious, and her proud, tender mouth, and her soft, hazel-brown hair, rippling and curling over her brow and temples, as in his first pleasant memory of her as the angel of gloomy Portdreath. He has a lorgnette with him, and uses it for a moment, to be sure that his longing gaze has not deceived him—that it is Imogene herself; and the powerful glass has shown him every outline and detail of the fair, thoughtful face, and the pose of her figure, leaning a little wearily against the window curtain, as she gazes out wistfully.

"She does not look so happy and bright as she used to look," he thinks, and just as he thinks it Imogene's eyes fall on him, at first with transient curiosity, then with a shock of terrified delight that makes her shrink out of his sight altogether for a moment or two.

Then she comes to the window again, flushed and radiant, but dreadfully frightened at herself and at him—at his daring pursuit of her, at her own wicked, clandestine behavior, as she deems it, in being so glad, so wildly, tremblingly glad, to see him again that she dares even to make a signal to him.

It is the merest gesture of salutation from her little white hand; but he instantly perceives it, and takes his hat off, standing with the sunshine on his crisp, close-cut brown hair, bareheaded before her, until she flutters her hand entreatingly toward him once more; and then Imogene, feeling herself an intriguante of the deepest dye, a wicked, forward Juliet of the nineteenth century, sinks back behind the friendly curtain again, in a fever of smiles and blushes; but ere they can fade, Lady Petherick, attired in hat and habit for her matutinal canter, enters the room.

And instantly she perceives the unwonted flush and sparkle in her sister's face.

"What is the matter?" she asks brusquely. "You look as if you were delighted about something! What is it?"

"Do I?" Imogene asks, calmly, in spite of the tints of her glowing face and cheeks, and the liquid brilliance of her great, dark eyes, shadowy and sparkling like veiled jewels.

"Yes," Lady Petherick says, languidly, "you do," moving to the window swiftly as she speaks, but apparently intent on the buttoning of her glove.

Forever on the alert, in suspiciousness, as becomes a woman of the world—worldly—her thoughts at once connect the girl's unconcealable emotion with the presence of a lover.

And intent on the buttoning of her tightly-fitting glove on her tiny hand, she remains close to the window curtain, until hand and glove are the perfection of size and fit and shape, and then she raises her languid-white eyelids with a half yawn, and gazes out sleepily at the trees and sky, never at the pavement, although she is quite aware that there is a man's figure in the shadow of the copper-beech, some fifty or sixty yards away.

Then, just as she turns away, by the merest shifting of her glance, as it were, she looks straight toward the muscular, tall figure under the drooping branches of the beech.

She looks but a moment or two, and then she turns sharply away, Imogene noticing with some surprise, how oddly pale and hard Evelyn's blooming, soft face looks just now, and how tightly her lips are closed.

"Are you not well, Evie?" she asked, hurriedly.

A fierce flash, almost a glare, of Evelyn's dark eyes answers her.

"No," she says, curtly and indistinctly; "I am not! I have a shocking headache. I am going out to ride it off. Good-by!"

There was a curious rending sound as she had turned from the window, and Imogene, moving the lace curtains to adjust them better, discovers with surprise that the one by which Lady Petherick stood is badly torn, and hangs limply in a great loop, rent away from the hooks and rings above.

"Why, Evelyn must have stood on it, or torn it in holding it back!" Imogene thinks, innocently, in great concern for the damage to the beautiful, clear, Swiss muslin curtains.

And then, as she hears the horses' hoofs moving off below, she takes heart of grace to look out boldly.

But there is no one beneath the copper-beech now; there is no sign of him as far as she can see, which is, indeed, but to the curve of the crescent around which Evelyn is cantering swiftly now, for there is a swiftly walking figure some distance ahead of her; but she overtakes him soon; and almost as soon as he hears the thud of the horses' hoofs on the moist, newly-sanded road, she is beside him, reining up her pretty bay mare, and bending from her saddle toward him with a gracious smile.

"Mr. Dumaresq, have you forgotten me?" she asks, sweetly, and Dick only answers truthfully when he says, bowing to her:

"That would be impossible, Lady Petherick; but I should certainly have thought you had forgotten me. I never had the pleasure of seeing you as Miss Trefusis more than once or twice."

"Very likely!" Evelyn smiles, in a sweetly cordial manner that reminds him of Imogene, "but I seem to know you quite well! I have heard so much of you from Lionel, to begin with! you were so kind and good a friend to my poor brother!"—this in a soft, grateful tone—"and then I have met your cousin, Captain Dumaresq, a good deal you know."

"Yes?" Dick says, questioningly, flushing and frowning slightly, and as she sees he is embarrassed and excited she pursues her advantage.

"Yes," she says, nodding her head with a pretty, confidential gesture, "I know he has not been altogether the friend to you that he ought to have been; he has made some grievous mistakes, and behaved very foolishly altogether, I am sorry to say! But I take a great interest in him—we are quite old friends, you know," with a pensive little smile and sigh; "but I am quite aware he has wronged you in various ways—quite aware," she repeats, impressively; "and I believe I may say he is deeply, truly sorry for the past—I hope I may say so. He wants to be reconciled to you now, and to ask your forgiveness; that, I know, your noble nature will not withhold from him," Evelyn says, with kindling brilliance and deepening bloom of cheeks and eyes, as she stoops nearer to him and softens her voice into accents of almost tender persuasiveness. "I know what you have been to him in the past—the best of friends, kindest of adopted brothers! I know he has behaved cruelly, shamefully, let us say; but he was tried and tempted—poor Richard!"

Dumaresq starts and flushes like a schoolboy, under the absurd impression that Evelyn, Lady Petherick, has addressed him in those sweet, caressing tones, and she sees what his mistake has been. But she only smiles, smiles softly, kindly, a slow, sweet, languorous smile, looking straight into his bold, bright eyes, which involuntarily droop before hers.

"Poor fellow!" she repeats, softly, and with a tremor in her voice, "he was my lover, and unhappy; let that plead for him!"

The filmy little white handkerchief out of the saddle-pocket covers Evelyn's beautiful eyes for a moment, and Richard Dumaresq softens—softens like wax in her fair, adroit hands, and he draws nearer to her, laying his hand on her mare's glossy neck, and listens to all she has to say to him—listens gratefully, gladly, eagerly, until at length he sees all things possible through the silvery persuasiveness of Evelyn's sweet voice.

"I could do no less than sunder every tie of acquaintanceship between us when I believed him guilty of such cold-blooded treachery to me, could I?" he asked, agitatedly. "I never wished to look on his face again. He was just to me as if he had died, for I never could trust him again—I never can, Lady Petherick!"

"Perhaps not quite," she says, sorrowfully; "but you can pity him and forgive him, and be reconciled to him at least, even if you and the poor old viscount are to be separated through him!"

"Poor old man!" Dick mutters, hoarsely. "I wish to Heaven I could forget his last merciless words and his scornful look! I wish I had a pleasanter memory of him than his unjust anger, for I deserved no blame in the matter of that forged telegram."

"Ah, yes," Lady Petherick says, drawing a deep breath, "we must sift that matter out thoroughly also! Yes, we must! I must, if you won't. I think you have been wronged cruelly by everybody—and—and I cannot bear to think of it; my father has wronged you by believing slanderous stories of you. I cannot even understand," Lady Petherick says, with an air of perplexity, "why papa need have acted on any unfriendly or untrue suggestions. It is quite a mystery, as, of course, my father could have had no personal reason for behaving badly to you."

"Then the old man never betrayed the truth," Dumaresq thinks, puzzled, but relieved so that he can control himself enough to ask with perfect calmness for news of Imogene and Lionel.

"They are quite well, thanks, both of them," Lady Petherick says frankly and brightly; there is not a shadow of arriere pensee in her voice or eyes as she continues: "Dear Minnie has been staying with me for a few weeks, but she goes home on Saturday next. I wish you could see her when you come to dinner on Tuesday next, as you have promised, mind! But she can't or won't stay an hour longer with me; she is longing to get home, to be among the rocks and the seagulls—the little wild Cornish girl!"

Lady Petherick laughs, and then instantly subdues her face with a sudden, almost tearful gravity.

"Speaking of that, Mr. Dumaresq, do you think," she asks, quite passionately, in her strong emotion, "that I have forgotten, if my father has, that we must, we ought to regard you as the best of friends through all our lives? You saved our Imogene from a terrible death! Oh, yes, I heard it all—you need not say a word; you would not do yourself justice."

She presses his hand closely and warmly, with quite sisterly affection.

"Mind, remember Tuesday, and come early," she says, smilingly. "Adieu!"

And she canters off lightly once more, leaving Dick Dumaresq absolutely overwhelmed with astonishment, gratitude and admiration. How he had wronged her—how [illegible] and wicked hasty judgments [illegible]!

Impulsive, generous, womanly, kind-hearted as ever sweet Imogene, was this beautiful, brilliant sister of hers, whom neither rank, riches nor prosperity can warp the nobleness of her large-souled nature!

SICK WOMAN HAD CRYING SPELLS

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Enhaut, Pa.—"I was all run down and weak inwardly. I had female trouble and nervous feelings and my head bothered me. I would often have crying spells and feel as if I was not safe. If I heard anyone coming I would run and lock the door so they would not see me. I tried several doctors and they did not help me so I said to my mother 'I guess I will have to die as there is no help for me.' She got me one of your little books and my husband said I should try one bottle. I stopped the doctor's medicine and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It soon made a change in me and now I am strong and do all my work."—Mrs. Augustus Baughman, Box 36, Enhaut, Pa.

Why will women continue to suffer day in and day out and drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

CUTICURA HEALS BAD DISFIGUREMENT

Very Itchy. Burned at Night. Could Scarcely Sleep. Healed in One Week.

"My face became very red and swollen and broke out in watery blisters. Then it got very itchy and used to burn so that at night I could scarcely sleep. Later the blisters broke out forming hard scales, and my face was badly disfigured. Then I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment and in about a week's time I was completely healed." (Signed) Lloyd Brady, Breckenridge, Que., May 25, 1917.

Skin troubles are quickly relieved by Cuticura. The Soap cleanses and purifies, the Ointment soothes and heals.

Bradstreet's Trade Review.

Toronto.—Wholesale trade, generally speaking, is regarded quite satisfactory, and, in a majority of cases, increases were reported over last year. [illegible] in great measure for the large turnover which many wholesalers are able to show. The list of failures is light, and collections are measuring up fairly well. Repeat orders in fall are good [illegible] considerable thus far. The price situation shows no sign of weakness, but wholesalers, while experiencing a large volume of orders for spring delivery, are not as confident with regard to the sort of reception prices for next fall's goods will receive. Retailers are mostly well stocked up. An easier undertone is predominant in the leather trade. The shoe trade is rather dreary, and instead of the price advances that would have been in order, manufacturers have been willing in some cases to make concessions. Retailers are well stocked. Grocery trade is fair.

Montreal.—There has been little change in the general trade situation during the last month. Payments have been well met, and the number of failures and amount of liabilities involved has been small. Distribution of fall and winter goods continues active, and satisfactory results are being secured by travellers on the road with spring samples. The boot and shoe trade is still slow, but prices are holding firm. Groceries are moderately active, but dried fruits are practically unavailable.

Ottawa.—Retail distribution of goods is proving quite satisfactory. Spring orders continue to come in to wholesalers in good volume.

Hamilton.—Seasonable trade has been very fair, in consideration of the rather unfavorable weather recently. The demand for rubbers has been stimulated by rainy weather, but boots and shoes are rather inactive at the high prices. Dry goods are moving out quite well, and spring orders continue very fair. Country trade has been the source of much satisfaction, as high prices for farm products have aided in producing an active turnover of seasonable commodities. The canned goods situation is still unsettled, but record prices are assured. Collections are reported to be fair to good.

Calgary.—The expansion of trade has continued to be steady. All other leading centres in the prairie provinces confirm reports of extensive trade activity.

Vancouver.—Heavier dry goods and clothing has been moving out better. The mining industry is undergoing steady expansion. Labor is busily employed. Agricultural conditions are good.

NERVOUS AILMENTS

Few people realize that nervous ailments, often arise from digestive troubles. The stomach fails, for some reason, to digest food properly. Then the system languishes and the nerves become exhausted in striving to continue their work. Impure blood also causes nerve troubles, but frequently it is in the stomach where the mischief starts. As the nourishment is carried to the nerves by the blood, it will be seen what an important connection exists between the stomach, the nerves and the blood, and how such troubles as nervous headaches, nervous dyspepsia and insomnia may begin.

In such cases relief is easily obtainable by means of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These pills replenish the blood with the food elements on which the nerves thrive; at the same time they exercise a tonic influence on the digestive organs, enabling the system to derive nourishment from the food taken. By this perfectly natural process nervous ills are steadily dispelled by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. If you are suffering from nerves, or require a blood-making tonic, give these pills a fair trial, and see how speedily the best of health will be yours.

You can get these pills through any dealer in medicine, or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Guided By an Unknown Paper

(Corporal H. S. McClure, of the Canadian Infantry, in Dundee People's Journal.)

They can talk as much as they please about their White Ladies, their Mad Majors, and the angels at Mons, but give me the story of Piper McClatchey, of the Canadian Highlanders, and how he guided our Highland lads to victory during the attack on one of the big German positions in front of Lens.

A certain Highland battalion was advancing through the mud and rain to attack this position. They got swallowed up in the thick mist that settled over the ground soon after they left their own trenches. For two hours they floundered about in the muddy waste, getting soaked through and plastered from head to foot with mud, besides running the gauntlet of fearful enemy fire. They were completely lost, and had no more hope of finding themselves than the Kaiser has of winning the war. They might have been anywhere for all they knew. They sent out scouts in different directions, but all to no purpose.

"OH, DINNA YE HEAR IT?"

Then, when hope seemed to have gone from them, and they were squatting in over a foot of mud, trying to find cover from the enemy's fire, one keen-eared man of the Cameron Clan caught the sound of the pipes in the distance. He told his comrades. They only laughed, and sarcastically asked if he could recognize what the piper was playing. He said he could. It was the "March of the Cameron Men." Still his comrades were skeptical.

An officer came along, and the sharp-eared Cameron repeated his story. The officer listened intently, but at first could hear nothing. Then he thought that he could hear something like the pipes. Soon his hope became certainty, and with the soldier who had first heard the strains, the officer undertook to guide the men toward the spot whence the martial music came.

The men set out on what many of them regarded as a wild-goose chase, but as the only alternative was to lie shivering in the mud, subjected to heavy enemy fire, they trudged on without murmuring. By and by they began to be less skeptical, for the strains of the pipes could indeed be heard by all. Soon they rose into loud, swelling, soul-stirring notes, reminding the men of their native glens, making them forget their misery and discomfort, and inspiring them with the determination to conquer or die for Scotland.

THE UNSEEN PIPER.

The surrounding country became more familiar, and in a short time the officers were able to satisfy themselves that they had reached the German position which was the object of their attack. Still, they were in doubt as to the meaning of the pipe strains coming from the heart of the German post. They wondered if by chance they had been forestalled by another Highland regiment and robbed of the honor of taking the trenches.

They didn't think like that for long. Just at that moment a storm of machine-gun fire swept across their front, and the familiar field grey of the German infantry appeared over the parapet. With the strains of the mysterious and unseen piper still thrilling them, the Highlanders sprang to the attack. The Germans offered a stout resistance, but they were no match for the stalwart Highlanders, who soon had the whole position at their mercy.

When the last of the enemy had been driven out the Highlanders began the quest for their unknown guide, whose pipes were still skirling shrilly above the noise of bursting shells. After wandering through a maze of communication trenches they came to their piper, and the mystery was solved. He was Piper McClatchey, of the Canadian Highland Brigade. He had been with the Canadians advancing against Lens from another direction. He got wounded and fell into the hands of the enemy. They took him into their front line trenches, and in the excitement of our new attack they appear to have forgotten all about him.

AN UNACCOUNTABLE IMPULSE.

Just about the time when the battalion I speak of had lost its way hopelessly in the mist and mud McClatchey was seized with an unaccountable desire to play his pipes. He crawled out of the shelter in which the Germans had placed him, and, reaching a shell-hole just by their parapet, he tuned up the pipes, and once started he did not seem able to leave off.

For the life of him, he could not explain the spirit that prompted him to do this, but he was greatly pleased when he heard how the skirl of the pipes had led [illegible] to safety and victory. What makes it all the more remarkable is that, had the Highlanders not been attracted and guided right to the [illegible], they would have found themselves in the morning in a trap for which there would have been no escape except through Bethin of the Gate of Death, for the Germans dominated the hollow in which the Highlanders lay when McClatchey's piping called them away from their danger.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Keep the party fires burning. It shows a fine patriotic spirit, especially while the boys are are giving up their lives to keep the enemy from our shores.

* * *

Some people are so selfish in spirit and so suspicious in nature that they cannot imagine anyone doing a patriotic work except for money. Money is their god. Was it Shakespeare who said, "suspicion always haunts the guilty mind."

* * *

Buying a Victory War Bond will help Canada help you. Canada gets the money to loan to Great Britain and you get the best security in the world and 5½ per cent interest.

* * *

Every man and women should see to it that they have their names in the patriotic list of Canadians who will purchase a war bond. No matter how small the amount be an investor in Canada's Victory Loan.

* * *

While certain men have been asked by the officers of the county organization to canvass for the Dominion War Bonds it is every Canadians' duty to help. Don't wait for the canvassers to call on you. Tell them you want to invest and it will be their duty to see that your name is properly listed at headquarters.

* * *

Those who are prepared to support union government naturally expect that they shall have a voice in the selection of union candidates. Any course which prevents this is liable to provoke discord and undermine unity of effort when it is most needed.—Sir R. L. Borden.

* * *

If some members of the W. C. T. U had only attended the council meeting on Friday night we believe they could have had a curfew by-law passed. A good opportunity was presented when the clerk said that the town constable needed a flashlight to see some of the little children which were allowed to run the streets till after 10 o'clock. It is true that too many small children are roaming the streets at night when they should be in bed. Where are the fathers and mothers on this matter ? Have they no concern ?

* * *

The men who did the trimming of the trees made a fine job of it. The limbs were cut closely, neatly, and were properly painted after. The accounts show that it cost quite a little, but it must be remembered there are many trees in town that they are a great asset to any place, and that it is always a good investment to have them properly looked after. It would be a good move for the council to see that a few more nice maples are planted wherever needed. Each year sees a few trees dying, and if we are to enjoy beautiful trees, they must be cared for.

* * *

The Politicians' Union, holding the fort at Ottawa, is not a national government, but rather a number of politicians of both parties We should have made better progress in and after the war if men had been chosen who were above the political game. However the Politicians' Union is better than politicians without union, and perhaps through this effort we shall profit and progress even to a national government.

The gathering of Liberals at Hamilton pledged themselves to support only those candidates who were chosen by a joint or fusion convention after a conference of Liberals and Conservatives. This will put the two gentlemen from Wiarton who attended meeting from North Bruce, in rather a peculiar position. Unless there is a union convention of Liberals and Conservatives in this riding these two men will not have anyone qualified to demand their support.

Nomination day is November 19, but there is still time for Liberals and Conservatives to get together in selecting a man who is above politics to serve the country during the great crisis as a true unionist. We have been divided all through these recent years, especially these last three years at home, though our boys have been united and side by side—Liberal and Conservative alike—have gloriously upheld the best traditions of the races from which they sprang. The party spirit cannot be buried any other way except by a great gathering of all the people with the country's interest uppermost.

Nomination day is November 19. North Bruce has a Liberal supporting the Union government and also a Conservative doing same thing. Which one will the Union Government acknowledge ? That makes little difference. What is really needed in this constituency is a man actually chosen by the people to represent and to serve them, not to gratify some political ambitions of their own.

Dunblane Patriotic Society Has Fine Social Evening

The home of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Rowand was thrown open to the use of the Dunblane Patriotic Society on Wednesday night last, when a house social was given.

There was a good attendance and about $30 was realized. Rev. Mr. Strachan was chairman, and in his happy way, made the evening enjoyable. The program included songs by Alma Fraser, Mr. McArthur, James Scott, instrumentals by Mary McKechnie, Helen Hamilton, Mrs. Lamont, Miss McIvor, Miss Munro, Miss Christie whistling solo, Miss McDonald, violin music, Messrs. Fraser and Rowand, address, E. R. Sayles.

After the program, sandwiches, pumpkin pie and coffee were served.

Guessing at the number of beans in a jar created quite a little fun, and gained some money as well. Rev. Mr. Strachan made the winning guess with 789 The editor was away in the woods with a guess of 1812. The actual number of beans in the jar was 790, so the minister had it down to a science.

TOWN COUNCIL

The reeve and his council were on the job promptly Friday night, and the business was got through with in good order, the session adjourning at 10 o'clock.

Councillor MacCallum reported that one or two days would be needed to finish the job of tree trimming There were some piles of brush which would have to be removed.

Councillor Pattison presented the matter of a proper place for the weighmaster at the scales It was pointed out that the moving of a partition and putting up two ends would make a place large enough for a stove, and provide a place during the winter days for the weighmaster. The matter will be attended to at once.

Councillor Eidt noted that certain work at the corner of the Stevens Hepner Co., on the street leading to the depot, must be looked after and will be attended to this week

Councillors Cottrill and Eidt were appointed to take up the matter of a couple of accounts for coal and also another account. The council made it plain that these accounts must be paid at once or legal proceedings would be taken.

Reeve Izzard, suggested that a load of fine sand be stored away for the purpose of sanding the walks when the ice was bad The supervisor was instructed to have the sand looked after at once.

The matter of striking the rate for water for factory use was again laid over.

Following are the accounts:

MARRIED

A quiet but pretty wedding took place Wednesday evening Oct 17th, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Caldwell, 1702-17 Ave West, Calgary, when their nephew, Mr. Knox Carmichael, and Miss Mary Jane Hamilton, of Kindersley, Sask., were united in marriage by the Rev. Alex. Esler. The groom was attended by his cousin, Mr. John Caldwell, while the bride was attended by Miss Mae Caldwell, also cousin of the groom. Following the ceremony, a wedding dinner was served, the table decorations being pink and white carnations. After a few days spent in the city, Mr. and Mrs Carmichael left for their home in Kindersley, sask., mid showers of confetti

LEMON JUICE IS A SKIN WHITENER

How to make a creamy beauty lotion for a few cents.

The juice of two fresh lemons strained into a bottle containing three ounces of orchard white makes a whole quarter pint of the most remarkable lemon skin beautifier at about the cost one must pay for a small jar of the ordinary cold cream. Care should be taken to strain the lemon juice through a fine cloth so no lemon pulp gets in, then this lotion will keep fresh for months. Every woman knows that lemon juice is used to bleach and remove such blemishes as freckles, sallowness and tan and is the ideal skin softener, whitener and beautifier.

Just try it! Get three ounces of orchard white at any drug store and two lemons from the grocer and make up a quarter pint of this sweetly fragrant lemon lotion and massage it daily into the face, neck, arms and hands.

Can You Feed More Live-Stock?

If so you will be interested in conditions under which freight charges will be paid for you on carlots.

The Ontario Department of Agriculture is anxious that the splendid crops harvested this fall should be used to the best advantage. In many cases this can be done by feeding a few more head of cattle or sheep for breeding purposes. The Department therefore calls attention to the announcement of the Federal Minister of Agriculture offering to pay freight shipments on car lots from Eastern Stock Yards to country points.

Please note these facts:

Individually or in co-operation with your neighbors you can purchase a carload of heifers or ewes or both combined and have them shipped from any eastern Stock Yard to your station without any cost for freight charges. You will be required to make declaration that the stock is for breeding purposes only.

Any farmer or drover can purchase a car load of cattle for feeding purposes on the Winnipeg market and have them shipped to any country point in Ontario upon payment of only one half the usual freight charges.

Feeding at the Toronto Stock Yards available at Reduced Rates and expert assistance is at disposal of farmers.

"Every effort should be made to bring the surplus stock of some sections to the surplus feed of others. All indications point to a steady demand for the meat supplies of this country for some time to come."—Sir William Hearst, Ontario Minister of Agriculture.

The District Representative will assist you in organizing a co-operative car for your district if desired or giving any other information.

Roast Fowl Supper

The White School patriotic society had a fine social evening on Tuesday night of last week, when they served a roast fowl supper. The affair was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Walker, on the 10th of Saugeen, and the evening proved a most enjoyable one.

The menu provided consisted of roast chicken, scalloped potatoes, jellies and other dainties, and was daintily served and heartily partaken of by the large crowd present. Home-made candy and cooking was also disposed of during the evening, with the result that the society will have over a $30 for their funds.

After supper Mr. Fred Elliott presided over a program of music, songs and speeches. Those taking part were: Mr. and Mrs. Mel, Black, Eddie Smith, R. E Smith, Gus Shantz, Ed McLean, G. Rae, E. R Sayles, Miss Jean Moore. Mr. Elliott in his remarks pointed out the necessity of everyone giving wherever the opportunity afforded. The tenth of a man's income was little enough, and yet how few in this district even gave one-tenth of one per cent in the greatest time of need the country ever knew. He referred to the recent Red Cross canvass in Saugeen township and said that while the amount in total was $1500 in reality it only amounted to two or three shovelfuls of wheat to each 100 acres.

The party was a fine success, and everyone had a good time. A vote of thanks was tendered to Mr and Mrs. Brown and Mr. and Mrs. Walker for their generosity in providing their home for the occasion.

The Military Service Act, 1917

DON'T DELAY!

Do It TODAY

THE MILITARY SERVICE ACT is passed; the Proclamation issued October 13th. It is now the bounden duty of every man in Class One to report for service or claim exemption. This includes all bachelors and widowers without children (not otherwise excepted) who were 20 years old on the 13th October, 1917, and whose 34th birthday did not occur before January 1st, 1917.

What To Do

Go to your Post Office and ask for the form for reporting for service or for claiming exemption. The form contains clear instructions for filling in. Do this not later than NOVEMBER 10th.

Beware of the Last Minute Rush

With so many thousands of reports and claims to be dealt with, the rush of Class One Men will grow heavier day by day. You will waste less of your time and serve your own best interests if you avoid the inevitable rush on the last days.

The law is being enforced with the Government and the People firmly behind it. Obey the law. Do it today.

IN HOSPITAL

(By Patrick MacGill, author of "The Great Push, etc.)

The hour was three o'clock in the afternoon. I entered the dug-out to find my mate Spudhole gazing mutely at some black liquid in a sooty mess-tin.

"Some milk, Spudhole?" I said, handing him the tin which had just come to me in a big parcel from England.

"No milk for me, matey," he replied. "I'm feelin' done up proper, I am. Cannot eat a bite. Tummy's out o' order and my 'eads spinnin' like a top. When's sick parade?" he asked.

"Seven o'clock," I said. "Is it as bad as that, Spudhole?"

"Worse'n that," he answered with a smile. "Ave yer a fag to spare?"

"I have, I answered, fumbling in my jacket.

"Well, give it to somebody as 'asn't got none," said my mate with a wan smile. "I'm off smokin' a bit."

The case was really serious since Spudhole could not smoke, for a smokeless hour for him had always been a Purgatorial period. After tea I went with him to the dressing station and Ted Higgles of another section, accompanied us. Ted's tummy was also out of order and his head was spinning like a top.

I stood outside the door of the dressing-station while the two men were inside. Presently Spudhole came out.

"My temperature's an 'unner and nine," he said.

"A hundred and what?" I ejaculated.

"'Unner point nine, 'is was," said Ted Higgles appearing at the doorway. Mine's an 'unner point eight. Lots o' blokes are sufferin' from the same thing. Froxie the M. O. calls it, but the right name o' it's trench fever."

"Right name?" interrogated Spudhole.

"Well, it's somefing' wot we can understand," said Ted.

"Are you coming back again to the trenches?" I asked.

"We're to sleep 'ere to-night in the cellar unner the dressin' station," they told me. "In the mornin' we're to report to the M. O. again. Then if 'e thinks fit 'e'll send us off to the 'orspital."

I went back to the firing trench alone. Spudhole and Ted did not return the next day or the day after. Three weeks later Spudhole came back.

We were sitting in a dug-out in the Ypres salient when a Jew's harp, playing rag-time, was heard outside. The Germans, at the time, were shelling our position. Who was he who played rag-time as an accompaniment to the thunder of his explosives? Who could he be —unless Spudhole?

And sure enough it was Spudhole back to us again, trig and tidy from hospital, in a new uniform, new boots and with that air of importance which sits so easily on a man who has seen strange sights in strange regions.

"What's your temperature now?" I asked as he came in.

"Blimey it's the correct thing now, but it didn't 'arf go up and down," said Spudhole putting the Jew's harp in his pocket and sitting down. "And 'orspital!" he went on. "It's no fun, I can tell yer."

"What sort of disease is Pyrexia?" a voice enquired.

"It's not 'arf bad if you've got it bad and it's no good if ye've only got it 'arf bad," said Spudhole, adding: "Wot I mean's this. If I 'ad it bad I'd get off ter blighty by my case was only a light one, not so bad as Ted 'Iggles. 'E's not out o' 'orsp yet, and may be it's a trip across the Channel for 'im. Gawd! we wor bad goin' down from the dressin' station. I couldn't even smoke a fag! We came to a village and from there a motor ambulance took us to a clearin' station. There was a 'ot bath there and we wor put to bed in a big 'ouse; blankets, plenty o' 'em and a good bed. 'Twas a rum(?) place to 'ave a kip."

"No stand-to at dawn," I said.

"Worn't there!" said Spudhole. "Two 'ours 'fore dawn we 'ad all o' us to stand-to in our blankets for the Germans began to shell the place. We 'ad to 'op it away further back in a bus. We were rattled about on that there bus and we wor dropped down at another 'orsp about breakfast time. My temperatoor was up more'n ever now. I almost burst the thermometer! And Ted! Blimey! yer should 'ave seen Ted. Looret to the wife 'e was. 'E could 'ardly speak but 'e managed to give me 'is muvver's address and I was to write to 'er when 'e went West.

"We went further back after we'd a bit o' grub, such o' us as was able to eat somefing, and we came to an 'orsp under Canvas as X——. A nice quiet place, it, and me and Ted was along wiv two others in a bell tent. There we began to get better. 'Twas a 'ungry place all the same. They were tryin' to cure us by starvin' us. Eight days in bed wif nuffing to eat but a drop o' milk and once or twice a bean. Them little beans they wor; they must 'ave been laid by termits in a 'urry.

"I got inter trouble once," said Spudhole warming to his narrative. "I climbed up the tent pole one night just to 'ave a song on my own and when I was on the top down comes the 'ole thing and I lands on Ted 'Iggles bread-basket. 'Is temperatoor was up to an 'unner and two points fire the next mornin'. The doctor didn't 'arf give me a look when 'e 'eard about me bein' up the pole.

"But 'e was a good bloke, the M. O. When I got inter me 'ole uniform 'e looked 'ard at my cap. Ye remember it boys? 'Twas more like a rag man's than a soldiers o' the King's. Then 'e arst me: Ave you ever much war?' 'Not 'arf I ever'n,' I told 'im. 'I thought so,' he says, 'judgin' by yer cap.' And 'e told the orderly to indent me for a brand new uniform. And 'e gave me two francs to get meself a drink when I was leavin' ".

"And how is Ted?" I asked.

"Not so bad yer know," said Spudhole. "And 'e didn't 'arf want to come back wiv me. 'E didn't mind stayin' there as long as I was wiv 'im, but when I was goin' away 'twas another story. 'E did want to get back to the trenches again——"

"Spudhole! Is Spudhole in here?" asked a Corporal peering into the dug-out.

"I'm 'ere," said Spudhole. "Wot d'yer want me for?"

"It's you turn on sentry-go," said the Corporal.

"Blimey!" exclaimed Spudhole. "Didn't take yer long to find that I was back! Wunner the war wasn't stopped while I was away. A sick man goin' on sentry too——. If ye're goin' to carry on like that my temperatoor will soon be up again. All right, Corpril I'll be out in a tick——".

Fairville, Sept. 30, 1902.

THE SAVED DOLLARS.

When Properly Invested They Help to Develop Our Country.

What work does the saved dollar do to help make this country a better place for the saver? At a meeting of the American Bankers' Association an intelligent answer was made by a man who is well qualified to speak. He said:

"While a dollar saved by a workman helps to give to some workman a job, so does every other dollar of savings, whether it comes from wages, interest or profits.

"The economic effect of a dollar saved and invested is just the same, whether the owner is a wage earner, an employer or an heir of inherited wealth. Income, however it originates, that is saved and put to reproductive uses performs an inevitable service for society.

"Every form of savings finally seeks investment, and if you will follow the investment through to its ultimate reaction you will see it putting men to work; you will see it enlarging the agricultural, the industrial or the transportation equipment of the community; you will see it creating new demands for labor, raising the rate of wages and increasing the production of things which men design.

"If savings are devoted to reproductive purposes, it makes no difference whether they are the savings of the workman or of the millionaire, they ultimately accomplish the same result —they increase the supply of things that the whole community wants."

F. A. Vanderlip said that. It is true. Your $50 in the savings bank works at the same job to which the $50,000 of the rich man is sent.

If the men who manage the work are honest and capable they use our saved dollars to make this country worth living in, worth working in, worth being proud of, worth fighting to preserve.—John M. Oskison in New York Globe.

Drawn Glass.

On account of its great strength drawn glass is used for many purposes. It withstands sudden changes of temperature, resists fire to a great extent and is very strong.

SATISFIED MOTHERS

Once a mother has used Baby's Own Tablets for her little ones she will use nothing else. The satisfaction she derives from their use is wonderful. They are easy to give the baby: their action is prompt and thorough, and above all they are absolutely harmless. Concerning them Mrs. Jean Dechaine, Lacordaire, Sask., writes: "I am well satisfied with Baby's Own Tablets. I had no trouble in giving them to my baby, and they have promptly cured her of constipation." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

VANITY AND SPECTACLES.

Old Plea That Wearing Glasses Makes One Look Aged.

One of the popular objections to wearing glasses is that wearing glasses makes one look old.

This was true in the days when they were worn only to help poor sight and chiefly by the elderly. Now a very large percentage of wearers of spectacles are children, and the wearing of spectacles is no longer a mark of advanced age. It is not a sufficient excuse for a lady to say that glasses would make her look old.

Moreover, wearing glasses is one of the best preservers of a youthful appearance. This is because prolonged eye strain causes wrinkles to appear prematurely and gives the countenance a strained, anxious, tired, drawn, cross look, which is very characteristic and is far more to be avoided from the point of view of appearance than the slight disfigurement of glasses.

Indeed, so far from being unbecoming, there are some types of face to which glasses just add the finishing touch.—Charles Phelps Cushing in World's Work.

THE MAN FROM BALLYRUDDEN

(By Patrick MacGill, Author of "The Great Push," Etc.)

The night was ebony black, but still and warm. The summer clouds hung very low and seemed to be thrusting the heat down on the watchers in No-Man's Land. The covering party lay in a line amidst the grasses, a space of half-a-dozen yards between each man and his mate. Gahey, an Irish rifleman, was there, lying face down to the ground, the smell of the earth heavy in his nostrils and the dreams and thoughts engendered by such a night running riot in his head. He was very sleepy, for he had had no sleep the night before. All that day he had been very hard at work, for the trenches were in a bad state. Parapets had been blown down by German shells; machine gun emplacements had been levelled to the earth; sandbags flung broadcast by the fury of war, had filled up parts of the communication trench. All this had to be remedied, and all day long Gahey sweated at his toil. Now, when night had fallen, the barbed wire entanglements had to be repaired and the engineers were set to work on the job. The infantry holding the trench supplied the covering party and Gahey was one of the men who went out.

As he lay there in the grass he could hear the engineers at work, hammering in the posts, buckling the supports and pulling the wires taut. They were as quiet about it as was possible, but to the tensely strained ears of Gahey the noise of labor came like the rumble of artillery. The enemy would surely hear it too.

He may have done, but perhaps he had his own working parties out and thought it wiser not to take any notice. Now and again Gahey fancied that he could see dark forms standing quite motionless and very near him, but probably his eyes played him false and the objects might be tree-trunks trimmed down by shellfire. He was very sleepy and his chief wish was that his job might soon cease and allow him to get back to his trench.

"I wish the sleep wasn't so much in my eyes," he muttered. "I'm afraid that I might drop off for a snooze in a minute ...... This won't do. I'll nip my leg and keep myself up to the mark ...... Right in the thick of my leg."

He caught the soft of his thigh between finger and thumb and pinched vigorously. Once, twice, thrice. He almost screeched with the pain.

"It's the only way to do it," he said apologizing for the pain he had inflicted on himself. "If I don't pinch like blazes I'll maybe drop off ...... That won't do and the life of me mates depending on me and others like me ...."

He pinched his leg again, then rapped his knuckles against the butt of his rifle. He kept on rapping until one of his fingers was bleeding.

"It's a damned funny caper, this," he muttered. "It has got to be done, I suppose. But they don't know at home what we've got to go through out here. This is a war in defence of civilization," he said with a low laugh. "Here I am doin' my bit by lyin' down on my tummy and rappin' my knuckles against a rifle. Well, I suppose it's one way o' carryin' on. What would they say at home in me own town, the town of Ballyrudden, if I told them that in France I spent all my days working with a spade like a man on a potato patch, and all my nights rappin' my fingers on a rifle-butt? Oh, glory, but it's a funny war!"

Gahey became sudenly alert as a starshell went up over the German trenches and a dark object was disclosed moving in the grass some eight yards away. What could it be? A German crawling out towards the British lines, Gahey thought. He gripped his bayonet with a steady hand and got up on one knee. At that moment he heard the man next him calling out in a loud whisper: "The right flank has encountered an enemy patrol! Reinforcements! Pass it along!"

Gahey passed the message along, stood upright and rushed at the figure which was lying in the grass.

"Who's there?" he hissed, as he stood over it.

The click of a rifle bolt was the only response and Gahey gave the figure a kick. It rose upwards with a whimper and shot its hands over its head. It was a German soldier.

"Kamerad!" he appealed. "Wife and three children!"

"If ye yell like that again a harem and a school of children won't save ye," said Gahey. "What the divil are ye comin' atween me and a fight for, anyway?" he thundered.

"Kamerad!" wained the German.

Gahey was very annoyed. A fight on and he had to take charge of a prisoner! It was a job not to his liking. From the right came the sound of rifles and yelling. The men from the left were rushing by, and one took shape opposite and made to pass. Gahey reached out a long arm and gripped the man by the shoulder.

"Let me be!" gasped the man. "I want to get up to the fighting."

"Take charge of this man," said Gahey in a voice of command. "Take him back to the trench now! Get behind him with the bay'net and take him in."

The soldier, a young fellow of nineteen, newly out, had heard of Gahey and knew him to be one of the most reckless and daring men in the battalion. He obeyed Gahey's command and took charge of the prisoner. Then Gahey doubled off to the right where the fight was in full swing.

"Not much of a fight it was," said Gahey afterwards, when giving an account of the scrap. "It lasted for just a minute or two and I had only a couple of jags at the buckos. It was a poor lot we came on and they had no love for the bayn't. It always makes me mad to see them refusin' to take part in a good, honest stand-to fight. But I suppose it's in the make-up of some of them to behave like that....... I haven't seen what I call a good fight since the last harvest fair I spent at Ballyrudden."

It was on the morning after the "scrap" that Gahey was speaking. He looked at his listeners and drank a cup of tea from his sooty mess-tin.

"Ballyrudden was the place for a fight," he said. "It was a place to warm the cockles of a man's heart. The ash-plants goin' swingin' about the heads and the men fallin'! 'Twas a sight to see!"

He fixed a contemplative eye on the empty mess-tin.

"Ballyrudden for ever!" he said in a slow voice filled with longing. "Ballyruden for ever and the times we used to have at the harvest fair!"

Reducing Expenses

The war has so increased the cost of living, the housewife must make her money go further.

By using Red Rose Tea, which chiefly consists of strong, rich Assam teas, she can keep her tea bills down. The rich Assam strength requires less tea in the pot—and there's only one tea with the rich Red Rose flavor!

Kept Good by the Sealed Package

Joy in Trying.

Do not allow yourself to just drift along through life. Set before you an aim, some real purpose. Cultivate hope and ambition to accomplish something. Do not be contented to let things happen; make things happen. Whatever your business or occupation aim to excel in it. Financial gain is not all one gets from labor well performed. Your character is elevated and your mind is enlarged, and the satisfaction in having done well is the most real joy. Don't be afraid to set your aim high. Gild it with your highest ideals. Let the hope of its attainment nerve your every act. Turn incidents and circumstances toward the attainment of your aim. If you have no aim you reach nowhere. A life without a purpose is a dreary thing, without real joy. Suppose you fail to reach the heights you have set as your standard; you will have gone higher than if you had not striven. You will be more useful, of more worth, than if you had not tried.—Milwaukee Journal.

BURDEN OF WORRY.

To-day's Enough; Never Mind Yesterday's or To-morrow's.

A wayfarer carried a heavy sack under which he toiled and complained unceasingly. From none could he get help or comfort.

And as he slowly journeyed, groaning under his burden, the Angel of Opportunism came to him and spoke kindly, saying:

"Brother, what carriest thou?"

The man answered surlily, "My worries."

The angel smiled pityingly upon him and said, "Let us look into thy burden and examine they worries."

And so they looked in. But lo, the sack was empty.

"Why surely!" cried the man, "there were two great worries, too heavy for man to bear; But—ah, yes, I had forgotten—one was a worry of yesterday, and so it is gone."

"And the other?"

"That—why, that was a worry of to-morrow, and it—it has not yet yet come."

Then the angel smiled with infinite pity, saying:

"Hearken. He who bows himself down under the worries of yesterday and to-morrow wears himself out for naught. Be he who carries only the worries of to-day has no need of a sack for his sorrows. If thou wilt cast this black thing aside and give all thy strength and cheer and courage to the things of to-day real misfortune never can burden thee."

Wondering, the man did as the angel commanded.

And as he took up his journey and went lightly, swiftly on, his heart and his hands were free to relieve many a brother wayfarer of his burdens and to pluck sweet fruits and flowers along the wayside.

And when he came at last to the setting of the sun it was with smiles and a song.—Christian Herald.

Marines.

Marines—soldiers serving on shipboard—date back to the year 1664, when an order-in-Council, dated Oct. 16, authorized 1,200 soldiers to be raised and formed into a regiment. More regiment were later on formed, and in the latter years of the French wars they numbered 22,000. The marines are to-day a feature of every navy, and in most countries officers of the marines are equal in rank with those in the army and navy.—London Chronicle.

A New Household Word.

The expression "food alternative" is practically of recent origin, and it has a pleasant ring in our ears. As used by dietitians and cooking experts, it signifies a second choice, providing the same food value, but of lower price or easier to obtain.

Some of the fish and cereal dishes are food alternatives to meat.

Wheat flour is scarce; as an alternative housewives are urged to use more rye and corn.

The scarcity of hogs and the fact that they are often undersize when brought to the market has made pure leaf lard high in price. A pure vegetable shortening is the ideal temporary alternative. It is also a satisfactory permanent alternative for families where pork shortening is never used.

When we speak of a substitute, we infer that the original article cannot be obtained. When we use the world alternative, the supposition is that we have freedom of choice.

The Wagon Wheel Paradox.

A very interesting paradox is the one concerning an ordinary wagon wheel, which is solid and rigid, yet, when fastened on its axle on a wagon, when the wagon moves part of the circumference of the wheel which is in contact with the ground is for an instant at absolute rest, while the point directly perpendicular to it is flying along at a high rate of speed. The two points horizontal with the centre of the wheel are travelling pretty fast, but only half as fast as the topmost point, and as the upgoing horizontal point increases in speed the downgoing one slows up until it is at rest for a moment when in contact with ground. Yet the wheel is one solid piece and there are only two points going at the same rate of speed at the same time. Yet if the wheel is taken off the axle and rolled down an incline every point of the circumference moves at the same rate of speed.

ENEMIES TO SUCCESS.

Learn to Avoid Timidity, Shyness or Self Consciousness.

Timidity, shyness and selfconsciousness belong to the same family. We usually find all where we find any one, and they are all enemies of peace of mind, happiness and achievement. No one has ever done a great thing while his mind was centered upon himself. We must lose ourselves before we can find ourselves. Self-analysis is valuable only to learn our strength; it is fatal if it makes us dwell upon our weaknesses.

Timid, shy people are morbidly self conscious. They think too much about themselves. Their thoughts are turned inward; they are always analyzing, dissecting themselves, wondering how they appear and what people think of them. If these people could only forget themselves and think of others they would be surprised to see what freedom, ease and grace they would gain, what success in life they would achieve.

Thousands of young people are held back from undertaking what they long to do and are kept from trying to make real their great life dreams because they are afraid to jostle with the world. They shrink from exposing their sore spots and sensitive points, which smart from the slightest touch. Their supersensitiveness makes cowards of them.—O. S. Marden.

GERMANY WILL BE BANKRUPT AT WAR'S CLOSE

Cannot Bear Financial Strain as Long as the Entente Allies.

THE WAR'S COST

Told in British Commons by the Chancellor, Bonar Law.

London Cable—The war is making increasingly heavy demands on the Exchequer it was revealed to-day, when a vote of credit for £400,000,000 was asked for.

Addressing the Commons, Bonar Law said that in the period from July 22 to Sept. 22 the daily average expenditure of the British Government was £6,414,000.

The Chancellor said the expenditures of the army and navy exceeded the budget estimate by £570,000 daily.

The average daily expenditure since the beginning of the financial year has been £6,450,000, or £1,227,000 above the budget estimate.

Bonar Law said that as far as he could judge the financial position in the second half of the year would not be quite as favorable as in the first half, partly on account of the increased pay for the army and navy.

On Sept. 29, said Mr. Bonar Law, the total amount of the national debt was between £4,900,000 and £5,000,000,000, less £1,100,000,000 advanced to allies and £160,000,000 to Dominions. There must also be deducted, he explained, apart of the gift of the Indian Government, which amounted to £100,000,000. The net increase in the debt due to the war, the Chancellor stated, was £3,000,000,000.

The Chancellor said America had given great financial assistance at times when her expenditure was greater than that of the allies.

The increase in the vote of credit for the War Office, he explained, was due in part to the larger force maintained abroad; to the forward movement of the troops in France, and to other causes, including motor transport.

If the war ended as the Allies meant it should the financial burden would be one which could be borne.

The Chancellor said the German Reichstag had passed votes of credit which amounted to £4,700,000,000 exclusive of advance to allies. There were indications, he said, that Germany would be hopelessly bankrupt at the end of the war. The Allies could bear the financial burden longer than Germany, and it would not be lack of money that would be recoverable. Millions had been advanced to the dominions for supplies and for payment to their troops in England. In all £179,000,000 would be recoverable.

The increased pay of sailors and soldiers and the subsidizing of the loan would amount to between £10,000,000 and £50,000,000 in the second part of the fiscal year.

German taxation had been increased by more than £185,000,000, but that sum fell short by £55,000,000 of the interest of the war debt.

"I am glad to be able to take this opportunity of saying how much reason not only the British, but all the Allied Governments, have for appreciating the very generous way in which the United States Government has come to their assistance in financing purchases in America," said the Chancellor. "It is an open secret that until America came into the war the method of financing our purchases there and the question of exchange were not only serious problems, but, in my opinion almost insoluble problems.

"The fact that America has given generous assistance at times when she was incurring expenditure at a heavier rate than any of the Allies I believe it my duty publicly to acknowledge."

NEW GERMAN CHANCELLOR

No Official Word of Hertling's Appointment.

Pan Germans Bitterly Opposed to Him.

London Cable says—No official announcement of the appointment of Count von Hertling as German Imperial Chancellor has been made, according to special despatches from Amsterdam, but it is believed to be certain. The Lokal Anzeiger, of Berlin, and Neueste Nachrichten, of Munich, say the count has accepted, while the Deutsche Tages Zeitung says he will accept, and that Dr. Michaelis will become Premier of Prussia.

On the other hand, a despatch to the Daily Mail from Amsterdam ascribes to Catholic Centrist circles in the Bavarian Chamber of Deputies the statement that Von Hertling's acceptance is conditional upon Dr. Michaelis not having any high official position, and upon Von Hertling being wholly independent of Berlin official circles.

The Rheinische Westfalische Zeitung of Essen is indignant over the possibility of Von Hertling's appointment, which, it says, would be an irreparable blunder.

HERTLING'S RECORD.

Copenhagen Cable—Count George von Hertling, who has been appointed to succeed Dr. Michaelis as German Imperial Chancellor, was for long years the leader of the Catholic Centre in the Reichstag. He was one of the few forcible and first-grade personalities among the non-Socialist representatives.

Even after his retirement from the Reichstag to become Premier of Bavaria the count remained one of the guiding influences in the Catholic party, and as the head of the Government in the second largest Federal state he has played an important role in imperial affairs during the war. He supported Von Bethmann Hollweg against the Conservative campaign for a long time, and when he withdrew his support Von Bethmann Hollweg fell.

Count von Hertling may have asked for time in which to consider the appointment in order to consult with Reichstag leaders, according to their expressed wish. In this case he would hear nothing favorable from the Socialists and part of the Radicals who already have expressed themselves as being opposed to his candidacy. To the Catholic Centre he would, of course, be highly acceptable, and probably the National Liberals also would be willing to work with him.

The new Chancellor's name has been an anathema to the pan-Germans of the Count von Reventlow type, owing to the belief that he is not their man as far as the annexation programme is concerned. Von Hertling and Foreign Minister von Kuehlmann have been coupled in the pan-German abuse, but Von Hertling's conservative orthodoxy concerning parliamentary reform may be sufficient to overcome this prejudice. Much will depend on his attitude on Prussian franchise reform, concerning which he has been silent, on the ground that this is Prussia's own affair.

TO RUSH AID TO ITALIANS

U. S. Waives All Export Restrictions

To Send Coal and Steel to Ally.

Washington, D.C., Report.—All export restrictions will be waived by the American Government in forwarding supplies to Italy to aid in meeting the Austro-German invasion. The Italian Government, it was made known today, will be permitted to take the kind of materials it needs most to the limit of its tonnage capacity, regardless of prospective shortages here.

Approximately 100,000 tons of shipping has been promised Italy by the Shipping Board. Four vessels already have been turned over and the others will be delivered as fast as they are available. The shortage of ships is so serious, however, that the Shipping Board has to pick them up as it can find them and the whole amount of tonnage promised may not be available under thirty days.

Italy's greatest need is coal, and, next, steel, for her munition factories. She has been drawing on this country for about [illegible] tons of coal a month, but now that English coal is harder to obtain, her requirements from the United States will approach [illegible] tons monthly. The country starts the winter, according to Italian officials, fully two millions tons of coal short.

The shipping the United States is able to release, will be totally inadequate to meet the demand for coal and to carry food and munitions. It is likely, it was said, today, however, that the Italians will make a trade with Spain for a large amount of Spanish tonnage to supplement the American ships. At the same time the Italians will put into trans-Atlantic service as many of their own ships as possible.

Italy's food situation, it was said today, is not as bad as it has been pictured. The bread ration is larger now than in either France or England. If, however, the Italians wish to transport food in preference to coal and munitions they will be given export licenses to ship as much as they wish.

BRITISH FLIERS DO MUCH DAMAGE

German Bases in Belgium Again Bombed.

Raid Into Prussia Also Succeeded.

London Cable—The British War Office last night issued the following statement on aviation activity:

"Yesterday there were a few fine intervals, during which our airplanes observed for our artillery and fired several thousand rounds from their machine guns at enemy troops in the trenches and on the roads. About 100 bombs were dropped on hostile billets at Roulers and elsewhere during the day, and again at night. In air fighting four hostile machines were driven down and one was driven down out of control. Two of our machines are missing.

"Last night our machines again attacked the railway station and lines around Saarbrucken, Rhenish Prussia, northeast of Metz, Germany. The bombs were seen to burst with good effect. All our machines returned though the weather conditions were exceptionally bad. This morning at 11 o'clock twelve of our machines went further afield and attacked the munition works and gas works at Pirmasons 20 miles beyond Saarbrucken. Bombs were seen to burst on factories and the gas works with excellent results. Many photographs were taken and the weather was good. All our machines returned."

BRAZIL PREPARES FOR WAR.

Rio Janeiro, Brazil, Report.—In view of Brazil's entrance into the war, plans for intensified military training are being put into effect, although no mobilization measures has been decreed. The garrisons in Southern Brazil, where there is a large German element, have been reinforced. Twenty-two former German sailors were arrested to-day and taken to Sao Paulo. All German newspapers and other publications have been seized.

ITALIAN PEOPLE STEADY UNDER THE TEUTON DRIVE

London Special Cable—Military critics here hazard the guess that the first instalment of Entente troops have already reached the line selected by General Cadorna to give battle to the Teuton invaders of Italian soil. They are supremely confident that this line cannot be broken by any troops that the Germans dare to concentrate there.

Since last Friday the War Committee of the French Government has held sittings, at which in close accord with London and Rome, French military authorities have perfected a plan which is expected to relieve the terrific pressure on the Italian forces.

London Cable says—Semi-official the authorities here are taking a cheerful view of the Italian crisis, believing that the Germans thrust is inspired quite as much by the political as military conditions. Germany invariably plays politics and war together, and in the present instance it is believed the huge military enterprise probably was launched in an effort to start a revolution in Italy, where the activities of the German propagandists long have been afoot. The shortage of coal, food and metals, and the beginning of cold weather apparently is expected by Germany to discourage the Italian masses. Accentuated by the great military drive, this discontent might precipitate a crisis which the enemy thinks would lead to a separate peace.

GUARANTEE AGAINST REVOLUTION.

The announcement of the new Italian Cabinet is accepted in the most authoritative circles as a guarantee against a revolution. The new Government appears to be vigorous in its support of the war policy. The German general staff is credited with fine work in moving and concentrating such great masses of troops for the Italian drive, but there seems no reason to fear that the advance will go far toward the achievement of Berlin's designs against the Italian State.

Military critics here say General Cadorna's new line behind Udine cannot be broken by any force Germany dare concentrate there. Consequently Italy's position is safe enough unless internal troubles arise. However, the new Cabinet plainly realizes that tonnage is a vital element if an ultimate disaster in Italy is to be avoided. The country is far stronger in a military sense than it is economically.

It may be stated positively that Germany did not weaken her western lines for the recent advance on the Isonzo, but used troops Hindenburg has been holding in reserve in German depots.

The most encouraging feature of the whole situation seems to be the fact that Berlin miscalculated the political effect, reports agreeing that the Italian people are undismayed.

THE ITALIAN OFFICIAL.

The text of the Italian statement reads: "During yesterday's various engagements took place on the Hills of St. Daniele Del Fruili, along the Ledra Canal, at Pasian, Schiavonesco, and at Pozzuolo Del Fruili.

"The brave behavior of our covering units and cavalry has permitted the other troops to continue the movement towards position on the new line."

THE GERMAN STATEMENT.

To-night's Berlin War Office report said:

"In Italy there have been successful engagements on the Tagliamento Plain. The number of Italian prisoners has increased to more than 120,000. The number of guns captured is more than 1,000."

An earlier report said: "Movements of the troops of the 14th and the Isonzo armies, which are advancing out of the Carnic Alps are taking place in accordance with the intentions of the leadership."

A Geneva despatch to the Daily Mail says Austrian newspapers express confidence that the Italian reserves will not support the crisis and that internal disorders will lighten the task of the invaders of Italy. The Zeit declares that the Italian people cannot hold out any longer, while the Socialist Arbiter Zeitung hopes for a national revolution on Russian lines or at least local revolt.

THE SITUATION SUMMARIZED.

Virtually one thousand square miles of Italian territory have been overrun, more than 120,000 Italians have been made prisoner, and in excess of 1,000 guns have been captured by the German and Austro-Hungarian armies in their eight days drive from the Isonzo and Carnic Alps' front of the Austro-Italian war theatre, according to Berlin.

From the east the enemy lines on the centre of the battlefront now is well within gun range of the Tagliamento River, where it has been presumed that Gen. Cadorna would turn and make a stand. The Italian commander-in-chief, however, has not yet brought his troops about to face the enemy, but is continuing his retreat, with the rear-guards harassing the advance. Just where Cadorna purposes to give battle has not become apparent. Neither is it known how well the northern and southern flanks of his army are keeping pace with the retirement in the centre.

According to the latest Berlin official communication announcing the heavy losses of the Italians in men and guns, engagements successful for the enemy have taken place on the Tagliamento Plain, while the Rome communication announces that there has been fighting on the hills of St. Daniele Del Friuli, along the Ledra Canal, at Pasian Schiavonesco, and at Possuolo Del Fruiuli, northwest of Udine, and from four to five miles east of the Tagliamento.

Meanwhile preparations to aid the Italians in their hour of extremity are being rushed by all the Allies. Jules Cambon, General Secretary of the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs, in a statement has expressed the conviction that the Italians will be able to stem the tide of the invasion with the aid of French and British troops sent to reinforce them. The American Government is to waive all export restrictions in favor of Italy, permitting that country to take whatever material she requires, regardless of prospective shortages here. A large amount of shipping also is to be given Italy to work in conjunction with her own merchant marine in taking supplies overseas.

The new Italian Premier in a message to General Cadorna has assured the commander-in-chief that all classes of the population of Italy are with him in his hour of trial, and will stand by him and the army until victory rests with them. A similar message was sent to the British Prime Minister.

SINN FEIN RULE.

Irish Body Attempts to Control Food.

London Despatch—The Sinn Fein organization, according to the Morning Post, has started a food control department in Ireland, independent of the Government. The newspaper prints the text of a circular, which it says is being distributed widely, asking priests to help in making an inventory of food stocks, as an initial step toward "retaining in Ireland sufficient food for the entire population, and arranging to have it available for distribution whenever famine is to be dreaded.

The circular ascribes the danger of shortage to the excessive exportation of Irish food products, the consumption by the large garrisons there, and the submarine menace. It declares a wish to avert a repetition of the calamity of 1847.

GERMANS LOST OVER 12,000

In Four-day Offensive by French Forces

And Also Lost Total of 180 Cannon.

Paris Cable—The official communication issued at the War Office [illegible] reads:

"[illegible] north of the Aisne artillery [illegible] in the neighborhood [illegible].

"[illegible] number of prisoners captured by us in the course of our offensive [illegible] was 12,000 of whom [illegible] were officers. The cannon number [illegible].

"On the right bank of the Meuse the Germans attempted this morning against our positions in the sector of [illegible] a surprise attack which we repulsed. Between the Meuse and Bezonvaux there was quite a violent bombardment during the course of the afternoon.

"On Oct. 20 six enemy aeroplanes were brought down by our pilots; four others fell in a damaged condition within their own lines. Our bombing escadrilles last night dropped 7,700 kilos of projectiles and explosives on the railway stations at Thionville, Bettembourg, Maizieres-lez-Metz, Longeville-lez-Metz, Jeoply and Conflans, as well as on the station at Luxemburg. All our objectives were reached."

GERMANS BLAMED FOR COSTLY FIRE

$5,000,000 Blaze at Docks at Baltimore.

British Ship Also Burned and Sunk.

Baltimore Despatch—A disastrous fire, which wrecked two of the finest of the Baltimore & Ohio terminal piers at Locust Point, spread to a British steamship, which had just docked, and caused it to burn and sink, with the probable loss of four of its crew, broke out here last night and was got under control at about 3 o'clock this morning.

Two stevedores, who had been at work on the ship and were thought to have gone down, were all accounted for to-day.

Vice-President J. M. Davis, of the B. & O. Railway, said it was the belief of the railroad officials that the fire was of incendiary origin, as credible witnesses stated they saw flames leap from piers No. 8 and 9 at five points almost simultaneously.

The total loss will be over $5,000,000. Of this, which is said to be a conservative estimate, the piers represented a value of $1,500,000; the goods stored on them $3,000,000, and the steamer and cargo $500,000.

The steamer, which docked yesterday afternoon, had on board eighty anti-submarine shells from a British port. Three exploded with loud reports when the ship took fire, and it was not long after the ship had been towed into mid-stream that she sank.

Pier No. 1, loaded with wheat for export, was in danger of being burned early to-day, and only a fire wall stood between the fire and this pier and two others. Baltimore & Ohio officials felt confident of saving these piers. The customs house authorities saved their records on Pier No. 8, but those on Pier No. 9 were destroyed.

Chief of Police Leigh, of the Baltimore & Ohio, began an investigation of the report that the pier watchmen saw five or six men jump from Pier No. 9 just as the flames broke out. The piers have been under armed guards for a number of months.

ONE LITTLE CANARY

Cause Trouble for Entire British Division.

Washington Report—How one little canary bird caused consternation among an entire division of British troops and had to be killed, is told by Dr. Robert Davis, recently arrived in the United States to lecture at the officers' training camps on activities of the Red Cross in Europe.

For more than a month, on a northern sector of the line, the British had been secretly mining beneath the German trenches, said Dr. Davis. The work was almost complete. During the operations several canary birds were, as usual kept in the excavations to warn the workers of the presence of fire damp, which is fatal to the birds. One little songster, however, escaped from its job, flew into the middle of No Man's Land, and alighting on a bush began to sing.

Consternation reigned in the British lines. If the bird had been discovered by the Germans, the work of weeks would go for nought, as the enemy could easily interpret the meaning of its presence and prepare to combat sapping operations. The infantry was immediately ordered to open fire on the canary to destroy it, but it seemed to bear a charmed life. Even the sharpshooters failed to bring it down, as it hopped from twig to twig. Finally the artillery had to be called on. A trench gun with a well aimed shell blew the bird and the bush and the song into nothingness.

SANK 25 VESSELS.

Raider Seeadler's Captain Boasts of His Work.

A Pacific Port Report—Count von Luckner, commander of the German raider Seeadler, told Fiji Island newspaper correspondents, when he was captured near the Fijis recently, that the raider was destroyed by fire two thousand miles from land, according to officers of a vessel which arrived here yesterday with details of the count's capture. Previous reports were that the vessel was wrecked on an island.

The count also asserted, according to the steamer's officers, that the Seeadler destroyed 25 steamers and sailing vessels on its cruise. Five of the captured craft, all sailing vessels, were sunk in the Pacific, he said. All the crews were sent ashore.

A favorite plan of his, he was reported to have said, was to send out a wireless message asking for the time. Someone would oblige him, and often the ship supplying the time was traced and sunk.

HUN ATTACK IN ARGONNE FAILS

Artillery Battle Along the Aisne Front.

Another Futile Air Raid On Dunkirk.

Paris Cable—A German attack in the Argonne last night was beaten off by the French, the War Office reports. An artillery battle is in progress over the front of the recent French attack north of the Aisne. The announcement follows:

"North of the Aisne there was artillery fighting on the whole sector between Vauxaillon and Pinon, and along our new positions in the region at Froidmont. We repulsed enemy detachments, which attempted to capture our small posts north of the Loivre, in the [illegible] northwest of Rheims.

"In the Argonne, in the region of Bourcilles, the Germans made a surprise attack. After a spirited engagement they were compelled to return to their lines, having suffered considerable losses.

"There is nothing to report from the remainder of the front.

"Enemy aviators threw down thirty bombs last night on Dunkirk. Neither victims nor important material losses have been reported up to the present."

FOE PATENTS TO U. S. LICENSES

German Secrets Free to American Manufaturers.

20,000 Articles Affected by the Order.

Washington, D.C. Despatch—The vast store of German scientific information in this country was opened today to American manufacturers, in regulations issued by the Federal Trade Commission under which enemy-owned patents and copyrights will be licensed for manufacture by citizens of the United States. When the regulations had been made public the commission met a group of medical men to consider licensing the manufacture of certain drugs, principally salvarsan, used in virulent blood diseases, and non-toxic substitutes for local anaesthetics, of which the supply in this country has run dangerously low since the war interrupted commerce. Approximately 20,000 patented and copyrighted articles are said to be affected by the commission's order. These include dyestuff formulas of vital importance to American industries and mechanical devices of wide use.

DRY WASHINGTON.

U.S. Capital Cuts Off Liquor To-night.

Washington Despatch—At midnight the national capital goes dry.

Among the establishments going out of business to-day, under the terms of Sheppard Prohibition Law, are several which served during a historic existence of more than half a century as familiar meeting places for prominent political figures of past generations.

Washington is planning a farewell celebration, and the usual carnival scenes probably will be enacted as the closing hour approaches.

CLIP THIS AND PIN ON WIFE'S DRESSER

Cincinnati man tells how to shrivel up corns or calluses so they lift off with fingers.

Ouch ! ? ! ! ! ! This kind of rough talk will be heard less here in town if people troubled with corns will follow the simple advice of this Cincinnati authority, who claims that a few drops of a drug called freezone when applied to a tender, aching corn or hardened callus stops soreness at once, and soon the corn or callus dries up and lifts right off without pain.

He says freezone dries immediately and never inflames or even irritates the surrounding skin. A small bottle of freezone will cost very little at any drug store, but will positively remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet. Millions of American women will welcome this announcement since the inauguration of the high heels. If your druggist doesn't have freezone tell him to order a small bottle for you.

BURGOYNE AND DISTRICT

Mrs. Chas McLean who went west in the spring arrived home last week and will start farming again. Ontario is not such a slow place to live in after all.

The reeve of Arran was at Burgoyne last [illegible] to arrange for the gravelling of that stretch of muddy road east towards the B. line. He was offering $1 [illegible] a square yard but there were no takers. It is estimated that to cover this stretch of road would take eight or ten hundred yards of gravel, rather a big contract for one man to undertake so late in the fall seeing the average round trip for each load would be at least five miles and a heavy road too at this season. Perhaps if such a big job were let in sections one and another might be able to take a part as there should be pretty good money in it if the the busy season on the farm was over.

Messrs. A. and A. Durrance have rented the larger part of Mr. Kerr's farm on the Elora road.

Mr. John McKinnon and family will leave the Russel McIver farm shortly to reside on his farm in Saugeen. Burgoyne is losing several good men.

Miss Lovell who has been motoring to her school in Arran since the holiday found the roads rather wintry last week.

Mrs. Weirs is visiting her sister Mrs. Esplen.

His Smile

He wasn't rich as dollars go,
He didn't have a pile of dough,
He didn't own a motor car
He couldn't often travel far.
He couldn't dress in costly style
He just possessed a kindly smile.
He had a happy sort of way,
Knew how to work and how to play;
And he respected women fair
And dealt with men upon the square,
And people thought him much worth while
Because he had a kindly smile.
You do not need a store of good
The love of real friends to hold;
Be honest, boy, and kind, and true,
And do the work you find to do;
Win openly and not by guile,
And folks will like you for your smile.

"I Surrender All"

LIEUT. JOHN ROWAND GEDDES
Killed in France

Last week Mr. and Mrs. Alex Geddes, of Arran Tp, received word that their son, Lieut. John R., of the Royal Flying Corps, had been killed in France

They had just received a letter from him and dated October 21st, that he was leaving for France in his plane. The next news was a cablegram that he had been killed. Apparently he had been in France not more than a week.

Lieut. Geddes was using one of the light swift, fighting planes capable of travelling at 130 miles an hour and could drop at the rate of 300 miles an hour,

Lieut Geddes had been wounded in a previous encounter in France, had recovered and had taken a special course in England. Just before he wrote his last letter he said he had been run into by an auto but not hurt very much.

The announcement of his death gave no particulars.

Lieut. John R. Geddes was born Sept. 15, 1894, He got his first education in Gowanlock school, then in Port Elgin High School, where, as a young lad, he established a record for having secured his matriculation under Principal Bald, in two years. Being too young for Normal school he went back to the farm until he was old enough to go to Normal, Then he went to Stratford, secured his teachers standing and taught first at Bang's school. Then he taught near Woodstock, enlisting in September 1915 in the 71st. While in England he took up a course in the Royal Flying Corps.

No finer type of young man has given up his life in this great war, for liberty and justice, than John R. Geddes. He was clever, ambitious and a Christian gentleman. A leader of young men in all the higher things of life, and a man of fine athletic training.

Shipped Eight Tons of Cabbages

Mr. Ashwell who has the fruit farm just north of the town, shipped eight tons of cabbages last week. The goods were consigned to a Winnipeg dealer. Mr. Ashwell, since taking up this property has put the land and trees in good shape and is preparing for larger business.

Soloist Wins Praise

Before a very large congregation yesterday morning in First Presbyterian Church, Miss Hazel Webb, of Port Elgin sang "Just For to-day". This was Miss Webb's first appearance before a Chatham audience, and she immediately won many admirers. She has an excellent contralto voice: and her phrasing and expression are exceptionally good. For the past year she has been training under Mrs. John K. Cooper, who is greatly pleased with her work. The congregation was much pleased with Miss Webb's singing, and she has before her a very promising future.—Chatham Banner.

Mr. and Mrs. Langford entertained visitors from Owen Sound on Sunday.

The Women's Mission Circle of North Bruce Baptist church held their annual Thankoffering services Wednesday Nov. 7th. Miss C. Cameron gave an address of welcome, A. Nicholson sang a solo, Miss Young gave an address on band work in New Ontario which was very much enjoyed. Mrs. J. A. Chapman read a very interesting letter from Miss Myers, of India. The pastor gave an address on Business Methods in Circle Work. Port Elgin circle was well represented and a number of visitors had a very enjoyable time. A liberal offering was taken. Lunch served at close.

Port Elgin Tribunal Has Few Calls

Port Elgin Military Tribunal, Warden Izzard and Donald Gillies, had only one call on the first three days, but on Monday, Tuesday and to day the Registrar made a regular allotment of work of ten cases, the same number being tried by all tribunals.

To-morrow (Thursday) the work increases to 25 cases.

The only man to call on the Tribunal the first three days was Allan MacDonald, who had just returned from the west.

When asked by Mr. Izzard if he desired to apply for exemption or report for service he replied:

"I will do whatever the authorities desire. If I am of more service in France with a gun I'm willing to go," said the young man in a very frank and business-like way.

Mr. Gillies inquired as to the age of the father, the brothers and their ages, number of acres, etc, and the applicant was later notified by letter and given transportation to Harriston where he will be examined to-day.

MONDAY'S CLAIMS

Exemptions Granted—Wellington Avis farmer; Henry Dent, physical infirmity; Gordon Eaton, physically unfit; Cecil Vanwyck, Class C., Archie MacKay, blacksmith (conditional); R. J. Gatis, (conditional).

Exemptions Disallowed—A. E. Yeomans, Thos. Stewart, Henry C Wipp.

Omissions in Red Cross Canvass report are noted as follows: Tom Swalwell $5, H. McGillivray $2.

Mr. B. Hilker reports a pair of bush rubbers taken from in front of his store. Mr. W. J. McCullough reports a fine black minorca rooster missing from his pens.

Ptes. R. L. Seaman, grandson of Dr. McClurr; Larson J. Hargreaves, nephew of Mrs. Rowlands, and Harold Bronson, are among the wounded.

Wm. Atkinson Port Elgin Gets First Victory Bond

The first subscriber to the Victory Loan in Port Elgin was Mr. William Atkinson. The canvassers were out promptly at 9 a m Monday and on calling on Mr. Atkinson started to explain their mission. "You don't need to explain," said he I know there is no security in the world to beat it. The interest is good and I want $2000, worth of it, so sign me up." Mr Atkinson is 72 years of age but had read all about the Loan and was familiar with it.

The women's institute meeting at Mrs Wismer's on Thursday was well attended, and a very enjoyable afternoon spent also the buying of a flag was discussed The idea is to have a flag raised in honor of our soldier boys from town and country, when they leave for overseas, or for any time needed. Contributions are asked from town or country for this worthy purpose. All contributions should be handed to Mrs. Wismer, convener of committee.

Provincial Meeting For Victory Loan

David Robertson, K. C., of Walkerton Mr. Leach, of Chesley, and Mr. E. R. Sayles, of Port Elgin represented Bruce County at Toronto on Tuesday last at a big meeting of men from all over the province, called for the purpose of taking up plans which will see that every person in province will not have it to say that he or she does not know about the Victory Bond

On Monday morning the campaign began, and from one end of Canada to the other, publicity committees are using every conceivable means to make it impossible for anyone to look anywhere without seeing the words "Victory Bond".

Mr. Robertson and Mr. MacKay of Walkerton, have Bruce county well organized, and news from the canvassers are that people are taking up the bonds eagerly.

The great publicity campaign takes in the preaching of sermons, public meetings, electrical signs, moving picture shows, window displays, great posters, stickers, auto decoration, scholars and teachers are to help, in fact every man, woman, boy and girl, is expected to boost the Victory Loan It's a patriotic duty, as much as anything that has ever been done in connection with this war.

Canada must raise the cash. Will you help.

Arthur Christian Killed in France

Word was received by Mrs. Christian that her son Arthur had been killed in France. No particulars are to hand.

Corp. Christian won the Military Cross for bravery with his machine gun company.

Corp. Christian was an employee with the Stevens Hepner Co. and a young man well known and well-liked. He was one of the first volunteers and has served through all the big battles finally laying down his life in defence of the, principles of justice and democracy.

The Enumerators

Messrs. Thos. Swalwell and Court Curtis have been selected as enumerators for Port Elgin for election purposes.

Saugeen—Messrs. S. Tracter, H. Nelson, Harb Fenton, R. McKechnie, J. B. Lyness.

Bruce—Dan McIntosh, J. B. Richardson, John Nuttall, Thos. White, Thos. Currie, John C. Kennedy.

Arran—Messrs. J. D. Potts, F. H. King, Robert Neill, Jas. Crawford, Jr., Johnson, John Montgomery.

The duties of enumerating will be hard and responsible, A thorough canvass will have to be made of every resident to ensure proper and fair lists.

In Ontario rural districts, villages, and towns of less than 9,000 population, 1916 revised Provincial voter's lists must be used. The only additions will be the names of the wives, widows, mothers, sisters, or daughters "of any person, male or female, living or dead, who is serving or has served without Canada in any of the naval forces, of Canada or of Great Britain in the present war." These women voters must, of course, be British subjects and qualified as to age, race, and residence as required in the case of male persons. The enumerators must also strike off the conscientious objectors to combatant service, the citizens of enemy alien birth naturalized since March 31, 1902, and the other classes disqualified by the Act.

Count that day lost whose low descending sun finds in your hand no Victory Bond, or gun.

EGG FACTORY SECRETS.

Furnish Reason for Scarcity of Eggs in Chinese Stores.

Imagine yourself residing in the province of Kiangsu, China. One morning you are out for your constitutional and feeling a bit curious to familiarize yourself with the interior of the Chinese "general store," you drop into one of those institutions. You must inquire for eggs, else the hypothesis is to no avail. You ask for a dozen fresh eggs. What? They haven't that many in stock? How surprising!

This is, of course, only a hypothesis, but there is no reason in the world why it might not happen in real life. As a matter of fact, the Chinese merchant who handles more than a dozen eggs at one time is a rare article. It isn't because he doesn't want to carry the eggs; the real reason is a much better one than that. He can't get them.

Should you wake up in China some morning and follow the above itinerary it is quite possible that you might see long lines of "coolies" jogging along the highway, balancing large wicker baskets on their heads. Once more your curiosity gets the better of you, and you stop one of them and ask what is in the basket. The answer will be "eggs," and if you press him for further information as to the number of eggs in the basket he might tell you anywhere from 500 to 800.

And now for the egg factory. If you have read this far and will continue for a moment you will absorb the knowledge of something which many of the residents of China know nothing about. It is a fact that there are hundreds and thousands of persons born and brought up in a Chinese city, perhaps within a stone's throw of an egg factory, who are ignorant of the existence of the industry, let alone the factory.

The daily capacity of the average egg factory is something over 100,000 eggs. The first step in the manufacturing process is to separate the yolks from the whites. Women are employed of this purpose. That these women become marvellously efficient may be illustrated by the fact that each woman handles 2,000 eggs per day, and at that she is finished with her day's work by noon. Incidentally the price for handling 2,000 eggs is approximately 5 cents. The woman takes the egg from the basket and as she picks it up she breaks the shell on the side of the basket. Then she empties the contents of the shell into her other hand. This action is reversed, and the yolk and white are separated.

The yolks are churned until the mass is of one solid color, and it is then strained through four or five sieves. Preservation is of more importance than delicacy of taste, and for this reason borax is mixed with the yolks to preserve them. After straining, the yolks are poured into large vats, twenty feet long, and three or four feet deep. There they are allowed to rest for a few days in order that they may settle. Once they have thoroughly settled, a white foam which rises to the top is skimmed off, and the residue, a deep yellow, slightly thicker than the cream, is sealed in wooden barrels and is ready for shipment.

The treatment of the whites is more involved and more interesting. They, like the yolks, are churned and put into large hogsheads, where they undergo the process of fermentation. The time occupied in this process varies from five days to two weeks, the fermentation proceeding more rapidly in warm weather. The fermentation causes the more volatile constituents of the albumens to rise to the surface, and the usable part of the albumens is therefore drawn off from the bottom of the hogshead. In appearance this portion is not unlike skimmed milk. This is then mixed with a small portion of ammonia and is poured into small pans which are very shallow in depth. The pans are taken to the evaporating room, where they are piled up in tiers of shelves reaching six or seven feet. The ammonia, of course, aids somewhat in the process of evaporation, but heat is also necessary. The method of supplying this heat is unique in its simplicity. Flues of brick wind their way through the evaporating room, and these are fired from the outside, causing the heat to circulate uniformly through the room.

Evaporation is accomplished very quickly. Workmen are able to pass through the evaporating room, but the heat is such that they cannot remain there long.

When the evaporation process is finished, the result is a pleasing product. Odorless and perfectly dry, it comes from the pans in crinkled sheets of a clear, transparent amber, that readily crumbles on being pressed or handled. After being thoroughly cooled it is packed in air-tight tins and is ready for market.

That the business is a profitable one is shown by the fact that no less an authority than the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce lists the importation of "egg products" from China to the amount of $1,203,945 for the eleven months ending in November, 1916. Compare these figures with the annual imports of these products into the United States for 1912—$43,000—and one will readily see the industry is a progressive one.—Exchange.

THE DEADLIEST POISON.

Curaro, Whose Secret is Known Only to the Abors of India.

The cranks who not so long ago conspired to murder Premier Lloyd George were going to employ curare, the kind made by the Abor tribesmen of India, which is the deadliest poison known to man.

It is believed in London, where curare has been extensively studied, that its chief ingredients are snake venom and certain distillations from decayed corpses. It is asserted that the Abor tribesmen test the strength of curare by injecting a little into a vigorous tree. If all the leaves of the tree do not fall off within twenty-four hours the poison is considered inefficacious.

The Abors use curare in a simple, primitive way. They dip their arrow tips in the fresh poison. The slightest scratch from one such arrow tip means certain and immediate death.

FIFTEEN YEARS' USE OF BABY'S OWN TABLETS

Thousands of mothers keep a box of Baby's Own Tablets in the house as long as there are little ones about. Among them is Mrs. Marcel D. Le Blanc, Memramcook West, N. B., who says: "For the past fifteen years I have never been without Baby's Own Tablets. Whenever any of my children are ailing the Tablets promptly relieve them. I have such faith in them that I never hesitate in recommending them to any of my friends who have little ones in the home." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

One Man's Prayer.

Out in Kansas there is a man named Homer McKee. He wrote a prayer, and it was printed in the State Board of Health Bulletin. The Bulletin fails to identify Mr. McKee further than to publish his name. Which is enough in a way, for the prayer speaks for the man. Here it is:

Teach me that sixty minutes make an hour, sixteen ounces one pound, and 100 cents $1.

Help me to live that I can lie down at night with a clear conscience, without a gun under my pillow, and unhaunted by the faces of those to whom I have brought pain.

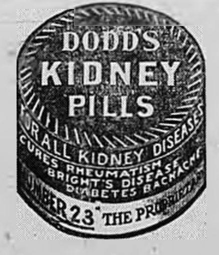
Grant, I beseech thee, that I may earn my meal ticket on the square, and in doing thereof that I may not stick the gaff where it does not belong.

Blind me to the faults of the other fellow, but reveal to me my own.

Keep me young enough to laugh with the children, and to lose myself in their play.

And then, when comes the smell of flowers, and the tread of soft steps, and the crushing of the hearse's wheels in the gravel out in front of my place, make the ceremony short and the epitaph simple.

Ted—I suppose you can hardly stand him now that he is so rich. Ned—That's so. Since he won an auto he blows his horn more than ever.—Town Topics.



BIG MONEY IN OIL

The Oil Industry is booming. The ever increasing demand for Gasoline and Lubricating Oil, which are refined from Crude Oil, has forced the price of Crude Oil at the well in some instances as much as

300 PER CENT. IN A FEW MONTHS

New oil fields are being opened up. Drilling for oil is being carried on as never before. Oil leases bought for a song a few months ago are increasing in value almost daily. Payment of hundreds or thousands of dollars per acre for land worth practically nothing a year ago is to-day a common occurrence.

Meats in War Time

whom the high cost of foods, created by unusual demands on our country's supply, does not particularly affect take to demanding cheaper cuts of meat thus increasing demand for them the prices will naturally go higher than if the demand is equalized.

For those who must economise for personal financial reasons the less expensive cuts of meat can be made into splendid dishes.

BEEF CUTS TO BUY.

For stews and soup buy a shank, plate, neck or chuck piece. In making soup brown and meat first and then put it to cook in boiling water. Keep it at the simmering point until meat is tender. By this method you have meat for a stew or ragout and the stock for soup. If you put the meat to cook in cold water you extract all the flavor, leaving the real food in the meat but with no flavor.

It is better economy to add cereal and vegetables to the soup stock prepared in the first way. Thus you will have a nutritious main dish for two meals.

Our eating to-day is based not only on the fundamental principle "to live" but also on the democratic principle "to let live." Thus it is that no matter how little we need to economize personally, we are willing to forego the pleasures of indulging in foods that are scarce, merely to satisfy a personal whim as to flavor.

We are emphatically requested by the United States Food Administration to use less of certain meats so that the soldiers may have the necessary amount to keep them fit for the strenuous work of the trenches.

The simplest way for each family to co-operate in this patriotic movement is for the members to agree together on one day a week to have a meat substitute. It will be found entirely practical and possible by the average home manager to reduce the amount of each meat serving.

Those families financially able should continue to buy the so-called choicest cuts. That is the loins, rib roasts, sirloin and porterhouse steaks, tenderloins and sweetbreads. If there shoulder clod. Steaks from the two last coarser cuts should be well seared and then allowed to simmer with seasoning and vegetables and just enough water to cover, until tender.

For roasting purposes buy cuts from the rump, sixth and seventh rib, short ribs and chucks. These cuts should first be put into a very hot oven or should be thoroughly seared on the skillet before going into the oven. This keeps the juices in. Then roast the meat slowly, basting very often. These cuts are delicious cooked with vegetables. That is, sear the cut thoroughly, lay in the roasting pan and surround with carrots, potatoes, turnips and a few slices of onions previously prepared.

For pot roasts, buy cuts from the shank, rump, plate, chuck, neck or shoulder clod. Sear the meat, browning it well before covering it, with boiling water.

USING UP LEFT-OVERS

Any left-over pieces of beef, ham mutton or pork can easily be turned into a "made dish" that will take the place of another meat order for the next day. Run the meat through the chopper or cut into small cubes. Mix with canned or cooked hominy, salt, pepper, chopped green pepper and a little white sauce. Cold cooked rice may be used in place of hominy.

FOR MEATLESS DAYS.

So long as the family is provided with the necessary tissue building material it makes no particular difference excepting with regard to flavor and supply which of the tissue building foods one uses.

KANDY.

Old-Time Capital of Ceylon is Picturesque.

The old-time capital of Ceylon is a city rich with the usual picturesqueness of the East, and having two or three unusual points about it as well. In Kandy you will find the Rodaya caste, one of the few Buddhist castes whose origin is a matter of history. Kandy, too, contains the most sacred object in the Orient, no less a relic than a tooth of Buddha. These two features are Kandy's principal claims to fame and interest.

It is written that the Rodaya had their origin in the sentence pronounced by an old-time king, who charged that they served his table with the flesh of pigs instead of the flesh of deer. For this crime he made them the lowest of all casts, and their lot has not been a happy one. There are perhaps five hundred of them left to-day; they may be seen daily around the outskirts of Kandy. They are not allowed to live in houses, but inhabit miserable lean-tos. They have no recourse to native courts of justice, although under the English law they are not discriminated against. They may not use a bridge, but have to swim all streams. They must kneel when addressing the higher castes. When the shadow of one of them falls upon food, the food cannot be eaten.

Generations of this organized outcastery have naturally enough driven the Rodaya into all manner of objectionable h[illegible]. They are not nice about their bill of fare, nor overparticular about the ten commandments. The men are an unlovely crew, but the women, strangely enough, are among the comeliest in Ceylon. Men and women, they are incurable wanderers and vagabonds.

The Rodaya are a pretty clear case of people who have been made what they are by persecution. There is something ironical in their worship outside the great temple—they are not admitted within—for it stands for the system that cast them down. The temple shields what is believed to be a tooth of the Buddha himself. The fact that the tooth in question is two inches long and an inch in diameter casts a certain amount of doubt upon the authenticity of this belief.

TREE TALK.

About nine million acres out of a total of 210 million acres in Quebec Province are under agricultural development. The chief crop of the remaing 200 million acres is and will always be timber, for the reason that the soil is unfitted for tillage.

More than two-thirds of the technical foresters in Canada in 1914 have seen military service at the front. The enlistment of forest rangers has likewise been heavy.

The use of hydro-aeroplanes for detection of forest fires is being considered by certain governmental and private interests in Canada.

In order to save for the Indians of Canada their large timber holdings against loss of forest fires, the Indian Department at Ottawa is obliging licensees to pile and burn their 'slash' after taking the logs out of the woods. The precaution will save numerous bad fires.

While Canada spends about four millions yearly in studying agricultural problems, only a trifling sum has been spent thus far on the study of forest problems. More than two-thirds of the whole of Canada is better adapted for tree growing than anything else, and will pay profits according to the scientific care bestowed on it.

Spiking the Guns.

The expression "spiking guns" is a survival from the days when all that was necessary to put a gun out of action (provided, of course, that you had access to it) was a large nail or spike and a hammer. You simply drove the nail into the touch hole at the breech. If the nail was long enough to turn round at the end on the bottom of the bore so much the better. It is just as simple, perhaps simpler to put a modern gun out of action. All you want is a hammer. The breech block of the modern gun is held closed by screw threads. After the breech block is shut on the shell a turn of two or three inches engages the threads. By knocking a bur on these threads you prevent them engaging. Any attempt to fire the gun without the breech block being perfectly closed would, of course, be of material assistance to the enemy.

Ode to the Slacker!

What will you say, young man of to-day,
When your son clambers up on your knee,
And with eyes all a-shine, says "Daddy of mine,
In the days when the world was made free,
Oh, what was your part in that wonderful fight,
When the price that men paid was so dire?
What DID you do, Daddy? "I did NOTHING, Lad"
Is THAT what you'll have to reply?"

What will you say, young man of to-day,
When all this earth carnage is done,
If OTHERS have fought your fight and have bought
Your peace from the murderous Hun?
Will you callously care to ask for a share
In what they have anguished to buy?
Or if you could sink to such depths, can you think

You are called on to weight, young man of to-day,
Comparative losses and gains.
Is stoppage of breath as ghastly as death
As LIVING when HONOR is slain?
In that wonderful earth that is coming to birth
The roll will be called by and by,
And each man must declare his right to be there,
WHAT, THEN, WILL YOU HAVE TO REPLY?

Pig and Pickle.

I was a fine big piggy, cavorting round the sty,
Until the price of bacon went up so very high.
Then the farmer sold me at eighteen cents a pound;
I landed in Toronto, and before I looked around,
They cut me up in pieces, and stuck me in the brine,
And though I have no tummy, I'm really [illegible] fine.
They say you'd hardly know me, I've taken on such weight,
And lots of it's just water, which [illegible] evaporate,
But not until they've sold me; when in the frying pan,
That's when you'll see me tearful; I'll shed about a can.
If they ship me o'er the briny (I understand they may),
I guess they will just cure me [illegible]ing that, they say,
I'll keep my weight right over, except, say, two per cent.
If that's all I will suffer, I will be well content.
They sure enough have soaked me, for I am wringing wet;
But, say, friends, that's not in it with the soaking you will get.
They say I'm now worth fifty good solid cents per pound,
Including all the pickle which into me they've ground.
So, friends, think when you eat me, whom they so gaily croaked,
That I am not the only one who's getting surely soaked.

Blind Dogs and Rats.

Canines born blind or that become blind by accident are able to smell and paw their way into the most inaccessible and out of the way places. It is practically impossible to starve them, lose them or trap them. Furthermore, blind dogs learn as quickly as those that see. Loss of sight in no way interferes with their ability to learn tricks, acquire habits or find their bed.

Rats, as a matter of fact, if they use their eyes at all—a doubtful matter—can see little or nothing of the world. The retina of these creatures has no point of perfect vision such as is found in the higher animals and man; hence their noses, muscles, touch and hearing give them information about the world they live in.

ENEMY COULD DO LITTLE IN CANADIAN FIRE

Its Effectiveness Was the Feature of the Taking of Passchendaele.

UNITS WIPED OUT

Awful Tales Told by Captives of the Deadly Gunnery.

Canadian Headquarters in France, Cable.— Over Passchendaele Ridge into the land of the far-reaching Roulers plain Canada has driven the Hun. This afternoon the men of the Dominion are well-established on the crest with Passchendaele village in their hands, and with it a good-sized semi-circle of captured ground. Our wounded are coming down the line exhausted and covered with mud, but jubilant. With them are coming German prisoners, dazed from the terrific nature of our artillery bombardment, worn out from their experiences of the last few hours, and despondent at the loss of Passchendaele, but glad to be relieved of a winter campaign behind Passchendaele.

Eighteen officers and nearly three hundred of other ranks have been taken prisoners by our men, making a total since the beginning of the operations, on Oct. 25th, of more than 35 officers and nearly 900 non-commissioned officers and men. All the prisoners agree that Passchendaele Ridge was to have been held, or, if lost, recaptured at all costs. They all bear testimony to the deadly character of our artillery barrage, testimony of which is borne out by great praise of our own infantry. Our machine-gun fire also was very destructive.

WHOLE COMPANY WIPED OUT.

One prisoner reports his whole company casualties, those who endeavored to run back before our advancing troops being caught in our barrage while others were either killed or taken prisoners.

Another prisoner declares that our barrage was so perfect his regiment suffered "heaviest losses." Ordered to counter-attack, his battalion in this regiment advanced in extended order until within striking distance, but the losses were so enormous they were ordered to retire. On the retreat they were mown down by our machine guns.

In another officer's diary is the significant sentence. "We are in Zilverberg for the fifth day now as the counter-attack division. The artillery fire and mud are frightful. One loses one's boots even; one can hardly move. I pray to God I may be spared." He was spared, but both the statements from prisoners and the testimony of our own men, who declared that the forward areas, covered with the Boche dead, indicate how heavily the enemy suffered.

HELD BOMB TILL EXPLODED.

On our left reports of desperate opposition from a stronghold 75 yards from Meetcheele are not confirmed. Our infantry were on top of the enemy before he could work his guns. So the advance moved on to Mosselmarkt, where real resistance was offered from a nest of concrete strong points. But the Canadians, rushing the position with bombs and bayonets, broke down the defence until the enemy surrendered in numbers. One German officer, seeing his men giving themselves up and realizing that the position could no longer be maintained, held his own bomb in hand until the explosion blew him to pieces.

The most desperate fighting of the day was at Vine Cottage, on the extreme left of our advance. There, after prolonged resistance, from a company, half of our men, who were detailed for this special operation, finally rushed the place, taking 10 prisoners. Such, in brief, is the infantry story of Passchendaele.

FEATURES OF BATTLE.

Three striking facts characterized this morning's battle: the disciplined, irresistible action of our infantry; the striking efficiency of our artillery and the splendid work of our medical services.

Through mud and slime, by night and by day, our guns had been advanced for the day's barrage. It involved heroic work, both from those who toiled with the guns and those who moved back and forth constantly through the shell-swept area, bringing up munitions. But the guns and ammunition were there. More than anything else, the capture of Passchendaele has been an artillery victory.

Before [illegible] this afternoon battalion after battalion had reported and its wounded had been evacuated. No equal record has been made in the history of any of the corps fighting in this salient under such conditions at such a time of year.

The infantry to-day are singing the praises of the medical service, as they are those of the artillery. Stretcher-bearers, in some cases suffering losses of 50 per cent. from the shell fire, persisted steadily in their great work of relief. In the regimental aid posts of the advanced dressing stations, then there down the line to the main dressing stations, and so to the Red Cross trains, the medical officers, striving to expedite the treatment of the wounded, assisted in triumph in the evacuation and established a proud record.

The conditions of to-day's battle on the whole were not as bad as those of October 26 and October 30. When the Canadian advance had gone forward all manner of constructive activity. The narrow gauge railways had been extended, plank roads had been advanced and board walks had been carried forward.

The salient had been active night and day, with men working hour by hour under hell fire bringing up the [illegible] of war, perfecting the medical arrangements and rushing up munitions and food [illegible].

The result of all this is Passchendaele.

PLEDGE TO KAISER

London, Cable.— A despatch to Reuter's Limited, from Athens, [illegible] telegrams which were forwarded to Berlin during the régime of King Constantine has been published. [illegible]

"The King of Greece pledged his word to the German Emperor that in no [illegible] Government [illegible] against the German troops [illegible] Germany and [illegible]."

Another telegram, dated two days later, says the correspondent, explains the presence of Prince Nicholas and Prince Andrew in Petrograd and London had no political character. It says the visits were intended to draw closer the bonds which existed between the royal house of Greece and the courts of London and Petrograd, which of late have been much relaxed."

In latest telegram the correspondent [illegible] King Constantine [illegible].

CLAMED FOR GIRL'S DEATH.

Windsor, Report.— Responsibility for the death of Miss Frances McMarchen, the eighteen-year-old Rodney girl who died at the Hotel Dieu here on October 26 from the effects of a criminal operation, was placed upon Dr. George A. Fritch, of Detroit, according to the verdict rendered by a coroner's jury here to-night. The principal witness was Miss Margaret McMarchen, a sister of the dead girl, whose testimony directly contradicted that of Roy Knight, a Pere Marquette brakeman, who, at the first hearing three weeks ago, disclaimed responsibility.

To feel that he is above criticism and above reproach naturally makes a man feel high-and mighty.

CANADIANS CAPTURED TWO FOE COMMANDERS AND STAFFS

London Cable.— Field Marshal Haig's report from Flanders to-night reads: "During the day the work of organizing our new positions at Passchendaele and on the high ground to the north of the village continued without interruption from the enemy. In spite of the great importance which it is known the enemy attached to this commanding locality, no hostile reaction has yet followed its capture.

"Over 400 prisoners, including 2[illegible] officers, were taken by us in our attack yesterday, so far as has been reported. Our losses in this highly successful operation were very light."

British Front in Belgium, Cable.— Two German battalion commanders and their staffs were taken prisoner by the Canadians yesterday when Passchendaele fell. In the capture of one of these commanders probably lies a partial explanation of the failure of the enemy to launch a counter-attack against the village at a time when it would have stood most chance of success—before the British had begun their concentration.

This man was the commander of a reserve battalion, which had been brought up for the express purpose of counter-attacking. He and his staff had come into Passchendaele to consult with the battalion chief commanding the troops in the village, and when both these commanders and their subordinates were taken their troops were left without a commander. Consequently the reserve battalion appears to have waited in a state of indecision for the return of its leaders, and never ventured forward.

The two commanders, with their staffs, were in a conference in a concrete pillbox when the Canadians entered.

The attacking forces swept by the pill-box, and nobody thought to examine it. As a result the German officers were left in peace. They remained in their safe hiding place until four o'clock in the afternoon, when the Germans became uneasy, thinking they all would be killed if found in the pill-box. Accordingly they came out and surrendered.

FAILED TO ATTACK.

At least three small bodies of Germans turned up in different places in the afternoon, apparently for counter-attacks against the new line, but in each case the British artillery nipped the proposed adventure in the bud.

The Canadians are more or less protected from counter-attacks on their right by a wide sweep of marshy ground lying south of Passchendaele.

However, there is ample opportunity for the Germans to come at them from the north. The fact that the enemy has not made a big assault does not prove he will not, and a vigorous attempt to retake the lost position is not unexpected.

The hottest fighting yesterday developed on the left of the Canadian line at the German stronghold known as Vine Cottage, near Goeberg. This place was strongly held by machine-guns and the ground about the redoubt was very marshy and difficult to traverse. The Canadians stormed the fort and a sharp conflict ensued at close quarters. The redoubt finally was forced to surrender and forty Germans were made prisoner.

There was very little hand-to-hand fighting yesterday, the Germans depending mainly on long distance machine-gun fire for defence.

Upwards of 400 prisoners were in the Canadian cages this morning, and five field guns had been accounted for. The German losses again were very heavy, while those of the Canadians were comparatively light. Many Germans were killed by their own barrage fire.

The rain of this morning ceased and bright sunshine came during the afternoon, making aerial observations much easier and smoothing the way for the troops who got a thorough drenching last night.

FORMED A SQUARE.

Paris Cable. (Reuter despatch) The correspondent of the Petit Parisien on the British front says: "Passchendaele is the crowning of a nightmare of struggle and the attainment of an end. The effort of our Allies is affirmed and the superiority of their guns is proved," the correspondent continues. "The Germans have been defeated and dislodged from the heights from which they overlooked our lines. They have been overthrown from the sands and comparatively dry summits into the marshes of the plain.

"It was the Canadians who, supported by drumfire, entered at the charge into Passchendaele in a formidable rush and occupied the positions there. They then had to form a sort of square so as to face on all sides at once the Germans who hurried up from all quarters. Furious hand-to-hand encounters took place near the church. Three times the Germans retired from the struggle. They had been given orders to retake the church, and hold it to the death, and large numbers fell in the attempt.

"But the task of the Canadians was not yet complete. They had to fight from house to house and were compelled to shell the mayor's residence. A Prussian major who had taken up his quarters there had a dugout 20 yards below the ground, consisting of three rooms panelled with wood, one of which, serving as a dining room, was painted white with a red border. On a large marble table, which had been stolen from some chateau, a cup of coffee was still steaming. His dressing case was lying open, a map was laid out, clothes were lying about and everything testified to the precipitate haste with which the officer had fled. In ascending the sixty steps leading from his dugout, the major had let fall his iron cross and had not picked it up. He had come out as soon as the first fugitives brought news of their defeat."

IS NOW A MEMORY.

(By R. T. Small, Staff Correspondent of the Associated Press.)

British Front in Belgium, Cable.— Even Marshal von Hindenburg's stern edict that if the Germans lost Passchendaele village it must be retaken at all costs, had not stirred his beaten back troops to action up to this morning.

The intrepid Canadians were still standing, as they had for twenty hours, along a line well beyond this vital point, although rain-drenched and shivering under the biting autumn wind in their muddy fastnesses.

Every hour made the British positions on the fronts of Passchendaele, Mosselmarkt and Goeberg stronger, for the work of consolidation proceeded apace during most of yesterday and all of last night.

Passchendaele, whose spires not long ago showed picturesquely against the sky from their elevated position, is now a memory. The little hamlet has all but disappeared under the deluge of shells. It was not the village that counted, however, but its enviable site.

From it one can see a great distance out across occupied Belgium, and the possibilities for artillery work here are wide in scope.

Its loss threatens the retention by the Germans of their defences for many miles. Field Marshal Haig and the Canadians on the spot are watching to see what the enemy's next move may be.

Rain continued to fall to-day, rendering the task of keeping up communications still more difficult, but the British engineers appear capable of coping with any situation. Military movements were proceeding steadily during the day over the vile ground below the ridges.

HAVE REACHED THE LIVENZA

Teutons Claim to Be Up to New Italian Line.

Military Crisis Being Solved With Ally Aid.

Rome Cable.— "On the effectiveness with which a reconcentration can be carried out on the newly-chosen Italian front depends the issue of the military movement now in progress in Italy. The reconcentration is developing with reasonable promptness, considering the magnitude of the reorganization necessary after the recent retreat of the enemy's pressure," writes the Associated Press correspondent on the Italian front. According to to-night's German official communication the invaders have reached the line of the Livenza River on the Venetian plains. It was to this line that Cadorna announces his troops have been withdrawn after the abandonment of the defence of the Tagliamento.

A semi-official statement says: "The retreat caused a military crisis which gradually is being solved by the assembling of troops on a previously-established line and by the rushing up of Anglo-French forces. While this is being done fighting is going on all the time so as to delay as much as possible the advance of the Austro-Germans, who desire to take advantage of the situation."

"The text of the Berlin statement reads: "On the Venetian Plain the Livenza line has been reached. During the pursuit several thousand prisoners were taken."

U.S. MISSION IN ENGLAND TO AID WAR

To Attend Coming Most Important Conference of the Allies.

UNIFY THE FORCES

And Attain More Vigorous Prosecution of the Struggle.

Washington Report.— An American mission landed in England to-day on the eve of the opening of the first great war conference in which the United States will participate.

Colonel Edward M. House, President Wilson's personal friend and adviser, is the officially designated representative of the United States. He is accompanied by a staff representing every war agency in the United States, including Admiral Benson, Chief of Naval Operations, and General Bliss, Chief of Staff of the army. Secretary Lansing said to-day: "The Government of the United States will participate in the approaching conference of the powers waging war against the German Empire, and has sent as its representative Mr. Edward M. House, who is accompanied by Admiral W. S. Benson, Chief of Naval Operations; General Tasker H. Bliss, Chief of Staff, United States army; Oscar T. Crosby, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; Vance C. McCormick, chairman of the War Trade Board; Bainbridge Colby, United States Shipping Board; Dr. Alonzo E. Taylor, representing the Food Controller; Thomas Nelson Perkins, representing Priority Boards; and Gordon Auchincloss, Assistant Secretary.

"The conference is essentially a war conference, with the object of perfecting a more complete co-ordination of the activities of the various nations engaged in the conflict and the more comprehensive understanding of their respective needs in order that the joint effort of the co-belligerents may attain the highest war efficiency. While a definite programme has not been adopted, it may be assumed that subjects to be discussed will embrace not only those pertaining to military and naval operations, but also the financial, commercial, economic and other phases of the present situation which are of vital importance to the successful prosecution of the war."

"There will undoubtedly be an effort to avoid any conflict of interests among the participants, and there is every reason to anticipate that the results will be fuller co-operation, and consequently a much higher efficiency and a more vigorous prosecution of the war.

"The United States, in the employment of its man power and material resources, desires to use them to the greatest advantage against Germany. It has been no easy problem to determine how they can be used most effectively, since the independent presentation of requirements by the allied Governments has been more or less conflicting on account of each Government's appreciation of its own wants, which are necessarily given greater importance than the wants of other Governments. By a general survey of the whole situation, and a free discussion of the needs of all the approaching conference will undoubtedly be able to give the demands of the several Governments their true perspective and proper place in the general plans for the conduct of the war.

"Though the resources of this country are vast, and though there is every purpose to devote them all, if need be, to winning the war, they are not without limit. But even if they were greater, they should all be used to the highest advantage in attaining the supreme object for which we are fighting. This can only be done by a full and frank discussion of the plans and needs of the various belligerents. It is the earnest wish of this Government to employ its military and naval forces and its resources and energy where they will give the greatest return in advancing the common cause. The exchange of views which will take place at the conference and the conclusions reached will be of the highest value in preventing waste of energy and in bringing into harmony the activity of the nations which have been unavoidably acting in a measure independently."

A VILLA MASSACRE.

Bandit's Followers Kill 125 On a Train.

Juarez, Mexico, Report.— With blood-stained floors, shattered windows, and coaches crowded with frightened Mexican men, women and children, who were shivering half-naked in the bullet-broken seats, the Mexican Central passenger train which was attacked by Villa followers at Armendariz Station Sunday, arrived here to-night. One hundred and twenty-five soldiers and passengers were killed on the train.

The train passengers were still so badly frightened they could only tell disconnected stories of what occurred Sunday morning on the desert 50 miles south of Chihuahua City. The locomotive and two cars of the train were completely wrecked by the dynamite which had been placed on the track. The [illegible] train guards from the Federal garrison at Torreon were either killed during the attack or executed soon after. Everyone on the train was robbed and made to disrobe, even the clothing of the women and children having been taken by the Villa followers [illegible].

NEAR FAMINE.

Teutonic Food Shortage is Very Pronounced.

London Cable (Reuter Despatch)— Sir Arthur Yapp, director of food economy, in a speech delivered to-day, said that while Britain's food position was serious, the position of the Central Powers was still more serious. The only commodity Germany had in any degree resembling us was potatoes, of which the allowance was seven pounds per head weekly. There was no tea in Germany, he said. The weekly rations in Germany were: Bread or flour, five pounds for a person doing heavy work and 4 1-4 pounds for others; meat, 9 ounces; sugar, 6 ounces; butter, 2 1-2 ounces; while only 20 eggs were allowed to each person yearly.

SOFT COAL FAMINE.

Operators Confer in U. S. Capital to Remedy It.

Washington Report.— Directors of the National Coal Association, representing bituminous coal operators with a yearly output of 250,000,000 tons, met here to-day to frame a comprehensive programme for dealing with the threatened coal shortage.

Primary consideration will be given to co-operation with the railways to obtain an adequate car supply and quicker movement of cars when loaded. Reports from eastern and middle western coal fields indicate that the car shortage has reduced the output of these mines from two-thirds to three-fourths of their capacity. There is every indication, according to directors of the association, that cold weather will further will reduce output, unless immediate remedial steps are taken and that serious embarrassment to all users of bituminous coal, including public utilities plants supplying eastern cities with light and power, will result.

TO ORGANIZE ENTIRE WORLD AGAINST HUN

Allied Conference in London Last Week One of Most Important Yet.

SAVE ITALY FIRST

With Disaster Averted There, Foe Expected to Submit Next Spring.

London Cable.— It is now known that last week's conferences of the Allied political and military leaders in London were among the most important of the entire war. Not only was the Italian situation discussed with reference to immediate relief measures, but plans for the co-operation and unification of all military, naval and economic operations are understood to have been considered in a preliminary way. Particular attention is expected to be directed, whenever the Italian situation is less absorbing, to the huge problem of closely organizing practically the entire world outside the Central Empires in a league designed to bring to bear universal financial and material resources against the Teutons. The scheme involves reciprocal community relations between countries possessing capacity to provide particular necessities, whether of food, industrial products, man-power or financial capacity. In short, it represents a gigantic project of literally mobilizing an organized world against Germany. It is unknown what preliminary work has heretofore been done in this connection and how long will be required to work out such a scheme among the nations or the extent to which the Governments have roughly acquiesced in the plan. Only the general intimations of such enterprise have thus far been given out.

The Italian situation continues to be regarded as grave in view of the Austrians crossing the Tagliamento and continuing to exert the extremest pressure against the Italians. Reports agree that the French and English were remarkably successful in hurrying reinforcements to Italy, where they were received with great enthusiasm by the people and soldiers. The French authorities are credited with especial promptness and efficiency in hurrying effectives south.

LARGE AMERICAN FORCES.

There is much variety of opinion as to what disposition will be made of the American forces now in Europe, some circumstantial reports indicating that the numbers are already vastly greater than is commonly known either here or in America. That Germany is making extreme efforts to win a spectacular success in Italy preparatory to a new peace bid is everywhere accepted. In this connection significance is attached to Dutch reports that Austro-Germany is preparing an upward revision of war aims and demands in case of success in Italy. These stories are undoubtedly inspired as in the past. It is a German game designed to frighten the people, if not the Governments, of the Allied countries, and cause the masses of the people to fear a very long war and strengthen the hands of the pacifists everywhere. If such is the purpose all indications are that it will be a failure. British labor is strongly supporting the war policy, as indicated in the result of the strike ballot of the South Wales miners, where a proposal to strike was overwhelmingly defeated without serious outside urging, because the miners are convinced that it is nationally necessary that the industry shall proceed. Likewise in Italy and France political bickerings have been placed in the background in face of the peril of the allies' cause.

There is a universal determination to exert the utmost strength to resist the blow. Germany's internal necessities have dictated the greatest military effort ever organized in the hope of ending the war before the winter. The Allied Governments are convinced that if Germany's supreme effort fails, especially if another Marne and Verdun can be accomplished in Venetia, the Central Empires may present possible peace proposals before spring. The Italian thrust, in fact, brings the war for the first time into the phase of a contest of endurance wherein the Allies, knowing Germany's desperate straits in reference to several vital necessities, believe an Allied victory is certain if only a military disaster is averted in the immediate future.

HAMMERING BULGAR FRONT.

Paris Cable.— The French War Office report referring to operations in the eastern theatre read:

"The British artillery [illegible] the enemy front between Lake Doiran and the Vardar. The enemy artillery [illegible] intermittently against our lines east of the Vardar. Enemy [illegible] were dispersed in the neighborhood of [illegible] and the Cerna Bend."

SEVENTH AUSTRIAN WAR LOAN.

Copenhagen, Cable.— The seventh Austrian war loan will bear interest at [illegible] per cent., and will be issued at [illegible], [illegible] in forty years, according to a Vienna despatch to the "Vossische Zeitung" of Berlin. Subscribers will receive a bonus of [illegible] per cent., and the bank will give a commission of one-half of one per cent., so that the loan will [illegible] the Government approximately 9[illegible].

IMPORTANT BRITISH DECISION.

London, Cable.— An important request has been made to the English Exemption Tribunals by the Ministry of National Service, which has just taken recruiting from the control of the military authorities. The tribunals are asked not to give conditional exemption for a longer period than four months. Those hitherto exempted [illegible] than four months [illegible] and that every exempted man should appear before the tribunal and re-establish his claim to exemption three times yearly. It is asserted that the military has often had great difficulty in tracing men granted indefinite exemptions.

Henri Bourassa has decided to follow Laurier. Sir Wilfrid, of course, cannot help this.

If you want to maintain the operation of factories and the demand for farm produce than you will need to buy a Victory Bond. Put all your savings in these Bonds. All this money is to be spent absolutely in Canada. Help yourself by buying Victory Bonds.

It was announced last week that 32 out of the 37 counties in Ontario have adopted the county roads system. The total mileage scheduled for good roads is 7,500. Nearly 2300 miles of improved highways have already been completed. Bruce county was a tail-ender in the movement, but it's there. In a short time — probably after the January elections—the five remaining counties will be in line.

The best pledge of the Dominion of Canada to pay is a Canadian Victory Bond; better than checks or bills—as good as wheat! Suppose you change that twenty bags of wheat on your waggon, not into a check or notes or even gold; but into Canadian Victory Bonds of $50 each, bearing interest at five and one-half per cent. per annum and as negotiable on the market as the best check or the best load of wheat you ever saw ? It's worth considering.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier made a great appeal in Quebec last week urging every French Canadian to get into the great war in an heroic effort to beat Germany. He declared that he believed in the voluntary plan of service, but nevertheless he believes in service. There is no doubt but that the Old Chieftain's appeal will help greatly the workings of the military service act in Quebec. The impression he has created throughout Canada in calling upon French-Canadains to serve in defence of our country, has put a new interpretation on the manifesto he recently issued.

At a recent gathering of teachers, the revival of the curfew bell was advocated. One prominent principal in attendance said that the running on the streets at night had unfitted boys and girls for their duties at school, and that the curfew bell would at least send them to their homes at the proper hour, whether they went to bed or not. Boys and girls going to school needed plenty of sleep, but not the kind of sleep that was allowed them by going to bed at 11 and 12 o'clock night and in the morning rushing them off to school in no fit condition to take up their tasks. Apparently early to bed and early to rise is still a good old motto, and although the present generation may think it old-fashioned, it was the rule that gave strong bodies, clear minds and made men and women of integrity and principle.

Union Government

There are still many things hard to understand about the union government. It is not quite clear how a straight Conservative nominee can claim to be "the" union government candidate, any more than a straight Liberal nominee, for it is supposed to be a fifty-fifty government. It would seem to us that only men nominated by a fusion convention of official Liberals and Conservatives can rightfully claim that honor.

Fine Address

Those who did not attend the Bible Society meeting on Wednesday night in the Presbyterian church missed a very interesting and instructive opportunity.

Dr. Hassard was the speaker, and altho only about 80 people were present, there was a feast of information, very pleasingly and impressively given. A feature was the use, by Dr. Hassard, of a blackboard on which he traced the origins of various languages in the world. The Bible in 600 languages showed the great progress of the Bible Society. The work of the Missionary was dependent on the Bible Society, and without it many people of all nationalities would be without the Word of God. Thousands upon thousands of portions of God's Word, translated in the languages of the world, were given away freely. This was some of the work of the society.

Collectors will canvass this district, as usual. It's a great cause. all should share in supporting it.

Rev. Mr. Mann presided at the meeting.

Light by Motor

To the Editor of The Times:

Sir :—We have had one month's trial of electric light on the motor system, and the experiment has resulted in a good deal of comment, favorable and adverse, on the part of the patrons of the Saugeen Electric Light and Power Company. From general expressions that I have overheard by groups of citizens in shops and on the street I judge that the trial has proved fairly satisfactory to most people, with the exception of one of the questionable methods employed by the company for revenue purposes, I refer to the "floor space" plan on which the minimum payment per month is based. To show what quality of imposition this is I will need to give you a few examples to draw comparisons and conclusions from. Here they are. One house contains 2200 feet of floor space; another 1100 feet. The former is taxed 66 cents per month for meter service, the latter 33 cents, or half, though both houses may be using the same number of lights and consuming the same volume of current. Is there any logical reason why the one should be charged double that of the other for the same service ? Good business would dictate that if 33 cents is a proper and just charge in the one case it must be in the other. The difference in the charge between these two houses, for the same meter service, I repeat, figures approximately to $4.00 per year. And there are houses where there is still greater difference. By what system of reasoning or figuring can the company justify itself in imposing a discrimination of say $2.00 to $6.00 per year on some of us and giving us absolutely no value for that money ? To talk about floor space or to quote Hydro Electric as a precedent is no answer to these questions. Favorable acquaintance with the gentlemen composing the company makes it hard to believe that they would want to be high handed or wilfully unreasonable. Yet here are the facts staring us in the face. If the company or some one else will give a satisfactory negative answer, the writer will be pleased to apologize for the appearance of this letter.

Yours for equal rights,
J. H. Wismer

A Great Sale

Auctioneer Cavin had the privilege of officiating at a great sale on November 1st. It was the auction sale of stock etc. of Mr. John D. McArthur, con. 1 Saugeen.

There was a very large crowd present, buyers coming as far away as Galt. Some of the cattle sold as follows :

Lady Ramsden a fine smooth, red, 2-year-old heifer, to Reeve Christie for $230.

Julie R, a splendid 4-year old roan, to Noah Etsweiler for $285.

Mary of Wales, a good type of Durham, went to William Airth for $220.

The other cows were all bought at prices from $185 to $225.

Stock bull 4 years old, to Harry Rudolph for $230.

Bull calves, 4 weeks to 11 months, sold from $140 to $160. Seven ewes went to John A. Howe at $30 each. The buyers were Messrs G. Christie, J. McArthur, Etsweiler, Airth, L. Cobean, Josiah Bell, A. Cormack, W. Cassidy, John McCurdy, Jas. Cameron, R. Gowanlock, G. A. Klegas, Richard Webb, Wm. Barofather, J. A. Cumming, W. H. Rudolph, John A. Howe.

OBITUARY

The hour glass of time ran down on Monday noon and the life of Mr. Valentine Cottrill, Victoria street, passed out. Mr Cottrill suffered a slight stroke of paralysis a few years ago, from which he had to a certain extent recovered, but two weeks ago he was subjected to a second attack and gradually sank from that time. Mr. Cottrill was a man of fine physique, standing six feet in height and weighing nearly two hundred and fifty pounds. He was of a particularly happy and pleasant disposition and always looked upon the bright side of life. Mr. Cottrill was born in Hope, Derbyshire, England, and at the age of twenty-one came to this country, settling at first in the County of Middlesex, where he was married a short time after to Margaret An McMahon. To this happy union a family of four sons, and two daughters survive with the exception of the eldest son, John, of Weston, who died a few years ago. In the year 1875 Mr. Cottrill and family moved to Bruce Township where his wife predeceased him seventeen years ago. About twelve years ago he again married Mrs. Mary Morgan, of Kincardine. Four years ago he moved to Kincardine. The three sons J. B., Port Elgin; Charles Paisley; and George on the old homestead in Bruce, Mrs. Orford, Owen Sound, and Mrs McKinnon, Gresham, were all present at the funeral which was held from his late residence on Wednesday morning to Bale De Dore cemetery and was under the auspices of the Masonic Order of which he was an honorary member of Port Elgin Lodge, No 429, Port Elgin — Kincardine Review.

WONDERFUL STUFF!
LIFT OUT YOUR CORNS

Apply a few drops then lift corns or calluses off with fingers— no pain.

No humbug! Any corn, whether hard, soft or between the toes, will loosen right up and lift out, without a particle of pain or soreness.

This drug is called freezone and is a compound of ether discovered by a Cincinnati man.

Ask at any drug store for a small bottle of freezone, which will cost but a trifle, but is sufficient to rid one's feet of every corn or callus.

Put a few drops directly upon any tender, aching corn or callus. Instantly the soreness disappears and shortly the corn or callus will loosen and can be lifted off with the fingers.

This drug freezone doesn't eat out the corns or calluses but shrivels them without even irritating the surrounding skin.

Just think! No pain at all; no soreness or smarting when applying it or afterwards. If your druggist don't have freezone have him order it for you.

Must Have More Hogs

Reeve James Johnston of Bruce Tp., was one of the men in Bruce County who attended the meeting in Toronto last week, when the Minister of Agriculture placed before men from all over Ontario the necessity of raising more hogs. The meeting was an important one, as a greater amount of pork must be forthcoming. The authorities pointed out that there would be government control on all firms handling hogs, and there would be no chance for profiteers. The men present were asked to carry back to their localities the great necessity and to see to it that all farmers co-operated.

One of the Sibbald Family Gives His Life in France

The Duluth Herald has the following clipping which concerns a former Saugeen family :

A telegram received here this morning by Peter S. Sibbald of 2602 Minnesota avenue announced the death from wounds of his nephew, James Sibbald, in a hospital in either France or England, the telegram not saying which. Another message said that he was killed in action, but that concerning death from wounds came later and is believed to be correct. The young man who was with the One Hundred and Fourth battalion of Canada in France was only 19 years of age. He attended the public schools here until he went with his parents to Fort William, Ont., five years ago. He enlisted in Calgary this year and has been at the front several months. Surviving the young man in Duluth are his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. James L. Sibbald of 212 Ninth Avenue east. One of his brothers, Walter S. Sibbald is a sergeant with the 125th Artillery. Another brother Fred Sibbald, lives at Fort William. A sister Bernice is a nurse in the Kitchener hospital at Brighton, Eng., and another sister, Mrs. Greig, resides in Edmonton, Alta.

LEMONS WHITEN AND BEAUTIFY THE SKIN

Make this beauty lotion cheaply for your face, neck, arms and hands.

At the cost of a small jar of ordinary cold cream one can prepare a full quarter pint of the most wonderful lemon skin softener and complexion beautifier, by squeezing the juice of two fresh lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of orchard white. Care should be taken to strain the juice through a fine cloth so no lemon pulp gets in, then this lotion will keep fresh for months. Every woman knows that lemon juice is used to bleach and remove such blemishes as freckles, sallowness and tan and is the ideal skin softener, whitener and beautifier.

Just try it! Get three ounces of orchard white at any drug store and two lemons from the grocer and make up a quarter pint of this sweetly fragrant lemon lotion and massage it daily into the face, neck, arms and hands. It is marvelous to smoothen rough, red hands.

Get Behind the Wheel of a Ford and Drive

TRY it just once! Ask your friend to let you "pilot" his car on an open stretch. You'll like it, and will be surprised how easily the Ford is handled and driven.

If you have never felt the thrill of driving your own car, there is something good in store for you. It is vastly different from just riding—being a passenger. And especially so if you drive a Ford.

Young boys, girls, women and even grandfathers—thousands of them—are driving Ford cars and enjoying it. A Ford stops and starts in traffic with exceptional ease and smoothness, while on country roads and hills its strength and power show to advantage.

Buy a Ford and you will want to be behind "the wheel" constantly.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson VII. November 18, 1917

Nehemiah's Prayer Answered.—Nehemiah 2. 1-11.

Commentary.—I. Nehemiah's sadness (vs. 1-3). 1. Nisan—This was the first month of the Jewish sacred year and was also called Abib. It corresponds nearly to our April. It was four months after the prayer of Nehemiah which was included in our previous lesson. Twentieth year of Artaxerxes—It is evident that in reckoning the years of the king's reign the Jewish calendar was not used, for Nehemiah's prayer was offered in one year and the events of this lesson in the next, according to Jewish reckoning, and both events took place in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes. The king probably reckoned his years from the date of his ascending the throne. Wine was before him—It is a matter of history that the Persians were much given to wine. Gave it unto the king—Nehemiah "was the king's cup-bearer" (Neh. 1. 11). It was his task to care for the king's wine, to cleanse the drinking vessel in his presence, to pour out a portion of the wine into his own hand and taste it, to be sure it was not poisoned, and to hand the cup of wine to the king. The position was a responsible one, and the cupbearer often became the king's trusted adviser. Had not been sad in his presence—The custom of the times demanded that the cupbearer never appear gloomy or sad in the king's presence, for if he did, the king might suspect he was plotting against him. 2. This is sorrow of heart—Artaxerxes quickly observed that his cupbearer's countenance was sad and correctly concluded that his heart was burdened with some great grief. Very sore afraid—It was an anxious moment in Nehemiah's life. The time and opportunity had come for him to tell the king what was the burden of his heart; and he could not discern what attitude he would take toward his servant's plan to build up the walls of Jerusalem and help his people. He might have feared that the king was too greatly prejudiced against the Jews to listen to his request in their behalf. He might have feared, too, that the king would think that he was plotting against him. 3. Let the king live for ever—This was a common form used in the salutation of royalty. It expressed high respect for the king and was a fitting introduction to his reply to his question. Why, etc.—Nehemiah's question is full of pathos and meaning. There was great reason for his sadness, for the sacred city was largely in ruins. His noble heart, moved upon as it was by the Lord, could not endure to have Jerusalem lie waste.

II. Nehemiah's request (vs. 4, 5). 4. For what dost thou make request—This question brought courage and hope to Nehemiah. The king gave evidence of no pleasure with him, but showed an interest in what interested him, and encouraged him to ask what he wished. So I prayed to the God of heaven—Because he had been praying before this, did not appeal to him as any reason why he should not pray now. It was a critical moment and he realized the need of direct help from God, hence he had instant recourse to prayer. 5. If it please the king—If the plan I have in mind meets the approval of the king. If I have found favor in thy sight—Nehemiah had been praying for success in approaching the king, and he was now encouraged to believe he was favorable to him. Send me—His request involved more than a mere permission to go to Jerusalem; he wished to be sent thither as the king's messenger. That I may build it—He wished to go with full authority, and with means, to repair the walls of the city.

III. The request granted (vs. 6-8). 6. The queen also sitting by him—It was not a public banquet, for at such a function the queen would not have been present. The mention of the presence of the queen may indicate that she was favorable to Nehemiah's request. For how long shall thy journey be—The details of the conversation are not required, but simply the decisions reached. It is not stated how long Nehemiah was gone from Shushan. Some suppose he returned in about a year, having completed the walls, and later acted as governor of Jerusalem for twelve years. Others think that at this time he remained that long, having obtained authority from Artaxerxes to that end. 7. Let letters be given me—Nehemiah took the precaution to make his journey as safe as possible. To the governors beyond the river—The Euphrates River is meant. The governors of the provinces west of the river were generally not well disposed towards the Jews. That they may convey me over—"That they may let me pass through."—R. V. Till I come into Judah—The request included the governors of all the provinces which lay between the Euphrates and Judah. 8. A letter unto Asaph. A still further request was made of the king. The material for the walls of Jerusalem was on the ground, but timber would be needed for the palace, or castle, connected with the temple area and for other purposes. The keeper of the king's forest—Forests were then highly prized. An officer was appointed by the king to care for them. The forest here mentioned is supposed to have been six or seven miles south of Jerusalem, yet its location is not definitely known. The house that I shall enter—The house in which Nehemiah, as governor, was to live.

IV. Arrival at Jerusalem (vs. 9-11). I gave them the king's letters—Nehemiah made use of the letters which the king gave him. It is not stated what route he took to reach Jerusalem or through what provinces he passed. He made use of the means within his power to make his undertaking a success. The king had sent captains ... and horsemen—Ezra was ashamed (Ezra. 8:22) and trusted God for his safety; Nehemiah was no less a man of prayer and faith than was he, but he accepted the protection afforded by the king's army. These soldiers would be of assistance in giving to Nehemiah authority among the people of Jerusalem upon his arrival there. 10. Sanballat the Horonite—He was a Persian official who had jurisdiction over Samaria. His native place was probably Horonaim in Moab, which was east of the Jordan. He was a bitter enemy to the Jews. Tobiah—He came from the east of Jordan and held an official position under the Persian government. He also was bitter toward the Jews. grieved them exceedingly—The one was a Moabite and the other an Ammonite, and both races were hostile toward the Jews. They could not bear to have them prosper. Their hatred and jealousy led them to do all in their power to defeat any plan that looked toward the upbuilding of Judah. 11. was there three days—He rested three days after his journey as did Ezra and his company after their arrival from Babylon (Ezra 8:32).

Questions—What position did Nehemiah hold in Persia? How long after his prayer, recorded in Neh. 1, did he appear sad before Artaxerxes? What did the king ask him about his sadness? Why was Nehemiah afraid? What encouraging question did the king ask him? What requests did Nehemiah make? Who was the keeper of the king's forest and what was his duty? What protection did Artaxerxes give Nehemiah? What enemies had the Jews?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Qualified leadership.

I. Combined faith and works.

II. Inspired generous support.

I. Combined faith and works. This lesson describes the circumstances in which Nehemiah obtained his commission from Artaxerxes to rebuild the walls around Jerusalem. Personal feeling, patriotic enthusiasm and religious faith united and produced a heroism which prepared him for so great a work. It was a time of great suspense. The future of Jerusalem depended upon the building of the wall. That depended upon Nehemiah's personal interposition and the pleasure of Artaxerxes. Nehemiah showed great skill in the introduction of his cause. God gave him wisdom in his trying hour. The divine interposition was manifested in the control of the monarch's thoughts and disposition. Nehemiah not only prayed to God for success before making his request, but he strengthened and emboldened himself by prayer at the time he stood in the presence of Artaxerxes. Between the king's question and Nehemiah's answer there was earnest, silent prayer, an uplifting of the soul to God. His silent prayer was an exercise of the mind and heart unknown to the king. Audible prayer at that time would have been unsuitable. Nehemiah's desire was directed to God in faith. He depended upon inspiration to say exactly the right thing and say it so as to obtain his desire. His modest self-command, prudence, boldness, admirableness. There was a special bestowal of grace granted to Nehemiah. The secret of all his strength was his entire dependence upon God.

II. Inspired generous support. Nehemiah did not count his duty done when he had in all humility confessed the sin of his nation and entreated the interference of God. He did not substitute prayer for endeavor, though he would not make an endeavor until he had prepared himself by prayer. Fortified by humiliation and supplication, he sought to take advantage of his position with the king and to render that position useful to his countrymen. He showed prudence in addressing to the mind of the king a motive for his journey which the monarch could understand and appreciate. He offered no description of Jerusalem only that it was the sepulchre of his fathers. That was an argument to which even a heathen would defer. Deeply prayerful and dependent upon God as Nehemiah was, he was not unmindful of the duty of using all legitimate means to secure the important object which he had in view. Nehemiah supplemented his prayers by using his best endeavors to secure such help as man could render. He foresaw the work and its dangers. He knew what to ask for, materials and men. Impelled by the fervor of pious patriotism, he carried out his projects with wise foresight, patient energy and prudent self-control. His success required faith, sagacity and courage. The circumstances which had paved the way for the presentation of his petition, the readiness of the king's consent to his requests, the largeness of the facilities granted him, all indicated that God had ordered events and influenced the king's heart. Nehemiah's cottage opened up the king's resources to him. The answer to his prayer was overflowing and abundant. He had the largehearted sanction of a master for all his undertakings. He was provided with a cavalry escort with letters for safe conduct, and materials for his work. Under God Nehemiah made the most of his opportunity. His strong, practical sagacity was manifest throughout the whole record of his work for Jerusalem. After Nehemiah had been successful in his petition he attributed his success to the good hand of God upon him. He declared that "it came to pass" as he had prayed. Nehemiah's great obstacle was to be found in the virulent enmity of Sanballat and Tobiah at Jerusalem. These unrighteous and short-sighted men concluded that the prosperity of Jerusalem virtually meant the depression of Samaria, that indirectly Nehemiah had come to lower the dignity if not to lessen the prosperity of their state and they counted him an enemy and dealt with him as such.

Excusable.

In a confidential little talk to a group of medical students an eminent physician took up the extremely important matter of correct diagnosis of the maximum fee.

"If I were a specialist," he said, "something of a specialist, a so-called specialist, I'd, in time, I charge $25 for a call at the residence, $10 for an office consultation and $5 for a telephone consultation."

There was an appreciative and envious silence, and then a voice from the back of the amphitheatre, slightly blackened, spoke.

"Doc," it said, "how much do you charge a fellow for passing you on the street?"—New York Evening Post.

Even the debt a man owes to himself is sometimes more than he can pay.

Making Poultry Pay

If you have not already done so get the pullets into winter quarters at once. The March hatched pullets should be beginning to "shell out" fairly well by this time. If you wait until they lay before putting them into winter quarters they are liable to be checked by the shift and a setback now may upset them for a considerable time.

When you move the pullets from the range and put them into their quarters be sure that you do not forget to supply them liberally with both green food and animal food. Neither should you forget the grit and oyster shells, they are very essential to the welfare of your flock.

Be sure you give the pullets a thorough dusting with a good lice powder or an application of blue ointment before putting them into their new quarters to ensure their being free from vermin. For this purpose nothing is better than blue ointment, as this is convenient to use and is thorough in its effect.

Any kind of fine dust will be effective, even road dust or sifted coal ashes, but flowers of sulphur or pyrethrum are favorite remedies.

This is the time of year that the pullets will appreciate a patch of tender rape. There is no green feed that they eat with more avidity.

BUCKWHEAT SCREENINGS.

Every mail brings in letters wailing about the scarcity and high prices of poultry feeds, and well may producers wail. The prices asked for very inferior grain is enough to make our grandfathers turn in their graves.

Present quotations are: Oats, 83 cents per bushel, cracked corn $4.25 per hundred—and then the city man wonders why eggs are so high in price. Unless eggs reach a record price this winter there are going to be a lot of poultrymen who will lose money. Beef scrap at $6.00 per hundred—just think of it! It behooves every poultry producer to look about him, and investigate every available source of food supply.

The Poultry Division of the Experimental Farm foresaw this food shortage and last July brought down a car load of buckwheat screenings from Fort William to test its value as a poultry food. Ever since, this feed has been used almost exclusively and the results have been very satisfactory.

It might be well to state here of what these screenings consist. Dr. F. T. Shutt, Dominion Chemist, reports as follows:

"Buckwheat screenings, unground—An examination of this sample gave the following results as to composition by weight:

Small, broken and shrivelled wheat	49.65
Flax seed	[illegible]
Wild buckwheat (unhulled)	36.06
Wild buckwheat (hulled)	4.54
Flax seed	.89
Oats	2.56
Wild mustard seed	.07
Other weed seeds	.41
Chaff, oat hulls, fragment of straw, etc.	5.72
	100.00

This product, it will be seen, consists approximately of 50 per cent. wheat, 40 per cent. wild buckwheat (5 per cent. of which is hulled), 2.5 per cent. light oats, 1 per cent. flax seed and 6.5 per cent. weed seeds, chaff, etc., which may be classed as refuse.

The average composition of wheat and wild buckwheat may be given as follows:

	Wheat	Wild Buckwheat
Water	10.5	7.48
Protein	12.1	10.18
Fat	2.1	2.59
Carbohydrates	71.5	70.09
Fibre	2.2	7.29
Ash	1.9	2.48
	100.00	100.00

Comparing these two grains, the wild buckwheat seed contains approximately four-fifths the protein of wheat, and is slightly richer in fat and has a much higher fibre content. In carbohydrates, the two are practically equal.

From analyses and study of wild buckwheat made in these laboratories in 1906, we concluded that this grain, while not highly nitrogenous or oily seed, is of fair feeding value and may be considered of special value for feeding poultry by reason of its comparatively low fibre content. Theoretically, wild buckwheat seed may be said to possess about 75 per cent. the value of wheat for feeding purposes.

Ground Buckwheat Screenings—The analysis of this sample has furnished the following data:

Water	14.07
Protein	11.84
Fat	2.07
Carbohydrates	64.38
Fibre	5.28
Ash	2.15
	100.00

These results agree very fairly well with those which would be obtained from a mixture similar to the whole buckwheat screenings and we may therefore presume that this ground sample had before grinding essentially the same general composition as the sample of unground screenings.

It has a feeding value intermediate between wheat and wild buckwheat. From its composition it should prove an acceptable and valuable poultry feed, with only a small percentage of waste. It is sufficiently high in protein for general grain feeding, with a fat content not exceeding that of wheat—which may be considered an advantage for laying stock, that ration of which is usually enriched by crushed green bone or meat meal. The comparatively low percentage of fibre is a feature that enhances its value for poultry feeding, as this class of stock make use of high fibre feeds."

Now for the actual feeding results. From the very first the fowl took kindly to the ground screenings and ate it with relish. They did not take to the whole screenings so readily and, on other food being cut off, it was several days before they finally accepted it. However, they now eat it readily and the stock are doing exceptionally well. It is not as good as a litter feed as they pick out all the wheat and leave a large part of the buckwheat; when fed in hoppers where they can scatter the grain they will throw it out and pick out the wheat, but where they have to eat the buckwheat before they can get the wheat they clean everything up just as they go and seem to make as good growth as they ever did on ordinary rations. The ground screenings are being fed to the layers three parts screenings to one part beef meal and production has never been better at this season than it has been this year.

Poultrymen may feel perfectly safe in buying this feed; it is the cheapest feed available and it gives satisfactory results.—Canadian Countryman.

The Apotheosis of a Rolling Stone

Again the suspicion of a smile passed across the Brigadier's face, as he said, "I imagine you're a Canadian."

The Corporal hesitated a moment. "Well, General," he answered, "you're not far wrong. I am a citizen of Niagara and it was a close thing anyway."

"What made you join the British army," asked the Brigadier. "I'm glad you did, but why was it?"

"Well, General," he answered, "don't you be patting yourself on the back and thinking it was all for love of the lion [illegible]. Not that I have any grouch against that particular quadruped, but it seemed to me that he was getting a bit long in the tooth, losing some of his mane and a sight readier with his growl than his jaws. I'm not sure that I hold to those opinions now, but when the curtain rose on the big stunt that was how I figured it out. However, I don't like Squareheads—Boches we call 'em, I've seen some. I was touched by one for 20 dollars once. When they got going they got my goat; murdering women and kids and all the other by-products of frightfulness didn't look good to me, and I estimated it would be better for civilization on the whole if the allies put the tin lid on them. Then at the moment the community was not making any violent demand on my services. I have been a bartender, a chucker-out at a downtown vaudeville, a chicken raiser, and real estate distributor and never hankered after a quiet life. When the Boches started my blue blood boiling, I was looking round for a new profession and I reckoned a hero in khaki would do for mine. It seemed to me it would be a new sensation to be a [illegible] and having once for a small wager done the trip from Niagara to Buffalo down the tiled track in one hour, five minutes dead, I reckoned my talents would show to advantage in that department. So here we are. I've no complaints. The boys have been real good to me; I have got to respect Englishmen, which feat I never expected to accomplish. They're good to animals, aliens, kids, women and other hostages to fortune, and I have never found Squareheads giving way to similar weakness."

He paused. The Brigadier got up and shook him warmly by the hand. "What you have said has interested me very much. I'm proud to have you under my command, and shall certainly recommend you for the D.C.M., and if at any time you think of trying for a commission, come to me."

"Thank you very kindly, General," replied the Corporal, "as O. Henry, W. Shakespeare or some other purveyor of high-class fiction once remarked, when I set out to seek the bubble reputation at the cannon's larynx, the only list I hoped to honor was the list of survivors; but I'll be proud to wear the ribbon, but as for the commission, I reckon I'd rather stay with the boys."

So saying he saluted and retired, still with a pleasant smile on his lips, his jaws still moving with a circular motion, and a gentle odor of peppermint still emanating from his person.

"Well," said the Brigadier, "it seems to have been a very successful little show; they bagged both bridges, killed a good few Bulgars and got away with few casualties. I'm sorry [illegible] was killed though, he was a good officer."

"Yes," said the Brigade Major, "a very well carried out little [illegible], but I was talking to that other cyclist officer who was there, Hampden; he says it was a very anxious time when [illegible] was hit; there was some confusion, [illegible] and on the flank, the R. E. [illegible] weren't away and the cycles were 50 yards back on the road. The men had done a [illegible] with a [illegible] in the [illegible] and had no [illegible] thought they were cut off. But one of his corporals with great presence of mind took 30 men out on the flank and held them back while the rest retired to the bikes. It is a good shooting company and they quickly laid out a Boche officer and several men, and the rest lay down and refused to come on. Hampden says if it hadn't been for the corporal things would have looked very nasty. But the hour always brings out the man, and all's well that ends well."

"Is that so?" said the Brigadier, "I should like to see that Corporal, he ought to be recommended for the D. C. M."

"I expect I could get him," answered the Major. "The whole company is [illegible] on the plateau; shall I fetch him for you, sir?"

"Yes, do," replied the General.

The Major saluted and went out.

Half an hour later he returned. "I've got the man outside, sir, shall I bring him in, his name is [illegible]."

"Yes," said the General. "I'll see him at once."

The Major went to the door and made discreet signs. A moment later he ushered in an individual whose most noticeable features were a pair of very humorous eyes and a very firm and implacable chin. A close observer might have noticed that his jaws had a tendency to revolve and that a faint aroma of peppermint emanated from his person. When he was well inside the room he seemed to recollect something and removed his helmet.

A smile flickered across the Brigadier's face. "Not this time, Corporal" he said. "You can keep it on."

"Sorry, General," said the latter, replacing it, "force of habit, I guess. It took me six months to learn to take it off and most likely it will take me another six to know when to keep it on."

"Well, Corporal," said the General genially, "I have received a very good account of your behavior last Thursday. Your officer states that you showed great courage and determination, and that your conduct was very largely responsible for the success of the expedition."

"Well, General," replied the other, "I'm real glad to hear that, but I only did my duty, as the Crown Prince said after looting the Town Hall."

"Thirteen is bad luck. I proposed thirteen times to as many girls." "And got turned down? That was bad luck." "No, that wasn't the bad luck. The thirteenth took me."—Baltimore American.

HOW JAPS COOK RICE.

The quantity of water varies according to the qualities of rice, but five parts of water to four of rice, or six parts to five, by volume, will be common proportion.

Simply boil the water and then pour the rice, previously washed, into this boiling water, at the same time increasing the flame. The pan cover must fit the pan else as tightly as possible and also must be a heavy one, enough to withstand the high steam pressure in the pan, and if it is not heavy enough, put some weights on it. Keep the fire strong. In three or four minutes the steam pushes out of the pan; but let the fire be strong for three or four minutes more, and then, as quickly as possible, withdraw the blazing fire (in case of wood fuel) or make the fire very mild (in case of gas) and let the pan stand on little under fire or very mild flame for 20 or 30 minutes. Then remove the pan from the furnace and let it stand fourteen minutes more. This is all the process.

Rice thus cooked is very delicious to taste and may be eaten by itself or better any milk or sugar.

SUNDAY AT HOME

A SONG OF LIFE.

Rolls the old world ever right, dear—
Sun by day and stars by night, dear;
Here is a rhyme and here is a reason
Still the red rose comes in season.

In the fields the toilers, sowing,
Hear the harvest bugles blowing;
Life, my dear, is joy and weeping—
Sowing time and time for reaping.

Take thy task—if joy or sorrow;
Still the dark will bring the morrow
In the storm the birds are singing,
And the bells of heaven are ringing.

HAVE FAITH IN GOD.

Have faith in God. Whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass, he shall have whatsoever he saith. Therefore I say unto you, what things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them. Without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

He that had received the promises offered up his only begotten son, of whom it was said, that in Isaac shall thy seed be called, accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead. Being fully persuaded that what he had promised he was able also to perform.

Is anything too hard for the Lord?—With God all things are possible. Lord, increase our faith.

SAKE.

(By the late Rev. H. T. Miller.)

This is an Anglo-Saxon word, very old. It means a cause, a suit at law, a purpose, claiming regard and reasonable respect. We read Noah walked with God. Come thou and all thy house into the ark, for thee have I seen righteous before me in this generation. I will establish my covenant with thee. Was it for Noah's sake that his family was saved in the ark?

The Egyptians were blessed for the sake of Joseph. Isaac was blessed for the sake of Abraham. Lot was saved for Abraham's sake, and Solomon was blessed for the sake of his father David, while Cyrus was called and blessed long before he came for Jacob's sake. How wonderfully is man related to man, and how high the standard of values in some men more than in others.

Paul says we are fools for Christ's sake, ourselves are servants for Jesus' sake. God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you.

Look at that storm-tossed ship with three hundred frightened passengers on board. Death stares them in the face, but there is one man there and the angel of the Lord finds him in the dark, saying "Fear not, Paul, lo, God hath granted thee all them that sail with thee."

Learn here, that no man stands alone, no man liveth unto himself. God has a right to every man. "All souls are mine." God sets a peculiar value on His own. He hides, conceals, reserves, calculates for them, is always ahead. When you come to a crisis you confess, God has been here before me!

He delivers a ship, a city, a soul, after His own wondrous fashion. This "sake" is an atmosphere, an argument, a defence, a purpose, a final cause. It gives to life its value, beauty, dignity and relation. "For their sakes I sanctify myself."

If you will carefully look at the prayers of Paul you will see how rich they are. How much superior and fuller the elements of true prayer are than what is called the Lord's Prayer. In that prayer there is no "sake," no intercessor, no Name. Here Christ's name is a [illegible] to a person by a person. In the Lord's Prayer there is only mention of two. That prayer was for Jews and Jews only; it was the best and fullest the Master could give at the time. The blood had not been shed, the atonement was not complete, the Holy Ghost had not been given, for Jesus had not been glorified.

When you say at the end of every prayer, "This we beg for Christ's sake," you say what the disciples could not say. But now He has gone into Heaven and is on the right hand of God to plead and prevail for us. You can say with boldness that He has a history, a cause, a people, a purpose, a kingdom and that He is King.

"Word of the ever-living God,
Will of His glorious Son,
Without Thee how could earth be trod
Or heaven itself be won?"

The Use of Candy.

Pure candy is good for children. Pure sugar is good for grown people. Of course there are exceptions to every rule. If the doctor prescribes a diet and orders a patient to refrain from sweets the patient is bound to obey his adviser. What is the use of calling a physician and paying him for suggestions if the latter are treated with indifference? People in ordinary health need not be afraid to gratify an appetite which craves sweets. Those who march hold out better if they have been telling us lately that soldiers on the march hold out better if they have rations of sugar than if their food omits this useful commodity. A fondness for sugar is often a defense against the temptation to use alcoholic stimulants. The inebriate does not eat very much about pure sweets.

Father of the American Navy.

A native born Irishman that the members of his race are particularly proud of is Commodore John Barry, the "Father of the American Navy." He was born in Wexford, Ireland, in 1745. His father put him on a merchant ship before he was twelve years old, and at fourteen he was employed on a ship sailing from Philadelphia. He was a master of ships before he was twenty-one years old. When the Revolution began Barry was employed by Congress to fit for sea the first fleet which sailed from Philadelphia. Barry commanded the Lexington, which captured the first British war vessel taken by a regular cruiser. Blockaded by a superior British fleet in the Delaware, he landed with his sailors and marines and joined Washington's army.—Detroit Free Press.

Through Many Trials

"To invite me to her home on the footing of an intimate friend, to offer to introduce me among her circle; to try and reconcile me to Richard, and to pave the way for a reconciliation with my uncle. I detected her meaning through her words," he thinks, in a rapture of gratitude. "to try and do all she can to restore me to my lost position and my forfeited place. Heaven bless her! I shall owe her the happiness of my life if she can but succeed," he thinks, and then the rapture and the gratitude fade a little.

"If she had only known—if I could dare to confide in her, I might have seen Imogene and spoken to her! If she had only asked me to dinner this evening, or to-morrow evening, I should have met my darling—met her as her equal. Oh, if she had only thought how I longed for a word of permission!" he sighs, bitterly. "Going home on Saturday!" he repeats, thoughtfully. "If I could find out what train she travelled by—find out the hours of the fast, early or afternoon trains, I might see one sight of her face again!"

CHAPTER XXIII.

It is about one o'clock when Lady Petherick returns from her hour's ride in the park, and there is no lack of softness and brilliance and bloom in the beautiful face now, as she enters the conservatory where Imogene is reading, nestled down in a little wicker-chair by the gold-fish fountain.

She is far, far away, in a sweet dream world of her own, when an interruption comes. Far away with "fool-less fancies," ethereal elements which fill the dream world with life and glow and radiance, which have never yet taken to themselves the solid form of words or uttered expression.

Through the deep-gray eyes, now full of purple radiance, her soul is shining, and her parted lips are smiling, as those sweet fancies come nearer and nestle in her warm bosom, when there comes a sharp "tap-tap" of high heels on the broad marble steps which lead down from the dining-room, and a soft "swish" of draperies, as her lovely ladyship, Evelyn Petherick, comes down daintily, a picture fairer than ever painter's brush created.

Though she looks up, startled and disturbed, for her lovely sister's presence does not ever seem to bring her any additional peace or pleasure, Imogene yet perceives exceeding grace and beauty as if she were a stranger, and notices it with keen and loving admiration to-day, as she has never looked upon it before—as she never looks on it again.

The lofty, handsome doors of carved oak and stained glass which communicate with the dining-room are half closed behind her, leaving but a picture-like glimpse of the interior, with its rich, dark carpets and draperies, the table set for luncheon, where glass and silver glitter [illegible] on the snow-white cloth, with rich spots of color in the vase of flowers and the dish of fruit, among the sparkle and sheen of glass and damask, and over all the ruddy glow of a bright fire.

And, in the foreground, Lady Petherick's graceful, svelte form trips daintily down the wide, shallow marble steps, with her dead blue gown l'eau de nil.

Her face is full of glow and eagerness, but as she comes nearer Imogene, its expression changes into one of anxiety and half-suppressed distress, which arouses Imogene instantly.

She sees, too, that her sister holds a letter crushed in her hand—a letter she makes a pretence of trying to conceal.

"Oh, Minnie, I am glad I have found you!" she says, hurriedly, with a sigh of relief. "I have been looking everywhere for you. I've just had a letter from Aunt Athea, dear——" she pauses, casting an uncertain glance at her sister, and then at the letter crushed in her hand.

"Well," Imogene asks, breathlessly, starting to her feet, "what is the matter? What is the matter, Evelyn?"

"Now! Nothing to alarm or distress yourself. You are such an excitable child! Only Aunt Althea says that Lionel is very bad, poor fellow! Getting almost beyond all control, she says, and papa is in such distress—oh, dear!" She looks down at the crumpled letter and reads a few words.

"Here is what aunt says," she goes on. "'The fits of irritability and violence to which he is subject come on so frequently now, and are really so uncontrollable, that, considering the danger to himself and to others, or permitting him to remain from under proper restraint——' What is it, Imogene? Where are you going?"—this in tones of utter dismay and surprise.

"Home!" Imogene cries, wildly, her face white as death, and then flushing crimson in a passion of excitement. "Home, at once, Evelyn! Let me go! Let me go! Aunt Althea will have him put in a madhouse if I don't! If I don't get home, and make papa listen to me, and tell him, I shall die! I shall go mad, too, if he puts my brother into a madhouse! Oh, poor Lionel! Poor dear! To break his heart, and make him die a raving maniac! Oh, Evelyn, I must go! Don't try to stop me!" she sobs, distractedly, with hysteric, dry-eyed sobs, for the sentences in Lady Althea's carefully-rounded expressions, with their delicate summing up of an inevitable conclusion, set her heart on fire with anger and desperate fear.

"Evelyn! They haven't done anything with him yet?" she asks, breathlessly. "You are sure?"

"Yes, certainly. Good gracious, Imogene! don't go on in that fashion," remonstrates Evelyn. "Aunt Althea only says just what I read to you. She certainly says she cannot see how it is to be avoided ultimately."

"And you—you would agree with her!" demands Imogene, a scarlet spot burning in her pale cheek. "You said long ago before Mr. Dumaresq came, that it was the only fit place for Lionel—a lunatic asylum! You and aunt were both angry because papa engaged Mr. Dumaresq."

With the second mention of his name, a warm, slight flush sweeps over her face; but Evelyn sees that glow and softens, and Imogene, glancing at her, sees that she does.

"She has heard papa's story, she has heard that vile Captain Dumaresq's tales," thinks Imogene; and the flush and embarrassment in her face deepens, and she is quite sure that she has discovered the reason of the flash of contemptuous wrath that darts from Evelyn's eyes like lightning from a cloud, and the hostile flush that burns on her sisters' soft cheek.

"Nonsense!" Evelyn says, with intense sharpness, "I was nothing of the kind! Mr. Dumaresq was very kind and good to Lionel. Only, I thought it rather an absurd thing to have any one employed to take charge of the poor boy in the very house in which one was living. A horrid thing! And I thought that Mr. Dumaresq was absurdly unsuited to a menial position like that!" she adds, sharply and hurriedly, and the color rises higher in her face.

"What?" Imogene asks, rather confounded. "Mr. Dumaresq was a gentleman."

"Precisely," Evelyn says, shortly. "Absurdly unsuited! I told him so."

"Told him so? Why, have you seen him?" Imogene asks, and there is the harshness of suppressed excitement and displeasure in her voice. "You never told me, Evelyn! You must have known I should like to have seen him; I knew him better than you did!"

She scarcely knows why Evelyn's calm assurance and rebuking, cold little smile hurt her worse than blows.

"Excuse me, my dear," Evelyn says, with her woman-of-the-world smile, "I know him far better than you do. You forget that his cousin, Captain Dumaresq, is, or was, a most intimate friend of mine; consequently I know Dumaresq very well indeed—and know all about him still better."

"Oh, indeed, do you?" Imogene says, slowly, and something in that cold, hard smile makes her shrink. "You believe everything that Captain Dumaresq said about him, then?"

"I believe nothing," she is about to say, when she substitutes—"I believe Captain Dumaresq's stories, as far as I know them, to be true. Poor Dick has been dreadfully wild, I am afraid. A bold, brave, dashing fellow, but"—the intolerable, cold, meaning, bitter smile again—"he was hardly the man to let run loose in our virtuous sheepfold at Portdreath. There were little lambs running loose as well."

The curl of her lips, the glitter of her cynical smile, as she looks down at her sister from the steps above her, are enough.

Imogene's face colors hotly to her fair, blue-veined temples; her eyes flash, her lips tremble.

"You are worse than papa! you insult me worse than papa did!" she exclaims, half-suffocating. "It is a shame of you, Evelyn! Mr. Dumaresq was a gentleman, and I am a gentlewoman, and you insult me shamefully by suggesting——"

"My dearest child!" Evelyn interrupts, with a sharp, mocking laugh, "I am suggesting nothing. It is you, meek, mild, little prudish maidens, who suggest everything—to their lovers as well as themselves! I know nothing about papa's 'insults,' as you term some strict fatherly remonstrance on your conduct quite undeserved, I am sure, Minnie! There, don't go into such flames and furies, child! No one suspects you of anything unbefitting the behavior of a young gentlewoman," Evelyn says, with a sweet, matronly air. "No one would dare! Imogene Trefusis is above suspicion. And no one, except poor, dear, old fussy papa, whose ideas are narrow, and whose temper is extremely short, would suspect Dick Dumaresq of behaving in an ungentlemanly manner. He is as well-bred as he is well-born, though he be a mauvais sujet, and a scapegrace, and a prodigal, and not the person, I repeat emphatically, to run loose in dreary old Portdreath with very little to occupy his time, and my pretty sister within arms' length of him!"

Imogene's sweet face burns in a hotter blush than ever, as she vividly recollects the parting in the hazel walk. But there are hidden smiles quivering about her lips, and a hidden radiance glowing in the depths of her eyes under the drooping lashes, and Evelyn perceives in an instant, with a thrill of evil jealousy, that there is a sweet maidenly consciousness and confusion in her face, and her burning cheeks and her half-suppressed smile, but no pride, no anger, no denial.

"It has gone farther than I thought," she says, inwardly. "I did not believe Aunt Althea or that other old woman, Miss Proudes, Minnie! How forward these shoe maidens, these drooping, bashful buds of girls are! Dumaresq has made her more than half in love with him!"

"I respect him greatly that he took no undue advantage of his position," the virtuous young wife proceeds, with calm judiciousness. "All that angered papa was some garbled account he extracted from Captain Dumaresq's foolish talk; he is a foolish, good-for-nothing fellow, too," she laughs, archly, "and was half mad about me at the time, and jealous of his cousin, and quarreling with him furiously as silly men will quarrel. We had all met at a theatre a few nights before, and he didn't want me to speak to Dick Dumaresq at all, so out of revenge or something he goes down to Cornwall to urge papa to make me marry him. Did any one ever hear of such a fool?—and at the same time warned him against poor Dick, who had, harmlessly enough, I daresay, jested about you—said you were a pretty little girl, and he admired you, or was 'spooney' on you, I think was his elegant expression, just as men will do when they sit smoking and drinking brandies and sodas together," Evelyn says with a little giggle, "but nothing more reprehensible than that, I am certain. Men always discuss women and girls in very free language when they are in these confidential [illegible] seances!" she says, laughing gayly, as she sees nothing less than shame, and wrath, and horror evident in Imogene's face, which has quite aged in a few moments, with the rigid pallor and sharpness which has come upon it.

She makes no reply, but walks blindly on into the dining-room, across the hall, and upstairs.

Evelyn runs up lightly after her.

"Where on earth are you going? What is the matter, Imogene? Have I offended you?" she asks, reproachfully. What have I said to annoy you? You mustn't think anything of Dumaresq's having spoken of you. Besides, what does it matter to you?" she demands, harshly, with a thin, cold look.

"It matters a great deal," Imogene answers, turning on her with a haughty self-possession equal to her own, which somewhat startles Evelyn. "I always considered Mr. Dumaresq to be a gentleman; he always behaved to me as such; but, if I am to believe you," she says, fixing her stern, gray eyes on her sister, "I shall never be able to consider him as a gentleman again. Now, please, will you let me go home? I cannot rest here any longer; I must go home and be near Lionel."

"Go home! When? This afternoon?" Evelyn asks, with simulated anger and amazement. "What on earth need you rush off like that for? Why can you not wait until next week? We shall have a small dinner-party on Tuesday."

"I shall not wait for your dinner-party, Evelyn!" Imogene interrupts, passionately. "Let me go home at once; this hour, if possible."

"Very well," Evelyn says, in a hurt, disappointed tone. "Certainly you shall go by the next train, Imogene; I will try and make some excuse for you to Sir William, and my own woman, Shaw, shall pack your dress-basket. I am sorry that neither my home nor myself weigh one atom to influence your decision."

"You have been most kind and generous to me, Evie!" Imogene protests, her eyes flooding with tears. "You have given me a quantity of things prettier and better than I ever had in my life, and I am grateful to you and Sir William. Please make an apology to him, Evie, and—and, if you like," she falters, "I will stay until to-morrow."

"By no means!" Evelyn says, quickly. "You have expressed a wish to go, therefore you'd better go, Imogene. It is better you should go home and satisfy yourself, dear, if you really are worrying about Lionel," she adds, in her sisterly manner once more, "and you can come up to me again soon, you know."

She goes away as she speaks to give Shaw her directions, and there flits just half a moment across Imogene's mind the idea that Evelyn, in spite of her displeased bearing, is secretly very willing that she should go.

It is an unreasonable idea, of course, and Imogene scouts it instantly, for she knows nothing of the strategy, the clever generalship, the scheming and lying, plotting and counter-plotting with which Lady Petherick's busy brain and hot, undisciplined heart are both filled.

She knows nothing of the cool assurance given to Richard Dumaresq that she was going home on Saturday—an assurance which my lady resolved to make good without delay. She knows nothing of the invention of that letter from Lady Althea, as one freshly arrived, when it is really a month old, and only one of Lady Althea's diatribes against the presence in her brother's house of his afflicted son.

It is a brilliant idea, carried out to perfection, which amuses Evelyn intensely, this news which is half distracting Imogene.

And lastly, Imogene knows nothing of the telegram flying before her ere she starts on the homeward journey, wired from Lady Petherick to Lady De Burgh.

"La petite returns to-day. Obliged to send her at once out of danger. Keep up pious fraud which induced her to return so suddenly."

But all she knows is that about a quarter of an hour before the time of starting she is at Paddington station, herself and her luggage in the custody of Shaw, who is in a fiendish temper—as it is an "afternoon out," indefinitely deferred by her having to "dance attendance," as she phrases it, on her mistress' young sister.

Imogene thinks, with sinking dread, of the end of her journey—what may wait her; thinks, with a sorrowful sense of relief, that she has got from London, and Sir William's "painted abode"; thinks, with a burning rush of pride and heartache, of Richard Dumaresq; thinks, most of all, how to get speedily rid of Shaw, who is pale with vexation at finding that there is a full quarter of an hour or twenty minutes to wait, so that Imogene urges her, with a parting present, to go as soon as she can get her seat in a carriage.

"My lady's orders were to wait and see you off, ma'am," Shaw retorts, grimly, heaving a bitter sigh and looking at the clock.

"Never mind," Imogene says, in bitter desperation. "I will not tell her; she need not know but that you waited, Shaw, and I shall be perfectly safe and comfortable; so what is the use of your standing here for ever so long? Please go now—I have not the least need of you."

"Well, if you really are quite sure, ma'am," Shaw says, softening immediately—"if you think there is nothing more I could do for you, I should like very much to go and see my sister for ten minutes. My lady's promised me this afternoon for a week or more."

"Certainly! Good-bye! Go off at once and see your sister," Imogene says, gladly watching Shaw's eminently "genteel" figure disappearing through the barrier gate.

And then she is quite alone, and sits by the open carriage door until a group of men approaching, talking and laughing, making her draw back; for they are all gazing at her.

"Because I am wearing this white, bride-like bonnet," she mutters, flushing vexedly. "Evelyn would make me put it on—she said it became me so well."

And one of the group, to her dismay, lingers behind, looking at her until he meets her glance. Then he falls further back, and his friends go on, casting furtive, curious smiles after him, draws nearer to the carriage, takes off his hat with nervous hesitation, and Imogene, ere she recollects herself, bows and smiles, for the second time to-day, to Richard Dumaresq.

Man's Staff of Life is the whole wheat grain—not the white, starchy centre of the wheat—make no mistake about that—but be sure you get the whole wheat grain in a digestible form. Shredded Wheat Biscuit contains all the tissue-building, energy-creating material in the whole wheat, steam-cooked, shredded and baked. A perfect food for the nourishment of the human body. STUDY AND EXERCISE

Overstudy and lack of exercise make thin, bloodless children. Study does not usually hurt a child at school unless the studies encroach on time that should be spent on out-of-doors exercise. But lack of exercise and over study is a combination that brings on St. Vitus' dance. If your boy or girl at school is thin and pale, listless and inattentive, has a fickle appetite, is unable to stand or sit still, you must remember that health is much more important than education, and more time should be given to exercise and recreation.

See to it at once that the child does not overstudy, gets plenty of out-of-door exercise, sleeps ten out of every twenty-four hours, and takes a safe, reliable tonic like Dr. Williams Pink Pills until the color returns to the cheeks and lips and the appetite becomes normal. For growing children who become pale and thin Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are not only safe but in most cases are the very best tonic that can be taken. These pills build up the blood, strengthen the nerves and assist nature in keeping pace with rapid growth.

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine, or by mail postpaid at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

FARM AND GARDEN

RESULTS WITH ROOT SEED GROWING IN CANADA.

(Experimental Farms Note.)

Among the problems that the great war has created for Canada, the problem of growing root seed, that is, seed of swede and fall turnips, mangels and field carrots, may seem rather insignificant to the average Canadian citizen. Yet that problem is to-day one of the most vital to the Canadian farmer, notably the dairy farmer, inasmuch as it is directly connected with the providing of that indispensable stock food that is generally referred to as "roots."

In 1915 Canada imported a total of 1,927,313 pounds of turnip seed and 1,056,060 pounds of mangel and beet seed. In 1916 the import of turnip seed dwindled to 150,855 pounds, and the import of mangel and beet seed to 636,797 pounds; and for 1917 the figures stand at 291,379 pounds for turnip seed and 891,677 pounds for mangel and beet seed. This means that Canada imported a total of these most important farm seeds, in the years of 1916 and 1917, which falls short of the import of 1915 alone of, roughly, 1,000,000 pounds. It should be added that practically every pound of field root seed used in this country is of European origin.

That Canada was running a great risk of having her supply of root seed from Europe shut off, partly or wholly, as a result of the war, was regretfully predicted in an Experimental Farms bulletin, entitled "Growing Field Root, Vegetable and Flower Seeds in Canada," issued early in 1915. In the said bulletin an appeal was made—as has also repeatedly been done later in many issues of "Seasonable Hints," distributed by the Dominion Experimental Farms System to Canadian farmers and others interested in the seed supply—has been kept up, urging that Canada could not afford to take the risk of relying on import from Europe either under prevailing war conditions or immediately after the conclusion of peace. It was emphatically stated that "Canada should make herself independent of foreign markets, and produce at home what now has to be bought from abroad. Canadian farmers should not only try to meet the emergency demand for field root seed in the immediate future, but also try to establish a permanent seed-growing industry which would make them independent of any other country." The bulletin went further and predicted "that many districts of Canada where root and seed growing is unknown at present will prove themselves not only able to produce seed of good quality, but also to be especially well adapted to seed raising."

To what extent this prediction was justified will be shown by the data following, showing what results in root seed raising were obtained in the year of 1915. In that year the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa raised from a field about 1½ acres a first-class mangel seed crop at the rate of about 1,450 pounds of seed to the acre. Mangel seed was produced at the Experimental Farm at Agassiz, B. C., at the rate of 2,400 pounds per acre, at the Experimental Farm at Lennoxville, Que., at the rate of 1,150 pounds per acre, and at the Experimental Station at Kentville, N. S., at the rate of 2,100 pounds per acre. The same year the Experimental Station at Lennoxville, Que., raised swede turnip seed at the rate of close to 1,250 pounds to the acre.

But what about the profit? Does it pay the grower to raise that kind of crop? As an answer, it may be stated that there was, according to records kept, a net profit of about $50 per acre from the mangel seed crop at the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, in 1915. And this in spite of the fact that the men handling the crop were quite unfamiliar with the same.

The above figures indicate, most decidedly, that there are, in Canada great opportunities for developing a new field in agricultural activity promising substantial rewards, from a profit standpoint, to those who take up root seed growing conscientiously and in a business-like manner.

May it also be added that the raising, in Canada, of the seed needed in the country will directly help to increase the average yield of the root crops of the Dominion? This will, however, be discussed in a special article.

HOME-GROWN VS. COMMERCIAL SEED OF FIELD ROOTS.

One of the reasons why root seed growing has not been practised to any extent in Canada before is the rather widely spread idea that Canadian climatic conditions are not so favorable to the production of high-class seed as are conditions in those European countries upon which Canada has relied in the past for her seed supply. In other words, the European countries have been supposed to be, by virtue of more suitable soil and climatic conditions, capable of raising seed producing larger root crops of higher quality than Canada ever could be expected to do. A similar conception is also very common in the United States. Such a conception has no foundation and is entirely wrong.

Experiments conducted the last few years by the Experimental Farms System all over the Dominion, most conclusively prove that Canadian-grown seed is in no respect inferior to imported seed. On the contrary, it produces better crops than does imported seed. In support of this statement the results obtained in 1916 with home-grown seed of varieties of mangels and swede turnips in comparison with imported seed of the same varieties may briefly be summarized.

Mammoth long red mangel seed, raised at the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, in 1915 produced a root crop in 1916 which averaged, when tested at nine of the Dominion Experimental Stations, over two and four-fifths tons more to the acre than imported seed of the same variety. Mammoth long red mangel seed grown at Charlottetown, P. E. I., was tested at Charlottetown and Ottawa and produced about half a ton more of roots to the acre than imported seed of the same variety, and this in spite of the fact that the Charlottetown seed was harvested under most unfavorable conditions. Seed of the same variety, raised at Kentville, N. S., gave a root crop at that station which exceeded the crop realized from the imported seed by close to three and a half tons to the acre.

Yellow Intermediate mangel seed, originated at Ottawa, was tested at seven Experimental Stations and produced, on the average, 3 tons 750 pounds more roots to the acre than imported seed; seed of the same variety raised at Charlottetown, P.E. I., tested at six Stations yielded an average of one ton and three quarters to the acre in excess of imported seed.

Danish Sludstrup Mangel seed, raised at Agassiz, B. C.; Kentville, N. S.; and Charlottetown, P.E.I., respectively was leading with on the average, about half a ton to the acre in comparative tests with imported seed of the same variety, conducted on a number of Stations.

Kangaroo Swede turnip seed, raised at Fredericton, N. B., and tested at five Experimental Stations in Eastern Canada gave an average yield of two tons and three quarters in excess of the imported seed grown in comparison with it.

It is rather obvious, from these figures, that there is no foundation whatsoever for the conception that European-grown seed of field roots is superior to Canadian grown. On the contrary, the figures furnish a strong argument in favor of Canadian-grown seed being used in preference to imported seed. It is true that in some instances the imported seed produced yields only slightly behind those of Canadian seed, but what is of real importance is this: in no single case did the Canadian-grown seed fall behind, in yielding capacity, the same variety of European seed. This is the more encouraging as in most cases the Canadian seed was raised from roots, a great percentage of which would, under no circumstances, have been accepted by European growers fit for seed production.

Under the circumstances there seems no reason why Canada should, in the future, rely on foreign countries for her root seed supply. There is an opening, now, for a new agricultural industry, and indeed, it is believed that the development and firm establishment of that industry will prove of great advantage to Canadian farming in general.

What Corns Are.

Corns are hard growth which occur on the toe or some other part of the feet. They are generally the result of wearing a shoe too small for the foot, says the Popular Science Monthly. They are thickenings of the outer layer of the skin in the centre of which is a nail-like peg which projects downward and hurts when pressed upon. Soft corns form between the toes and are only different from others in that they are soaked with perspiration all the time. The corn itself is composed of a lump of the outer part of the skin which is caused by the pressure of the shoe at that spot. However, the corn would not result unless the pressure were taken off at intervals, and this, of course, is done when you take the shoe off. It stands to reason that if the pressure were continuously applied to this spot the skin instead of overgrowing at that precise point would waste away. The overgrowth of the skin is due to the irritation produced by the pressure.
